"A Saudi Arabia with its finances put into some sort of order should be able to give less fortunate Arab countries the sort of assistance that is now being given by Kuwait. But here again, though Prince Feisal will introduce economy and accounting efficiency, he shows no disposition towards sharing Saudi Arabia's vast oil wealth. In fact, in his first interview after becoming Viceroy he said flatly that Saudi Arabia would have no funds to spare.

"Prince Feisal has taken a much stronger line on general Arab problems, such as Palestine, than did King Saud: he has even spoken recently of using the ultimate Arab weapon of denying oil to the Western countries that support Israel. But the one-armed dispute that still divides Arab from Arab, the conflict in Yemen, is due to Saudi support to the royalist rebels there. And the Prince has clearly indicated that he will continue to give this help till an overall agreement is reached between Saudi Arabia and the UAR, which is supporting the Yemeni Republic. His firm attitude indicates that he will try and drive a hard bargain with President Nasser if they meet later this month, as they are expected to.

"Indeed, one of the points at issue between King Saud and the Prince was that the King, who attended the Arab 'Summit' Conference in Cairo in January, allowed himself to be swept off his feet by the spirit of brotherliness generated at that meeting. The King's attitude gave the impression that Saudi Arabia was ready for a speedy compromise on Yemen; an impression that Prince Feisal quickly corrected immediately after the conference.

"After the change in regime the Saudi royal family, under the Prince's leadership, will, in fact, be fighting a delaying rearguard action against the forces of modernity with greater efficiency than before, but with no greater prospect of final victory. Hence the benefits that this change will produce will be indirect and long-term."

B. Resumption Of Diplomatic Relations—Talks With UAR: Field-Marshal Abdul Hakim Amer and Mr. Anwar El Sadat, UAR Vice-Presidents and members of the Presidential Council, arrived in Riyadh on March 1 for talks with Saudi Arabian authorities on the settlement of outstanding questions between the two countries.

Mr. Ahmed Tewfik El Medani, Algerian Minister of Wakfs, and Dr. Shamel El Samarrai, Iraqi Minister of Health arrived on the same plane.

Mr. Medani and Dr. Samarrai were appointed personal representatives of President Ahmed Ben Bella of Algeria and President Abdul Salam Arif of Iraq respectively, on the committee which was appointed to follow up the implementation of the resolutions of the Arab "Summit" Conference which was held in Cairo in January.

Shortly after the conclusion of the Arab "Summit" Conference they visited Saudi Arabia and their talks there resulted in an agreement under which the discussions between UAR and Saudi Arabia are being held to settle outstanding questions between the two countries in accordance with the resolutions of the Arab "Summit" Conference for the improvement of inter-Arab relations.

Joint Communique:

In a joint communique issued on March 3, UAR and Saudi Arabia announced their agreement on the execution of the statement made in Riyadh on February 4 with regard to the resumption of relations between the two countries and to have Ambassadors of both countries resume duties at their respective Embassies as soon as possible.

The communique also indicated that both countries expressed unqualified support to the independence and the liberty of Yemen and the Yemeni people, and resisted all imperialistic attempts against Yemen.

The communique said: "In order to realise Arab reunion and to close the ranks in the Arab nation for the realisation of its higher objectives and fulfilling its human mission as regards civilization and peace, in compliance with the resolutions of Arab 'Summit' Conference resulting from the meeting of Arab Kings and Heads of State in Cairo on January 17, 1964, and in response to the good offices of President Abdul Salam Arif, and President Ben Bella for conciliation and clearing Arab atmosphere by means of their joint delegations, and in order to implement the statement issued in Riyadh on February 4, 1964, following the talks of the above-mentioned mediation delegation with Prince Feisal and Saudi Arabian officials, a UAR delegation comprising Field-Marshal Abdul Hakim Amer, Vice-President and Deputy Commander of the Armed Forces, and Mr. Anwar el Sadat, Vice-President and Presidential Council member, conferred with Crown Prince Feisal of Saudi Arabia, who is at the same time Prime Minister and Foreign Minister, Prince Sultan Ben Abdul Aziz, Minister of Defence and Aviation, and Mr. Omar el Safaf, the Permanent Under-Secretary of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, between March 1 and March 3, 1964.

"Their meeting was attended by the good offices delegation, comprising Mr. Ahmed Tewfik el Medani, the Algerian Minister of Wakfs, and Dr. Shamel el Samarrai, the Iraqi Health Minister, and Mr. Abdul Hamid No'man, the Iraqi Ambassador to Saudi Arabia.

"Several meetings were held in an atmosphere of complete frankness, and in a spirit of Islamic brotherhood and Arab solidarity. The two sides were motivated by a common desire for true co-operation for the good of the Arab nation and for the realisation of its aspirations.

"In this cordial and fraternal mood, the issues and questions concerning the two sides, notably the problems relating to Yemen, were discussed. In view of the marked progress made in this direction and their close point of views, the two sides decided to pursue their talks to a final settlement at a forthcoming meeting between President Gamal Abdul Nasser and His Highness Prince Faisal in Cairo, immediately following the pilgrimage season towards the end of April, 1964. This was agreed upon in response to the invitation expressed by Field-Marshal Abdul Hakim Amer, on behalf of President Gamal Abdul Nasser.

"The Kingdom of Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Republic declare that they have no ambitions in Yemen and give their unqualified support for its independence and the freedom of all people, resisting every imperialist attempt that may be made against Yemen.

"In pursuance of the communique released in Riyadh on February 4, 1964, concerning the immediate restoration of diplomatic relations between the two countries; the prompt return of their Ambassadors to their respective posts; and the settlement of all financial and material matters outstanding between the two sides in a spirit of true Arab brotherhood; the delegations of the United Arab Republic and the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia declare their pleasure at the announcement, and are happy to express on behalf of their Governments their deep gratitude to President Ahmed Ben Bella and Field-Marshal Abdul Salam Arif, as well as to their personal representatives Mr. Ahmed Tewfik el Medani and Dr. Shamel el Samarrai, wishing the Arab nation continued strength and goodwill."

C. Oil Embargo On Israel Issue—Prince Feisal's Stand: Saudi Arabia is prepared to withhold oil from any country, whether Western or Eastern, which assists or supports Israel.

This was stated by Prince Feisal, the Crown Prince and Prime Minister of Saudi Arabia, in an interview with the Middle East News Agency in Riyadh on March 6.

He dealt with his country's attitude to British "imperialism" in the "occupied South", President Lyndon Johnson's statement on helping Israel in the water projects and the future economic and trade relations between the Arab countries. He also dealt with Saudi Arabia's participation in the non-aligned countries' conference, the Arab Foreign Ministers' conference and the exchange of Ambassadors between UAR and Saudi Arabia.

Commenting on President Johnson's statement on US help to Israel in water projects, Prince Feisal said: "We do not find such a statement strange because the existence of Israel in the Arab area is a result of the existence of the West, particularly the United States, in it."

Answering a question as to what would be the practical solution for removing Israel from the Arab area, he said that this solution "depends on the co-operation of the Arab countries." He added that Saudi Arabia would carry out any decisions to be taken by the Arab countries in this connexion.

Answering another question about the foreign bases in Arab countries he said: "I personally am opposed to the existence of these bases in Arab countries and consider it necessary to remove them."

Of his country's attitude to Britain, he said: "Our attitude is clear. It is against colonialism in any Arab country. We are fully prepared to give every assistance to the Arab people who have the ultimate authority."

Answering another question about Saudi Arabia's participation in non-alignment conferences he said: "We do not hesitate to do anything for the sake of public interest. Nor do we hesistate to make efforts for the sake of the maintenance of world peace."

Speaking of the future economic and trade relations between the Arab countries, he said that it was only natural that there should be co-operation between the Arab countries in this respect, particularly between Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Republic.

"We cannot keep Saudi Arabian funds from Arab countries. A Saudi Arabian delegation will leave for Algiers shortly to study the various facets of economic and trade co-operation between Algeria and Saudi Arabia."

A. Agrarian Reform And Development: The Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Adel Tarabein, announced in Damascus on March 5 that the Government was prepared to make loans to a limit of £S40,000,000 to peasant farmers to allow them to purchase seed, stock and implements.

These loans are in addition to £S10 million being invested directly by the Government in agriculture this year. It is part of the Government's intention to channel a larger proportion of the national income into the pockets of the peasant farmers who constitute some two-thirds of the population but who at present do not receive "rights and privileges" commensurate with those of the urban population.

The modifications to the 1958 Agrarian Reform Law which were promulgated in May, 1962 are gradually being brought into effect.

Under the revised Law the former owners of expropriated land will be compensated over a period of 40 years, instead of 15 years as first proposed. The peasant who receives the property will pay only a quarter of its value, to be fixed at the time of sequestration, in 20 yearly instalments. In return he must attain the minimum level of production from his land fixed by the State, to whom the land will revert should he fail to do so.

The Law limits the individual holdings of irrigated land at 15 to 55 hectares and of non-irrigated land to 80 to 200 hectares. Peasants who do not own any land are entitled to receive an area of 8 hectares of irrigated land and 30 hectares of non-irrigated land, and in return must pay one per cent of the value of the land to the Agricultural Co-operative of the region, in the interests of the community. The new Law also makes provision for the setting up of collective farms.

Other measures to be taken to increase the irrigated acreage and to raise agricultural production are the provision of Government loans amounting to £S40 million to the Syrian farmers and the allocation of £S30 million to improve methods of cattle and sheep raising. Government investment in agricultural development this year should reach about £S10 million.

THAILAND

A. Field-Marshal Sarit Thanarat Cremated: The former Premier, Field-Marshal Sarit Thanarat, who died in December, 1963, was cremated on March 17 at the end of the traditional Buddhist 100-day mourning amidst political uneasiness and a dispute over his estate.

A column of 100 horsemen with plumed white helmets and lances led the funeral procession along a three-mile route from the temple—where the body had lain in a golden coffin—to a crematorium at a pagoda on the city's outskirts.

Meanwhile, the authorities have been embarrassed by a scandal over how the former Premier had built a vast fortune. There have been too many claimants for it.

A special committee is investigating the estate. The inquiry was ordered by the new Prime Minister, Marshal Thanom Kittikachorn, following reports that the estate included Government funds.

He has said if the allegations proved untrue, the public would be told in order to clear the "blemish" on Marshal Sarit's reputation.

Officials believe that political opportunists and agitators are seeking to take advantage of the estate dispute to discredit Marshal Thanom's Government.

B. Fears Of "Coup d'etat": The Interior Minister, Gen. Praphas Charusathien, told newsmen in Bangkok on March 21 that the armed forces were on full alert to forestall a possible coup d'etat.

He said the troops' normal weekend leave was cancelled because leaflets had been circulated attacking the late Prime Minister, Field-Marshal Sarit Thanarat, and the present Government.

The leaflets were distributed to Thai newspapers on March 17, the day Marshal Sarit was cremated after 100-day mourning rites. They were signed by the "Liberation Movement of the Thai People in Central Thailand". Three men had been arrested.

General Praphas said the alert was a "normal" procedure. The armed forces and police have been on the alert since Marshal Sarit died in December, 1963 after a long illness. But hitherto the alert has been lifted partially at weekends.

Thai officials have publicly denied rumours of disunity in the armed forces but claim that political opportunists are agitating against the Government in a bid to return to power.

An atmosphere of political uneasiness has been building up in Thailand since Marshal Sarit's death. For over a month Thai newspapers have been printing stories about the vast estate left by Marshal Sarit and a quarrel among his relatives over it. A court recently held its first hearing on the case and dismissed all claims except those of Marshal Sarit's widow and his two eldest sons by another wife.

C. Economic Progress: Since 1961, when the First Six-Year Plan was launched, economic development has recorded a satisfactory climb.

Industrialization has progressed appreciably, but almost 85 per cent of the population is still engaged in agriculture.

The Government has given agriculture priority in its development schemes, as it is the vital factor in the nation's economy, providing some 70 per cent of export income.

The Government has indicated that development plans that are a basis of the national economy, especially those relating to highways, irrigation, natural resources, power, and tele-communications, will be undertaken "in accord with the power and capability of the country."

Among the schemes now being considered by the Government is the development of Bangkok port and the creation of a modern nation-wide tele-communication net-work. While substantial foreign aid is coming in from Governments and international bodies, private capital from USA, Japan, and Hong Kong is the major non-official source.

The market for exports has been growing—so has Thailand's trade deficit. But the rise in reserves and progress, in some degree, of the development projects, is a balancing factor.

Capital goods necessary for development account for the increase in imports. Foreign investment in the form of loans and aid grants, as well as direct investments, has tended to offset any deficit; but the Government is not keen on encouraging this trend. Saving foreign exchange by manufacturing locally what is otherwise imported, is a definite Government target.

Japan and USA are firmly established as trading partners, but the tendency now is to open the door to other active trading and investing partners.

Diversification and strengthening of the agricultural sector will continue to provide the national economy with the basic strength necessary for industrial expansion.

As for industry, recent years have seen the erection of many factories manufacturing traditional goods from jewellery to fertilizers, cement to machinery.

In 1963 the registered capital of new factories exceeded $9 million, and 1964 can be expected to bring in an equal, if not a higher, total.

In most established industries, production during the year considerably increased. An indication of the expansion is as follows:

(1) Production of cement has topped the million-ton mark and a further substantial growth is expected;

(2) About 20 million gunny bags were produced last year. New factories will be coming into operation this year and total production should more than satisfy demand;

(3) In the sugar industry, 35,000 metric tons of raw sugar and 5,000 metric tons of white sugar were admitted for export;

(4) A remarkable improvement has also taken place in the textile industry. Finer yarns and finer materials, such as poplins and white shirtings, are now being made in large quantities, and many finishing plants are being established;

(5) Training to consolidate the benefits of these advances and to provide a firm foundation for the future, special attention being paid to industrial training and assistance to small-scale and cottage industries;

(6) Nearly 200 enterprises sent in 1963 more than 700 members of their staffs to training courses conducted by the Thailand Management Development and Productivity Centre;

(7) In the current Government Budget an initial sum of 10 million baht—or about $500,000—has been allocated to the Department of Industrial Promotion of the Ministry of Industry for loans to deserving small-scale and cottage industries.

Arrangements are in hand to ensure that suitable land, with necessary amenities, is made available to industry at reasonable prices.

TURKEY

A. Progress Of CENTO Projects: An Ankara despatch on March 17 said that the Central Treaty Organization (CENTO) had made a notable advance on the economic front.

It was announced that Britain would increase her annual contribution for economic projects from £850,000 a year to £1,000,000 from 1965.

The United States has approved new long-term loans totalling $18 million (about £6,500,000) to complete the Turkey-Iran railway link.

The announcements of new credits were made at the opening of the 12th session of the CENTO Economic Commission in Ankara. The British delegation was led by Sir Andrew Cohen, Director-General of the Department of Technical Co-operation, and the United States delegation by Mr. Phillips Talbot, Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern Affairs.

The railway, which will be the first direct rail connexion between London and Tehran, has for long been a controversial project and at one time seemed unlikely to reach completion. The new shot in the arm for this railway will get the first trains running over it by 1968. The journey will include a passage by train ferry over the vast solitary Lake Van in a desolate and little known part of eastern Turkey. This project and the new roads which CENTO is building in the area are expected to bring trade and perhaps even tourism to Turkey and Iran's frozen extremities.

A much more expensive project, though for the common man perhaps less directly useful, is the micro-wave telecommunications telephone line stretching right across Turkey, Iran and Pakistan, which will connect Ankara with Karachi. This has cost $27 million (nearly £10 million) of which more than $18 million has been put up by the United States. It has involved the construction of 88 relay towers at intervals of about 30 miles throughout the whole 3,000-mile distance, and has been an extremely difficult and hazardous scheme to complete. It will be ready for use this Autumn and will allow a man in Ankara to speak to a man in Tehran or Karachi, according to CENTO officials, "as though he were in the next room".

Other CENTO projects which are going forward are high-frequency radio links between London and the three regional Capitals, Ankara, Tehran and Karachi; development of the Turkish ports of Trabzon and Iskanderun; a number of roads connecting Turkey, Iran and Pakistan; and a navigational air corridor across the three countries which will help civil air pilots.

VIET-NAM (DR)

A. Soviet Warning To USA On Invasion Threat: The Soviet Union warned again on March 5 of the "serious consequences" facing USA if it invaded North Viet-Nam.

In a commentary on the situation in South Viet-Nam, Moscow Radio said in its English-language programme: "World public opinion is alarmed by the adventurist policy of the Pentagon. Extension of US intervention in South Viet-Nam would have serious consequences for USA itself.

"The Pentagon brasses are making a bad mistake if they imagine they can attack North Viet-Nam with impunity. USSR has already warned them that it will not permit this and will repulse invasion."

Suggestions in American circles following the recent mission of the US Defence Secretary, Mr. Robert McNamara, to South Viet-Nam that the war against Viet-Cong should be carried into North Viet-Nam have been denounced by Moscow, Peking and Hanoi.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. Training Programme For Village Chiefs: The Government started on April 3 a training programme for young army officers who have the task of bringing effective government to the people of the villages.

The special course for the country's district chiefs marked an important first step in implementing General Nguyen Khanh's programme to wipe out the communist insurgency.

Strongly endorsed by Mr. Robert McNamara, the United States Defence Secretary, during his recent visit, General Khanh's strategy emphasizes a need for efficient government administrators in areas cleared of insurgents by military action.

The American Ambassador, Mr. Henry Cabot Lodge, addressed the first group of about 40 military district chiefs attending the two-week course. "You epitomize the idea of government as the servant of the people", he said. "The old idea of the arrogant official looking down on the people is a thing of the past. You should be trusted and loved."

The training programme includes courses in local elections, finance and accounting, district, economic, and social development, and local political activity.

One of the main recommendations made by Mr. McNamara in his report to President L. B. Johnson was the need to strengthen local government administration, and to make the central authority more real and beneficial to the people of the countryside. In many parts of the country at present it is the Viet-Cong administrations which seem to be the government, with Saigon forces and representatives the intruders.

Parallel with the courses for district chiefs will be similar training for about 800 graduates of South Viet-Nam's reserve officers' training school, supplying a pool of trained personnel from which further district chiefs may be chosen.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. Signals From Unknown Planet: Two Soviet writers claimed on March 21 that light signals from highly-developed beings on another planet had reached the Earth at least thrice.

According to the writers, Generikh Altov and Valentina Zhuravleva, the signals came in 1882, 1894 and 1908. The last was in answer to the eruption of the volcano Krakatao, on an island in the Sunda Strait between Sumatra and Java, on August 27, 1883, which the beings mistook for a signal from the Earth, the writers said in an article in the Leningrad magazine Vzezda (star).

Altov and Zhuravleva think the signals came from one of the planets of the 61st star of the constellation of the Swan.

They believe plasma erupting from Krakatao sent into space a powerful radio, and perhaps light, signal which was received on the star 11 to 12 years later.

They wrote that "answer" was the most impressive volcanic phenomenon remembered by man—"The Tungus phenomenon." This was a body which landed in Siberia on June 30, 1908, and which had been variously explained as a giant meteor or small comet.

The writers stated that all three signals were observed at about the same latitude and that the intervals between them corresponded to the time it would take for light rays to cover the distance between the Sun and the star.

They claimed that a highly developed civilization on the star had long been sending signals in the direction of the Sun.

Challenging a theory that the Earth was visited by cosmonauts from other planets, they maintained that the trace of extra-terrestrial intelligence should be sought not in the Bible or rock paintings, but in stellar spectograms.

They urged the setting up of a permanent optical signal monitoring services and added that the fluctuations in the intensity of spectral lines, previously attributed to various accidental causes, could now be deciphered as optical signals from another civilization.

Vol. X No. 19

ADEN

A. British Military Base—UN Appeal For Early Evacuation: Eight nations called on April 7 for the early evacuation of the British military base in Aden as being prejudicial to peace in the area.

They urged this move in a draft resolution presented to the UN General Assembly's Special Committee on Colonialism. The draft resolution was sponsored by Cambodia, India, Iraq, Mali, Syria, Tanganyika, Tunisia and Yugoslavia.

The Iraqi delegate, Mr. R. Adnan Pachachi, introducing the draft said the attack by the RAF on March 28 on Hareeb fort in Yemen pinpointed how British policy had increased tension in the area.

Britain Opposes UN Mission To Aden:

Britain gave notice in United Nations that she would oppose the draft resolution calling for a fact-finding mission to visit Aden and for the early removal of the British military base there.

Mr. John Sankey, the British delegate, told the Special Committee on Colonialism on April 8 that his Government was still opposed in principle to UN missions going to non-self-governing territories under its administration.

He also categorically rejected charges in the draft resolution that British policy was increasing tension in the Aden area and threatening international peace and security. The blame for any rise in tension had to be squarely placed on the Yemeni authorities.

He acknowledged the "increased recognition" of the difficulties his Government faced in promoting the political advance of Aden and the "more sober assessment by delegations of the true value of the extravagant allegations" levelled against it. But he rejected the argument that the campaign being mounted from Yemen against South Arabia was irrelevant to the main issue before the Committee.

"Can it be seriously maintained that a calculated and systematic campaign by a neighbouring country to interrupt the constitutional advance in a non-self-governing territory, to undermine its Government and ultimately to annex it, can possibly be ignored by a Committee which is supposed to be examining the situation in the territory concerned?" A calculated attempt had been made by the representatives of Yemen, Iraq and Syria to blur and conceal the true extent of Yemeni designs in respect of South Arabia.

He added: "It is fantastic to suggest that the Yemeni authorities are prepared to see the peaceful emergence of a strong, united and democratic Federation of South Arabia, whatever their representatives may say here."

Resolution Passed:

The UN General Assembly's Special Committee on Colonialism approved on April 8 the resolution setting up a fact-finding mission to visit Aden and calling for the early removal of the British military base there.

Britain voted against the resolution, which was approved by 19 votes to three, with two abstentions.

The mission of five nations, to be named by the Committee Chairman, is authorized to make contact with Britain with a view to implementing General Assembly resolutions calling for independence for Aden. Besides visiting Aden, it will be able to make other visits if necessary.

The resolution urged Britain to release all political prisoners, allow the return of people "exiled because of political activities," and to "cease forthwith all repressive action against the people of the territory, in particular, military expeditions and the bombing of villages."

It "re-affirms that the maintenance of the military base in Aden is prejudicial to peace and security and its early removal is, therefore, desirable."

BURMA

A. Further Nationalization Of Business: Rangoon Radio broadcast on April 9 a Government decision to take over immediately all shops and business houses throughout the country.

[The Government had nationalized shops, stores and business houses in the Rangoon area on March 19. See page 5759].

The broadcast said that the Government had no alternative but to adopt this step because up-country owners and proprietors had resorted to hoarding and were selling goods "surreptitiously at lower prices to defeat the purpose of the Government in nationalizing business houses in Rangoon".

Meanwhile, the British Deputy Foreign Minister, Lord Carrington, said on April 8 that the value of British business nationalized by the Burmese Government would amount to about £10 million.

Lord Carrington, who was on his way to Kuala Lumpur, said that he had "expressed concern about the payment of equitable compensation to British-owned business nationalized by Burma."

He said he had "no complaint about the scale of compensation, but I have conveyed to the Burmese Government my Government's anxiety over the delay in the payment of compensation".

B. Border With Thailand Sealed: The Thai language daily, Pimpthai, reported on April 11 that Burma had sealed off her border with the northern Thai province of Chiengrai on April 9.

The troops were said to be chasing Karen rebels and had sealed off the border to prevent their escape into Thailand.

A Thai border police spokesman said Thailand had not sealed her frontier.

CHINA

A. Soviet Charge Of Border Violation: Tass released on April 8 a statement accusing China of constantly violating the border with the Soviet Union. But it re-affirmed that there was no "border issue."

It said that the present behaviour of the Chinese leaders had aroused a "feeling of the deepest indignation and appropriately severe condemnation from the point of view of international law and morality".

The statement, signed by Professor F. Kozhevnikov, an authority on international law, said it was well known that there were no territorial issues between the Soviet Union and China and that the Soviet-Chinese border had been "formed historically".

"We can only discuss separate necessary clarifications of it. However, for some time the Chinese side has constantly and systematically violated the Soviet-Chinese border, not infrequently in a crude and provocative manner." This utterly contradicted the most accepted norms of international law.

Pravda the same day (April 8) quoted President A. Novotny of Czechoslovakia as saying that "the divisive activities of the Chinese leaders had played into the hands of imperialist circles in their struggle against the socialist countries."

He said that "at present there are even signs that one might count in the future

on some kind of line, London-Paris-Peking-Tokyo, which would be both anti-American as well as anti-Soviet.

"These reports are being spread and no one in China has repudiated them, and it seems that they are not unpleasant for the Chinese leaders."

Mr. N. Khruschev's Criticism:

Addressing a rally in the Budapest Sports Hall at the end of his visit to Hungary on April 9, the Soviet Premier, Mr. Nikita Khruschev, bitterly assailed Chinese policies.

The Chinese leaders, he said, were seeking to dominate the communist movement and hiding their "disruptive activity" behind ultra-revolutionary slogans. They used ridiculous arguments and made absurd demands. They were trying to force other fraternal parties to join them and organizing their own splinter groups from "renegade and Trotskyite" elements and thereby weakening the fight against imperialism and disrupting the unity of the communist movement.

What the imperialists could not achieve, he said, the Chinese were now trying to do. They had taken upon themselves the function of "slanderers of the socialist camp."

The Soviet Communist Party, he said, had shown the greatest patience. It had repeatedly appealed to Peking to cease public polemics and try to overcome their differences. They had refrained from giving public replies in spite of extreme radio and Press campaigns from Peking because they had hoped that the Chinese leaders would listen to reason. But Peking had replied by intensifying disruptive activities.

What began as an argument on minor ideological differences now extended to all fields; it had spread to inter-State relations. Peking had thus entered upon a policy based on weakening the unity of the socialist camp and had inflicted great damage on the world socialist system.

In the persons of the Chinese leaders, he said, the communist world was now faced with men who hid themselves behind Left-wing revolutionary phrases. What the Chinese leaders wanted was to establish their own hegemony, to take control of the communist movement.

With their defence of Stalin and their attempt to justify "cold despotism and crude power" they were trying to revive policies which the communist world had condemned and rejected.

He returned to the attack on April 12 when he made a radio and television speech on his visit to Hungary.

He said the Chinese leaders had "proclaimed their special course which is a blend of petty bourgeois adventurism and Great Power chauvinism.

"On a number of issues the Chinese splitters in effect are slipping into Trotskyite positions.

"The CPSU (Communist Party of the Soviet Union) and the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party believe that it is imperative ... to give a resolute rebuff to the anti-Leninist concepts and subversive actions of the Chinese leaders.

"We proceed from the assumption that in the great community of Socialist nations there should be no great nations and small, no infallible teachers and submissive pupils. We all learn from each other and help each other ...

"The Chinese leaders are coming out aganist this. They lay claim to a special role in the Socialist camp and the world Communist movement.

"They would like to restore in the relations between parties and countries those procedures and methods which prevailed during the Stalin personality cult. But these times have gone, never to return."

SUMMARY: Tax Concessions; Mr. G. M. Sadiq On Kashmir Issue; Split In CPI; Monopolies Commission Appointed; Prohibition Inquiry Committee's Report.

A. Budget Debate—Tax Concessions: Some tax relief for those in the income range up to Rs. 8,500 and a choice for those wanting to opt out of the annuity deposit scheme were announced by the Central Finance Minister, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari, in the Lok Sabha on April 17.

Moving for consideration of the Finance Bill, he also announced a series of other minor concessions, including some changes in corporate taxation to benefit small entrepreneurs and exemptions from tax on capital gains.

He also sought to "assuage the anger" aroused by his Budget proposals by justifying the estate duty and the gift tax in terms of the basic philosophy of the Congress. He claimed that they "serve to promote the objectives accepted as imperative by the Congress Party."

He has given income-tax relief by raising the initial tax-free slab from Rs. 3,000 to Rs. 3,200 in the case of a married person with no child or a Hindu undivided family with no minor coparcener.

It has been raised from Rs. 3,300 to Rs. 3,600 for an individual with one child or a Hindu undivided family with one minor coparcener and from Rs. 3,600 to Rs. 4,000 for a married individual with more than one child or a Hindu undivided family with more than one minor coparcener.

With regard to the annuity deposit scheme, no one over 70 years will be required to join it. It has also been made optional for others covered by the scheme (those having an annual income of over Rs. 15,000) but the exercise of the option has been made "unattractive".

Thus, any one who does not want to pay the deposit will have to pay additional income-tax. This will amount to 50 per cent of the difference between the annuity deposit and the extra tax payable when the deposit is not deducted from the assessee's income.

Playwrights, authors, artists and musicians will be allowed to make an additional deposit of 25 per cent of their income instead of 15 per cent as provided in the Bill. Mr. Krishnamachari said that income of the nature of capital gains or of compensation received for loss of employment would not be taken into account in fixing the annuity deposit.

As part of the changes in corporate taxation, he announced further incentives for small entrepreneurs. For those companies in which the public is not greatly interested and which manufacture or process goods, he liberalized the concession already announced in the Finance Bill.

While formerly only companies which had an income not exceeding Rs. 2,66,000 paid an overall rate of 50 per cent on the first Rs. 1,00,000 (against the normal overall rate of 60 per cent), this provision will now apply to the first Rs. 2,00,000 of companies with a total income of Rs. 5,00,000 or less.

To ensure fuller utilization of capacity in industry, another important change in corporate taxation was the revival of the additional depreciation allowance for a third shift working of plant and machinery at 50 per cent of the normal rate of depreciation.

In respect of capital gains other than short-term capital gains by non-company assessees, Mr. Krishnamachari said that the first Rs. 5,000 of such gains would be totally exempt from tax. Further, no tax would be levied on such capital gains if the assessee's total income did not exceed Rs. 10,000.

On misgivings about the clause relating to the disclosure of information contained in tax records, he said that "the Commissioner of Income-Tax will furnish information only if he is satisfied that its disclosure will be in the public interest".

With regard to expenditure tax, he said that an amendment would be moved to levy the tax on all expenditure above Rs. 36,000 a year, no matter what source the money came from.

In partial mitigation of complaints that the rate of wealth tax of 85 per cent in some cases had the effect of taking away with duty and taxes the full value of the estate, he said that it was proposed to allow the full amount of probate duty to be deducted from the estate duty payable instead of one-half of the probate duty allowable at present.

On indirect taxes, he announced relief to handloom and powerloom sectors. He extended further the total exemption on yarn in the form of hanks to new French counts below 29 and halved the duty on such yarn of 29 counts but below 31.

On duty payable by small powerlooms, relief was given by re-fixing the compounded levy rate at one-third of the present figure. The effective rate of duty on industrial rayon yarns was reduced from Rs. 4 to Rs. 2.67 per kg.

Amendment To Income-tax Proposal:

Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari on April 18 agreed not to make tax on bonus issues applicable with retrospective effect.

He made the necessary alteration in his own amendment to Clause 12 of the Finance Bill during its second reading in the Lok Sabha.

Mr. R. R. Morarka (C) had urged that one of the principles of taxation should be that it should not have retrospective effect.

The official amendment, as passed, read: "Every equity shareholder to whom any shares are allotted by the company by way of bonus shall, unless such shares are issued wholly out of share premium account, be chargeable to income-tax under the head 'capital gains' in respect of such shares on an amount equal to the fair market value of such shares on the date next following the expiry of the period of 30 days from the date of such allotment and such amount shall be deemed to be the income of the previous year in which the date next following the aforesaid period of 30 days falls:

"Provided that income-tax shall not be chargeable under this sub-section if such shares are included in the stock-in-trade of the assessee or if such shares were allotted before April 1, 1961."

The Bill was passed by the Lok Sabha on April 20.

B. Mr. G. M. Sadiq on Kashmir Issue—"Self-determination No Solution": The Prime Minister of Jammu and Kashmir, Mr. G. M. Sadiq said on April 16 that self-determination was no solution to the

Kashmir problem. "It will only complicate the problem".

Laying the foundation stone of the Sanatandharam Sabha Higher Secondary School in Jammu, he said amid cheers: "No power can move us from the path we have chosen. We are as much a part of India as Bombay, Calcutta or Madras. We occupy an honoured place in India and you should believe that we stand rock-like in our position.

"If we feel nervous at the smallest voice here or there, it will show only our weakness.

"You heard Sheikh Abdullah with patience, though you did not like many things he said. This has been a characteristic attitude of Indians, but this does not mean that the Sheikh should think that since the people had heard him patiently they also agreed with him".

He said the way the people of Jammu had behaved on the release of Sheikh Abdullah deserved praise from the whole country.

"The new policy that we have begun to pursue in the State is not one of surrender or weakness. That has been adopted to usher in a tranquil atmosphere."

The things that happened in the past few months in the State, he pointed out, were not the result of any sudden development but an accumulation of the resentment growing over the past 15 years. The Hazratbal relic incident provided an opportunity for everything to come to the surface. "These things cannot be solved by placing a lid on them. We must come to grips with them".

"You can take others on your chosen path only if you can convince them that there is the rule of law, peace and freedom and that fundamental rights are safe. However, if you keep the danda on their heads for ever and do not let them move and display lawlessness, then you create resentment.

"We want to show that even in unfavourable circumstances in which we find ourselves, when Pakistan and China are sitting on our borders with unholy intentions, when attempts are being made to create uncertainty within the State, we can work under normal conditions, open schools and hospitals and make progress."

Stating that some foreign countries were "meddling" in the Kashmir problem, he said: "During the past 16 years some foreign Powers have complicated the Kashmir issue. Even some of the foreigners who come here merely for holidaying think themselves to be all-wise and offer solutions, some of which are quixotic. It has been a characteristic feature of Indians for thousands of years that we have heard everyone and chided none, even if we do not see eye to eye with them. But the time has come when we should candidly tell these all-wise people that their talk is sheer nonsense. We must tell them that they come here on a holiday and have no right to meddle in our affairs or make suggestions".

In the opinion of some, the holding of a plebiscite was the only solution. This was no solution. On the other hand, it would complicate matters to such an extent that it would be impossible to find a solution.

"No one in India has the right to cede even a tiny portion of the country, not even Parliament. If a plebiscite is held to cede even an inch of the country, then the wishes of the whole of the Indian population shall have to be ascertained. So if any one gives ear to any apprehensions, he reflects only lack of confidence in himself."

He added: "This house is ours. If someone says it is not ours, why should we begin doubting our own title to it?"

Sheikh Abdullah's Charge:

Sheikh Abdullah charged on April 20 that India's claim to Kashmir as an integral part of the country, like Madras or any other State, was based purely on might.

He told a public meeting in Srinagar that the only democratic way of ending the Kashmir dispute was to let the people of the State express their wish freely and impartially. At the same time, no solution which was not acceptable to India and Pakistan could be a lasting one.

He declared that Kashmir belonged to all Hindus, Sikhs and Muslims inhabiting the State and that the majority community alone could not decide it future. He asked the people not to be swayed by emotions or sentiments but to pay due attention to practical considerations.

He emphasized that Kashmiris did not want to tie their future to a country peopled by communal fanatics. It wanted its future to be tied to a country peopled by human beings.

Unmindful of the results, he said, the people should be allowed to decide their future. They did not want to be fettered by New Delhi, Karachi or others.

According to him, foreign rulers had always treated Kashmir as a playground. And now Kashmiris were determined to regain their individuality. Communal harmony was an article of faith with him and not a political expedient. He would stake his life for protecting the minorities.

He accused India and Pakistan of adopting wrong public postures. Both had agreed in the Security Council to accept the wishes of Kashmir as a final solution. But India had resiled. For material gains he would not barter away people's interests.

He did not consider India or Pakistan as Kashmir's enemy. But this State could not exist without both. He could not understand the Indian logic of asserting Kashmir's final and irrevocable accession of the State and at the same time agreeing to periodical discussion of the question with Pakistan.

He expressed satisfaction that the Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru had invited him for talks. This meant a realisation that India was desirous of talking to people's representatives.

He told the gathering that a large section of Indians was friendly and appreciative of Kashmiris' sentiments.

He held Mr. Nehru primarily responsible for his long detention. But he was not bitter. He had two images of Mr. Nehru—one that of a close political associate in the freedom struggle and dear friend and the other of an administrator. He wanted to preserve the first image of the Prime Minister.

He compared his release with the brief spell of freedom he had in 1958 and said there was a lot of difference in the two situations. In 1958 he was sought to be deliberately misrepresented, while this time the Press had been fair and objective. The atmosphere around him was also freer and healthier.

C. Dalai Lama's Foreign Tour—Chinese Protest: China has sent an angry Note to India on the Dalai Lama's tour of some of the Buddhist countries in South-East Asia.

Extraordinarily offensive in wording, the Note accused the Government of India of expansionist designs on Tibet, and blandly warned it that "like the fugitive Tibetan clique's dream of 'come-back' the Indian Government's dream of expansion is doomed to be shattered."

The Note was handed to the Indian Charge d'Affaires in Peking in the last week of March and was received in New Delhi early in April. Significantly, Peking Radio had since been broadcasting the Note to South-East Asian countries in several languages besides English.

The Note characterized the Dalai Lama's March 9 statement to mark the fifth anniversary of the Tibetan uprising against Chinese occupation (page 5738) as a "treacherous statement." Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri's statement on March 10 in Parliament that India placed no curb on the Dalai Lama's activities was termed as "an out and out interference in China's internal affairs."

The Chinese Government found in Mr. Shastri's statement fresh evidence to show that the Indian Government "engineered and supported" the Tibetan revolt five years ago. The Note further alleged that India had since been using the Tibetan refugees (the Note called them Tibetan rebel clique) to carry on "subversive" activities against Tibet and China.

Observers in New Delhi noted in the Peking campaign the opening of a new anti-Indian propaganda drive evidently to synchronize with the Djakarta meeting of the Afro-Asian Foreign Ministers. The new turn was in sharp contrast to the sweet smiles Peking campaigners were wearing during Mr. Chou En-lai's recent tour of Africa and Asia.

Indian Reply:

On March 23, India "firmly and categorically" rejected the "false and malicious" Chinese charge that she was shielding and supporting the "traitorous" activities of the Dalai Lama who had been accused of attempting another rebellion in Tibet.

Rejecting this baseless accusation, India told China that the Tibetan revolt in 1959 was the "spontaneous and inevitable reaction of the unfortunate people of Tibet against the attempt by the Chinese Government to extinguish by brute force the autonomy of Tibet, which China had solemnly undertaken to respect."

The texts of the Chinese Note and the Indian reply, handed over to the Chinese Embassy in New Delhi on April 25, were placed before Parliament on April 28.

After an interval of several months, China had once again levelled all sorts of "wild and baseless" charges against India and held out a threat and warning against imaginary Indian interference in China's internal affairs in Tibet. But this time India had not hesitated to hit back with equally sharp language and expose the true nature of these allegations.

The Chinese Note had charged India with what it called dreams of expansion in Tibet. The Indian reply, on the other hand, accused China of not only destroying the age-old autonomy of Tibet but also advancing fantastic territorial claims against India and even committing aggression across the northern borders in furtherance of her expansionist policies.

"The truth is well known to the world," the Indian Note pointed out, "that, far from interfering and supporting rebellious activities in Tibet, the Government of India had voluntarily relinquished its historical rights in Tibet and extended its hand of friendship to China, which the Government of China grasped, to begin with, only to be able to stab India in the back all the more effectively, later."

India also accused China of pursuing a "neo-imperialistic" policy of dividing and dominating Asia. The "dream" that was haunting Asia today was the "dream of Chinese expansionism."

The Chinese Note had charged India with shielding and supporting the so-called "Tibetan rebel clique," allowing the Dalai Lama to make "traitorous statements" against the Peking regime, and encouraging him to undertake a tour of South Asian countries to disrupt China's friendly relations with them. The Indian Note recalled that all these charges had been disproved and repudiated on several occasions in the past. It was thus clear that Peking was repeating these charges "solely with a view to stepping up tension between India and China and to provide a camouflage for China's aggressive designs against India."

The Indian reply quoted from the Prime Minister's statements on the subject to restate the position that, while the Government of India had never allowed the Dalai Lama and the other Tibetan refugees to indulge in subversive activities against China, it could not deny them "freedom of expression and freedom for legitimate activities which do not offend against the laws of the land." The Indian Note also made it clear that India would not place any obstacles in the way of the Dalai Lama if he wished to make a tour of the Buddhist countries of Asia.

D. Split In CPI—National Council Meeting: After a walk-out by 32 Centrist and Leftist members from a meeting of the National Council of the Communist Party in New Delhi on April 11, Mr. Jyoti Basu announced on their behalf: "We are the Communist Party. We don't recognize them (supporters of Mr. Dange) as the Communist Party. We are out of it." (i.e. the Party with the official leadership).

The continued existence of the Communist Party of India as a single unit had already become difficult because of the repercussions of the Sino-Soviet ideological rift. The issue of Mr. S. A. Dange's incriminating letters to the British Government alleged to have been written 40 years ago was advanced by the Left faction and the Centrists as the immediate cause for parting company with the official leadership.

The members of the National Council who had walked out said later: "The present secretariat and their supporters alone are responsible for the present situation. We know that they are unrepresentative of the real feelings of the vast majority of the party members. We are sure that the mass of party members and units will repudiate Dange and his followers."

The walk-out was staged because the Centrists and Leftists failed to get the Dange letters issue as the first item on the agenda. They also wanted Mr. Dange to step down during the discussion of this item. Mr. Dange and his supporters opposed this suggestion. The strength of the Council will now be 66. This includes about ten Centrists. Not all of them are expected to follow in the footsteps of their colleagues like Mr. Jyoti Basu and Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad.

Mr. Namboodiripad was later asked by newsmen which party he would join. He said: "Till my death I will be in the Communist Party."

Question: "Which Communist Party?"

Answer: "The party which I consider to be the genuine Communist Party."

Question: "Which party is the genuine Communist Party?"

Answer: "You can't cross-examine me."

A little later, however, he remarked that a party whose chairman did not vacate the chair while discussing serious allegations against him "does not deserve to be considered as a revolutionary party."

Issue Of Mr. S. A. Dange's Letters:

The simmering split in the CPI came to the surface on March 26 when two Left-wing members of the Party openly expressed their conviction that the allegations recently made against the party Chairman, Mr. S. A. Dange, that he had offered to place his services at the disposal of the British regime in the 1920's had been borne out by certain documents in the National Archives of India.

Mr. M. Basavapunniah and Mr. P. Ramamurti jointly appealed to Communists not to go by the contradiction in this regard issued previously by the party's Central Secretariat.

They informed members of the National Council of the Party stating that the letters reported to have been written by Mr. Dange to the British authorities in 1924 and preserved in the National Archives were "cent per cent authentic." Mr. Basavapunniah told newsmen he had personally examined those letters and identified Mr. Dange's handwriting.

He also disclosed that the Home Ministry had stopped making the files available to the public since the previous week.

He said he would not hesitate to question the propriety of Mr. Dange taking the chair at the next session of the Executive or the National Council meeting.

From Mr. Basavapunniah's replies to questions, it seemed apparent that the two factions within the CPI had come to a parting of the ways. He tried to make out that the differences were not new. They had been divided even at the Vijayawada session and had since been running parallel newspapers and functioning in diverse ways.

The Left-wing leaders were more concerned with the circulation by the National Marxist Association of a pamphlet which purported to contain portions of a 41-page document prepared for the party congress later this year.

Mr. Basavapunniah conceded that there was such a document but complained that the pamphlet had interpolated certain damaging sentences which the document did not contain.

Referring to the CPI Central Secretariat's attempt to controvert the existence of Mr. Dange's letters in the National Archives, he and Mr. Ramamurti said: "To say that these letters were 'forged' and 'planted' in the National Archives of India was nothing but an open accusation against the National Archives.

"It was hurling a challenge to the authorities in charge of the Archives, to the Government that is controlling it and to the scores of research scholars who might have gone through these documents."

They said: "After full inquiry, thorough investigation and a careful check-up of all available material on this issue, we are firmly convinced that the matter is of a very serious and grave character and it is highly impermissible for any honest political party to demagogically dismiss it as forged and planted in the National Archives by some enemies of Communism. We are further convinced that the three letters said to be written from jail, in 1924—one asking for transfer to a jail in Bombay or Poona, the second, jointly with the late Mr. Nalini Bhushan Das Gupta, giving an undertaking that they would not commit the offence for which they had been convicted and asking for release and the third offering his services to the then British Government if released, are all in Mr. S. A. Dange's own handwriting beyond any shadow of doubt. It did not end with this. There was also a fourth letter which was sent to the Governor-General in Mr. Dange's own handwriting requesting the Government to reconsider his earlier letter pleading for his release and offering his services after the High Court had dismissed the appeal.

"In the face of these facts not only Mr. S. A. Dange, Chairman of the party, has grossly abused the trust placed in him by the party but he also deliberately implicated the whole secretariat which in turn, through its statement, compromised the entire party before the public."

They further said that instead of feeling genuinely concerned about the integrity of the party organization, the Central Secretariat had acted in a "most partisan and factional manner and we understand that in furtherance of its narrow aims, it intends to maliciously accuse a section of the party to be guilty of forging such letters and even planting them in the National Archives." This attempt on its part was all the more preposterous.

They pledged to place all the facts and a full report before the Central Executive Committee and the National Council "to thoroughly investigate the questions and punish the guilty".

Mr. Basavapunniah said it was too much to allege that the British in 1924 would have prepared these letters foreseeing that Mr. Dange would become CPI Chairman in 1964. The letters as well as the index referring to them had been printed in 1925 and 1926 in the Government Press at Simla.

Leftist Leaders Suspended:

On April 14, the CPI National Council decided to expel seven Leftist leaders and suspend the membership of 25 other members of the Council, who had issued an appeal to Party members to repudiate the present CPI leadership and its "reformist line of general united front with the Congress and factional preparations for a fake party congress". (But, next day, they were only "suspended" along with 25 others).

The expulsion of seven members had been recommended by the Party's central executive committee. They were: Mr. P. Sundarayya, Mr. M. Basavapunniah, Mr. P. Ramamurti, Mr. A. K. Gopalan, Mr. Harekrishna Konar, Mr. Promode Dasgupta and Mr. H. S. Surjeet. Among those suspended from membership were Mr. Namboodiripad and Mr. Jyoti Basu.

Evidently, the Council took into consideration the statement issued by the Left faction earlier in the day. This was said to have further stiffened the Council members' attitude in spite of an offer of compromise contained in it.

Earlier, the Council adopted a resolution on the alleged Dange letters. While exonerating Mr. Dange of the Left's charge of being a British agent, the resolution recommended an "extensive examination" of relevant material, including the circumstances in which the letters were found and distributed (a seven-member committee consisting of Mr. S. V. Ghate, Dr. G. Adhikari, Mr. C. Rajeshwar Rao, Mr. Bhupesh Gupta, Mr. Achutha Menon, Mr. Sohan Singh Josh and Professor Hiren Mukherjee was asked to submit its report within a month).

A statement issued by 32 National Council members who had walked out of the Council on April 11 made it clear by implication that for the time being the Left faction would make a determined bid to capture the CPI leadership ideologically, politically and organizationally from the lowest level upwards without breaking off from the Party.

After this groundwork, during which every base unit will be asked to express its views on the issues posed in the appeal, a convention of representatives from different States is contemplated to take stock of the situation within the next two months and to prepare for a party congress almost simultaneously with the planned in October by the present CPI leadership headed by Mr. S. A. Dange.

The statement contained, however, an offer for a compromise about the fate of which the statement itself expressed doubts.

Its main terms were: re-organization of the party centre (Secretariat and the Central Executive Council); a thorough probe into the alleged Dange letters by an agreed machinery; postponement of all disciplinary action for splitting activities till the party congress according to the official programme; fresh scrutiny of membership through an agreed process and an agreed commission to examine documents for the congress.

The 2,500-word statement listed some of the "anti-party organizational methods" adopted by the Dange group (it never used the usual prefix "comrade" in about half-a-dozen references to Mr. Dange) and made only a passing reference to the alleged Dange letters. Its main emphasis was on political and organizational issues.

It twice mentioned the "differences among us", especially with Mr. E.M.S. Namboodiripad, who along with Mr. Jyoti Basu was a signatory, on political and ideological questions which would now be sought to be clinched in the coming two months. (Mr. Basu is already a party to the Left faction's draft programme.)

Mr. Namboodiripad was understood to have conveyed to the Left leaders that the more he watched the activities of the present leadership the more he felt drawn towards them (Left).

In approaching the Party members with their draft programme, which was unanimously adopted recently, they will also present Mr. Namboodiripad's alternative draft for detailed discussion at all levels.

For all practical purposes the Left faction has begun its separate existence. Its headquarters is at the residence of Mr. M. Basavapunniah, who will look after the day-to-day working of the centre. To decide policy matters and to co-ordinate work in different States, the 32 National Council members have been named as the co-ordination committee. This committee was expected to meet again early in May.

The Council's resolution on the alleged Dange letters was a greatly diluted version of the stand taken earlier by the party secretariat and Mr. Dange himself.

Instead of re-iterating the Secretariat's view that the letters were forged, the resolution merely stated that on the basis of reports before it, the Council came to the conclusion that "not even a prima facie case has been made out that the letters are genuine".

This was said to have been the result of pressure brought to bear on the members by Mr. Bhupesh Gupta and a vigorous speech by Mr. P. C. Joshi, who, while advocating a probe into the whole affair, indirectly criticized certain activities of Mr. Dange and the Secretariat.

Even then three members—Dr. Ranen Sen, Mr. Sohan Singh Josh and Mr. K. T. Thangamani voted against the resolution, while Mr. Y. D. Sharma abstained. While Mr. Gupta withdrew his alternative draft, the one moved by Dr. Sen was rejected. Sixty-two members were present.

The resolution recalled Mr. Dange's record as a "staunch anti-imperialist fighter" and described as slanderous the charge levelled by Leftist leaders that he (Mr. Dange) had worked as a British spy.

"Suspended" But Not "Expelled":

But, on April 15, instead of expelling the seven members, the Council suspended all the 32 members who had staged a walk-out at the Council meeting on April 11 and removed them from "all positions in the party organization which they may be holding."

Only Mr. Sohan Singh Josh opposed the resolution. Mr. Bhupesh Gupta and Dr. Ranen Sen did not attend the meeting.

The Party Chairman, Mr. S. A. Dange, told newsmen that as a result of the resolution Mr. A. K. Gopalan was no longer leader of the Communist group in the Lok Sabha. Similarly, Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad, Mr. Jyoti Basu and Mr. P. Sundarayya would not be the official leaders of the Communists who form the main opposition in the Legislative Assemblies of Kerala, West Bengal and Andhra Pradesh respectively.

Mr. Dange said it had been decided to take action against Mr. K. Anandan Nambiar, MP, for signing a statement demanding the release of RSS chief Golwalkar.

He said each Communist MP and legislator in the States would have to declare his position one way or the other.

He dismissed the claims of the Leftists to represent the mass of party members as based on "bluff." He said the confusion about who had the largest following would clear up "much earlier" than the proposed Party congress to be held in September in Maharashtra.

He charged the Leftists with identifying themselves with the ideological and political positions of the Chinese Communist Party, which the National Council's resolution stated, had embarked on the task of splitting various Communist Parties. "Whether they have physical contacts with the Chinese, I do not know."

But, he said, in answer to a question, that the official Party would protest or do "something more" if the Leftists were arrested by the Government.

He wrote off West Bengal when he admitted that it was the only State where the committee of the Party had a majority of Leftists. But, he said, another committee obeying the National Council would be formed there.

The decision not to impose the punishment of expulsion on seven leading members of the Party, earlier recommended by the Central Executive Committee, was taken to mean as a sop to those who may have personal loyalties to them.

In a bid to attract the majority of Party members, the National Council's second resolution advanced the convening of the 7th Party Congress to September this year and the finalization of documents by the second week of May. The membership basis for the Party Congress has been greatly liberalized to secure the adherence of as large a section of the CPI as possible.

Significantly, the resolution on expulsion, and another on the World Communist Conference contained bitter attacks on the Chinese Communist and Government leaders who were charged with splitting the Communist movement.

On April 15, the Leftists released their draft Party programme, which calls for a Government that will undertake sweeping agrarian reforms and the abolition of "foreign monopoly" capital. It calls for a united front to replace the Congress Government which, according to the programme, is dominated by the bourgeoisie and landlords and is acting against the interests of the people both in matters of foreign and domestic policy.

Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad has submitted his own draft programme for comments by the Leftists, but significantly he and six other dissident members of the National Council from Kerala have sent a call to Party units in Kerala to begin efforts for a united front against the Congress in the elections to the State Assembly scheduled to be held in February, 1965.

Mr. Namboodiripad and other signatories to this statement accused the Kerala State Council of desiring to support the Congress in the elections and asked Party members to defeat this purpose.

In a rejoinder, Mr. C. Acnutha Menon, former Finance Minister in the Namboodiripad Ministry, said that Mr. Namboodiripad wanted to create a "wrong impression" that the State Council did not want to defeat the Congress and described the sentiments contained in the statement as "bogus."

The 32 members who were suspended were: Mr. M. Basavapunniah, Mr. P. Sundarayya, Mr. P. Ramamurty, Mr. A. K. Gopalan, Mr. Harekrishna Konar, Mr. Prpmode Das Gupta, Mr. Harkishen Singh Surjeet, Mr. T. Nagi Reddy, Mr. D. Venkateswara Rao, Mr. G. Bapanayya, Mr. C. H. Kanaran, Mr. V. S. Achuthanandan, Mr. Jyoti Basu, Mr. N. Sankariah, Mr. D. S. Tapiala, Mr. Sheo Kumar Misra, Mr. Mohan Punamia, Mr. M. Hanumantha Rao, Mr. N. Prasada Rao, Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad, Mr. A. V. Kunhambu, Mr. E. K. Nayanar, Mr. E. K. Impichibava, Mr. Muzafar Ahmad, Mr. Abdul Halim, Mr. Saroj Mukherjee, Mr. M. R. Venkataraman, Mr. K. Ramani, Mr. Jaggit Singh Lyalpuri, Dr. Bhag Singh, Mr. R. N. Upadhyaya and Mr. R. P. Saraf.

Resolutions On Kashmir Issue And Communal Riots:

In a resolution adopted on April 17, the CPI re-iterated "its firm conviction" that the question of Kashmir's accession to India had already been decided and that Kashmir was a part of India.

It expressed the hope that Sheikh Abdullah "would rise to the occasion and make his due contribution to strengthening the freedom and territorial integrity of our country and not fall into the imperialist trap of trying to detach Kashmir from India under any plea."

It said: "For the people of Kashmir, the solution of such problems as they are facing today lies not in a plebiscite or the formation of an independent State. The real solution lies in their standing shoulder to shoulder with the powerful democratic forces in the rest of the country and fighting for a better life."

In a resolution on the recent communal riots, the CPI appealed to "secular and democratic forces" in the country to build a common platform for defending secular and democratic traditions.

It said that certain organized groups had promoted communal hysteria against the minority community in India, taking advantage of the legitimate resentment and spontaneous excitement of the Indian people over communal outbursts in East Pakistan.

It said the rulers of Pakistan had resorted to violent attacks on the minority community "with the calculation that this will bring about a chain reaction in India and produce its effect on the situation in Kashmir." Communal outbursts in India would, therefore, serve the interests of the Pakistani rulers.

It expressed deep concern that in some places the working classes were carried away by communal hysteria and said that this would be disastrous for the unity of the working class.

It said that while the Central and State Governments had on the whole taken useful steps to check communal violence there had been negligence on the part of the authorities.

It expressed the hope that the talks between the Home Ministers of India and Pakistan would bring about an easing of the communal tension.

West Bengal Unit Disowns National Council:

The West Bengal unit of the CPI owed no allegiance to the Party's National Council any more, according to Mr. Promode Dasgupta, secretary of the West Bengal unit, in an interview in Calcutta on April 16.

He made it clear that his faction was in absolute majority in the State Council and did not recognize the leadership of Mr. Dange and his "stooges".

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

He added that for the time being the West Bengal Council would follow the line indicated in the statement issued by the 32 members suspended by the National Council. That they meant business was evident from a call given by the faction to the Party members to denounce the leadership of Mr. Dange and form a genuine party on the "ideals of Marx-Engels-Lenin and Stalin."

The call was published in the faction's weekly, Desh Hitaishi.

A spokesman for the "Centrists" said that the "Centrists" had vital differences both with the "Leftists" and the "Rightists".

Meanwhile, the Central Executive Committee of the CPI, which met in New Delhi on April 16 without any of its "Left" and "Centrist" members, considered group alignments in various States and decided to rush Mr. M. N. Govindan Nair and Mr. Bhowani Sen to Calcutta where the position, even according to the "Rightists", was not very favourable to them.

Mr. Rajeshwara Rao and Mr. Rajasekhar Reddy were sent to Andhra, and Mr. Achutha Menon and Mr. Kumaran to Kerala.

These emissaries of the "Right" faction would explain the Council's decision and their background and also assess the situation in the respective States. If necessary they would help in organizing "official" units in these States which will obey the directives of the party centre.

The Executive Committee also decided that the National Council should meet in New Delhi from May 12 to 22 to finalize various documents for the seventh party Congress scheduled to meet in Maharashtra in September.

Besides Mr. Dange, among those who attended the meeting, were Mr. Sohan Singh Josh, Mr. P. C. Joshi, Dr. Z. A. Ahmad, Mr. Yogendra Sharma, Mr. Bhowani Sen, Mr. H. K. Vyas, Mr. M. N. Govindan Nair and Mr. Rajeshwar Rao.

On behalf of those who have been suspended, Mr. P. Ramamurthi and Mr. M. Basavapunniah gave a rejoinder to the Council's resolution adopted on April 15.

They said: "The resolution shows that the Dange group is bent upon its factional methods and imposing its reformist line on the party, if it could."

Referring to the "voting" on the resolution, they said that of the 96 members who attended the meeting on April 10 and 11 (the 32 walked out on April 11), the Dange group could muster "just about 50 members when the resolution was passed—some more members having absented themselves on April 15."

"Even then they dared not record positive votes and abstentions. Serious action against one-third of the National Council and about half of the CEC is passed by less than 50 per cent of the members of the Council. Such a thing is unheard of in any party in the world."

[Officially, it was said on April 15 that only one member, Mr. Sohan Singh Josh, voted against the resolution. The number of those present and voting for the resolution was not given.]

E. Monopolies Commission Appointed: The appointment of a six-man Commission, headed by Mr. K. C. Das Gupta, a Supreme Court judge, to inquire into monopolies and concentration of power in the country was announced by the Central Finance Minister, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari, in the Lok Sabha on April 16. It has been asked to submit its report by October, 1965.

According to its terms of reference, the Commission will "inquire into the extent and effect of concentration of economic power in private hands and the prevalence of monopolistic and restrictive practices in important sectors of economic activity other than agriculture".

It has been asked to consider the matter with particular reference to, first, the factors responsible for such concentration and monopolistic and restrictive practices and second, their social and economic consequences and the extent to which they are detrimental to the common interest.

The Commission will also recommend legislative and other measures that it might consider necessary in the light of its findings. Such legislation should take into account the need to protect essential public interests and the procedure and agency for the enforcement of the new laws.

The Commission has not been precluded from reporting on any other matter concerning any aspect of the economy or functioning of the private sector and financial institutions that it considers need to be inquired into.

The other members of the Commission are Mr. G. R. Rajagopal, Officer on Special Duty in the Law Ministry; Mr. K. R. P. Aiyangar, Chairman of the Tariff Commission; Mr. R. C. Dutt, Chairman of the Company Law Board; Dr. I. G. Patel, a former Chief Adviser to the Government; and Mr. V. G. Plutonium Production: The Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, Dr. H. J. Bhabha, announced in Trombay on April 14 that India had joined a select half-a-dozen countries of the world to produce plutonium, the atomic fuel of the future generation of reactors.

He also announced the completion of its project Phoenix, a plant to extract plutonium from waste fuel elements—the "ash" from the three atomic reactors at Trombay.

He said the plant was one of the most sophisticated and advanced types, using techniques at the very frontiers of modern chemical technology.

The plant was designed and built at a cost of Rs. 3.6 crores entirely by Indian scientists and technicians and without any foreign collaboration. The cost was about half that of a Belgian plant of about the same capacity.

A group of Swedish scientists were expected in India shortly to study how Indian scientists were able to achieve this at such a low cost.

The new plant was designed to extract plutonium from 30 tons of uranium annually.

He said the Tarapur atomic power generating station, which would operate initially on imported enriched uranium, would subsequently be charged with plutonium from the new plant, making India less dependent on imported atomic fuels.

Besides India, there were only four other countries in the world operating similar plutonium plants. They were USA, Russia, Britain, and France. Norway had a small pilot plant.

Twelve West European countries were jointly constructing a plant in Belgium.

The chief project engineer, Mr. H. N. Sethna said the entire operation of extracting the plutonium was by remote control, using mechanical robots and glove boxes in cells with concrete walls of five feet thickness, because the material to be treated was highly radio-active.

The plant will begin production in June.

H. Measures To Crush Naga Hostiles: The Central Minister without Portfolio, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, told the Lok Sabha on April 15 that Indian troops in Nagaland, functioning under the operational command of the Army, were taking adequate steps to intercept and crush the Naga hostiles reported to be returning from East Pakistan with large quantities of arms and ammunition.

Earlier, answering the main question, Mrs. Lakshmi Menon, Minister of State in the External Affairs Ministry, said that a band of 850 Naga hostiles, including porters, were reported to be returning from East Pakistan carrying large quantities of arms through Burma.

The hostiles were reported to be skirting the eastern boundary of Manipur and were heading for Nagaland through Burmese territory.

Mrs. Menon said that, according to official information, the hostiles proceeded to East Pakistan in December, 1963 to collect the arms and they were reported to be "heavily armed."

Replying to questions as to the source of supply, she said the Government had no information as to who had supplied the arms but it was known that the hostiles had collected the arms from Pakistan.

I. Four Bridges Opened In Assam: The Central Minister for Transport, Mr. Raj Bahadur, on April 18 declared open four major concrete bridges on national highway No. 31—those across the Beki, Bhalukdoba, Manas and Ali rivers.

The Chief Minister of Assam, Mr. B. P. Chaliha, presided.

The four bridges, whose aggregate length is about 3,743 feet, have cost Rs. 1.49 crores. Another Rs. 1.18 crores has been spent on guide bunds and other protective works, for the rivers which these bridges span are notoriously capricious in shifting their course.

With the opening of these bridges, the easternmost section of national highway No. 31, i.e., the 186 miles between Baxirhat and Gauhati, is fully bridged and ferry crossing is no longer necessary. Other minor bridges on this section will be replaced by stronger structures during the current financial year.

Calcutta road operators will specially welcome the opening of these bridges to traffic because their trucks and consignments to Gauhati used to be held up often for days, at the ferry crossing at Jogighopa which they can now avoid. Each day 50 or 60 trucks used to wait at Jogighopa to be ferried across.

National highway No. 31 takes off from Barhi on the Grand Trunk Road in Bihar, crosses the Ganges at Mokameh and the Brahmaputra at Amingaon near Gauhati. It also has access, via Barauni in north Bihar, to national highways No. 24 and 28 and affords direct road communication between Delhi and Dibrugarh, via Bareilly, Lucknow and Gorakhpur.

The Government of Bihar has also started work on a Rs. 21-crore project to connect national highways No. 28 with 31 between Gorakhpur and Barauni. The progress will involve bridges over the Gandak and the Kamala.

J. Jhund-Kandla Rail Link: The Central Railways Minister, Mr. H. C. Dasappa disclosed at a news conference in New Delhi on April 17 that a decision had been taken to build a broad-gauge line from Jhund to Kandla Port.

Jhund is already linked with Ahmedabad. Kandla is now served by a metre-gauge line.

Construction of the line, which will be 233 km long and pass through Dharangadhra, Halvad and Malia, would be taken up after the next Monsoon and be completed by 1967-68 at a cost of Rs. 14.5 crores. No foreign exchange would be necessary.

Mr. Dasappa said that the line would cross the Rann of Kutch for which purpose a 10-km causeway with a 1,000-metre bridge would have to be built. This would test the Railways' engineering skill and ingenuity.

Mr. Dasappa said that the position about goods traffic having become "happy and comfortable", the Railways were devoting their attention to lessening overcrowding in trains. He announced that six new trains would be introduced in different parts of India in a few months.

New UP-Bihar Rail Link:

The Vice-President, Dr. Zakir Hussain inaugurated on April 19 a new railway line connecting Churk in Uttar Pradesh with Garhwa Road in Bihar.

He said that the Railways, which constituted the largest nationalized undertaking, were playing a leading part as the spearhead of India's "huge programme" of industrialization and national reconstruction. The Railways had geared themselves well for this tremendous task.

The 63-k.m. line, constructed at a cost of Rs. 21.33 crores, will open up the hitherto under-developed areas in Uttar Pradesh and Bihar rich in minerals and also provide an alternative route for movement of coal and other traffic to western, central and northern parts of the country avoiding Moghal Sarai.

K. Kalinga Prize For 1963: The Deputy Director-General of UNESCO, Dr. M. Adiseshiah announced in New Delhi on April 17 that Mr. Jagjit Singh, an Indian science writer, had been selected by the international jury appointed by UNESCO for the Kalinga Prize award for 1963 for popularizing science.

Mr. Singh, who is adviser to the Railway Ministry on operational research, is the first Indian and the first Asian to receive this award.

The Prize, consisting of £1,000, was established by Mr. B. P. Patnaik, former Chief Minister of Orissa, in 1951.

Dr. Adiseshiah told newsmen that in popularizing science Mr. Jagjit Singh had concentrated most of his efforts to improve understanding of the fundamental theories of cosmology, Einstein's concepts of relativity and space-time astrophysical theories. In 1959, he wrote a well-known book, "Mathematical Ideas, Their Nature and Daily Use". This was followed in 1961 by "Great Ideas and Theories of Modern Cosmology".

L. Prohibition Inquiry Committee's Report: The report of the study team on prohibition was submitted to the Planning Commission on April 17. It will be sent to the State Chief Ministers after a preliminary discussion by the Commission.

The team was appointed in April, 1963 to suggest measures for effective implementation of the prohibition programme.

Mr. Justice Tek Chand, former judge of the Punjab High Court, was the chairman of the team. Other members were Mr. L. M. Shrikant, Secretary, Gandhi Smarak Nidhi, and Dr. A. M. Khusro of the Institute of Economic Growth.

The study team found that the country's annual drinking bill was Rs. 146 crores. Illicitly distilled liquor accounted for Rs. 52 crores.

The team in its 577-page report suggested an "integrated set of practical measures" to reduce illicit traffic in liquor and combat other malpractices.

The suggestions include: (1) new scientific appliances for detecting inebriety; (2) effective steps against corruption; (3) removal of glamour of drinking among officials and people of higher social strata; (4) avoidance of misuse of spirituous medicinal, toilet and other preparations; (5) prevention of misuse of molasses; (6) economic containment of illicit activity and reduction of the profit margin of those engaged in such activity; and (7) conditional and controlled liberalization of toddy in certain areas.

If these recommendations were accepted, the team said, a committee should be set up after a suitable time to assess the implementation and progress of the integrated programme.

Referring to the financial aspect of the prohibition programme, the team said that the total revenue loss of all dry areas "is perhaps Rs. 40.1 crores and the cost of prohibition enforcement approximately Rs. 5.4 crores." This loss had been offset to the extent of Rs. 31 crores with the decline in the drinking bill in the dry areas. Were the drinking bill to be cut further, the whole loss could be wiped off.

The team estimated a loss of Rs. 80 crores or so if the "wet" States were to introduce total prohibition by 1975-76. But it believed the loss would be more than offset by certain increases in sales-tax, luxury tax and Central excise duties.

It suggested amendments to certain laws for effective enforcement of prohibition. It also recommended the enactment of new provisions. The lacunae in the existing laws were pointed out.

As regards the administrative set-up in the States, the team was of the opinion that the enforcement of laws should, in the main, rest with the police and not with any separate prohibition force.

The report also dealt with certain other subjects like diversion and misuse of duty-free imported liquor intended for Embassies and missions in India and foreign visitors and prohibition.

It also contained a separate chapter on the recent changes in the prohibition policy in Maharashtra.

M. Dyarchy For Hill Districts Of Assam—Proposal Accepted By Hill Leaders' Conference: The Hill Leaders' Conference, which has been demanding a separate State consisting of the four hill districts of Assam for the last three years, has now accepted the Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru's offer of dyarchy, which promises autonomy for the districts but within the State of Assam.

At present, the hill districts have a certain amount of autonomy at the district level and are called autonomous districts. But under Mr. Nehru's offer they will have autonomy at the regional level. The autonomy will apply to all the hill districts.

A resolution, adopted by the 12th session of the Hill Leaders' Conference at Tura on April 18 said that the Corterence "feels that the Prime Minister's offer of full autonomy be given a fair trial". It requested Mr. Nehru "to proceed with the appointment of a commission to work out the details for the implementation of his offer and his various other assurances to the hill people."

The acceptance, however, included a proviso that "if the commission's report falls short of the Prime Minister's outline of full autonomy and his various other assurances, the Conference reserves the right to revise its decision".

The following are the salient features of the Prime Minister's offer:

The objective to be kept in view is full autonomy for the hill districts, subject to the preservation of the unity of the State of Assam. Cabinet Government of the accepted form should remain and there should be collective and joint responsibility to the Assam Assembly. There should be a Cabinet Minister in charge of the administration of the hill areas, assisted by a Minister of State and one or two Deputy Ministers.

In the appointment of the Ministers for the hill areas, the Chief Minister will be guided by the recommendation of the members of the Legislative Assembly from the hill areas. A list of certain subjects, such as, education, agriculture, horticulture, forests, health and possibly, road, will be drawn up and the administration of these subjects in the hill areas will be entirely under the charge of the Cabinet Minister for the hill areas and his junior Ministers.

There will be a separate wing in the Assam State Secretariat for the hill areas. Full executive powers will be given to the group of hill Ministers for the administration of the allocated subjects. The hill Ministers will have authority to determine the language or languages to be used in the hill wing of the Secretariat and other offices in the hill areas dealing with the subjects allocated for separate administration.

At the beginning of each financial year, a separate budget allocation for the hill Ministers will be made. This will take the form of an area budget under the subjects meant for separate administration.

The hill Ministers will have complete powers of expenditure control over the allocations for the departments to be separately administered. The hill wing of the Secretariat will have its own separate financial adviser for its expenditure control.

The legislators of the autonomous hill districts will form a regional committee of the Assam State Assembly. All proposals relating to legislation concerning the hill areas will be referred by the State Assembly to the regional committee. This committee may also initiate legislative proposals. Normally the recommendations of the regional commitee will be accepted by the legislature. In the event of a disagreement between the State Assembly and the regional committee, the matter will be referred to the Governor who may take decisions after obtaining directions from the President, where necessary.

The portion of the annual financial statement insofar as it relates to the hill areas shall be referred by the Assembly to the regional committee for consideration.

There will be a common high court for the whole of Assam. The judicial set-up in each of the autonomous districts will be as provided in the Sixth Schedule.

INDONESIA

A. Dr. R. Subandrio On Relations With Britain: In an interview with The Hague correspondent of The Times of London, reported in the newspaper on April 5, the Indonesian Foreign Minister, Dr. R. Subandrio, then in the Dutch capital for talks with Dutch officials, answered questions relating to his Government's foreign relations.

He said he was happy that there were no longer any political problems between Indonesia and the Netherlands. But he still saw Britain as a potential danger in South-East Asia. The late Mr. J. F. Kennedy had understood much better that President Sukarno of Indonesia had found new conceptions "which were relevant to the situation in our part of the world."

Some of the questions put to Dr. Subandrio and his answers were:

How far have personal animosities between Dr. Sukarno and Tengku Abdul Rehman (the Malaysian Prime Minister) affected the confrontation? "Not much. We consider that in a personal meeting Abdul Rehman was always amenable and receptive to our ideas, but when he returned to Kuala Lumpur everything remained the same and nothing new appeared."

Have opinions been revised in Djakarta about the wishes of the people of Borneo (Sarawak and Sabah) or is it still believed that they are against Malaysia? "There is no reason for a revision in Djakarta of the opinions of the peoples of Borneo for it certainly has not been proved that they are pro-Malaysian."

What is the policy of sending in guerrillas expected to achieve? "The guerrillas are sent to support the struggle for independence. The result is that the people of Borneo become more militant."

What damage is it thought Malaysia could do to Indonesia? "Malaysia could be used by outside Powers as a means to subvert and encircle Indonesia."

Is it thought in Djakarta that the revolt of Mr. A. M. Azahari, the Brunei rebel leader (see page 4978) represented the feeling of many in Borneo or only of the Malays in Brunei? "The revolt of Azahari represented the feeling of many people in the whole of North Borneo. It is for these people to decide what Azahari's position will be in the future."

In what sense is the British base now a threat to Indonesia when there were never any protests against it before Malaysia? "It is not a real threat to Indonesia, but it may delay unnecessarily the solution of the Malaysian problem and therefore it increases tensions."

Is it thought in Indonesia that British officials in Kuala Lumpur or in the Malayan armed forces make this a neo-colonial Government? "This is so. And it cannot be otherwise because the Malay leaders have only political power. The economic and military powers are in the hands of the British."

If so, why was not the same attitude not taken to India when for at least 10 years after independence British officials stayed on and British commanders served with Indian forces? "The great difference between Malaya and India was that all real power was in Indian hands. All important decisions were taken by the Indian leaders and not by the British officials and commanders in the Indian forces."

On what terms, if any, could the confrontation policy be ended? "The confrontation policy will be ended if the Manila Agreement is implemented. The outcome of this implementation is not important, but it should be established. At the moment they are making a farce of the Manila Agreement to humiliate us. The situation would change completely if a serious start was made on the implementation."

Dr. Subandrio, who left Holland on April 4 for talks with President de Gaulle, stated that all differences between Holland and Indonesia were now a thing of the past. There must, however, be a period of growth in the development of the relations between the Netherlands and Indonesia. "We do not want to create false illusions."

An exchange of visits by Queen Juliana and President Sukarno would be the climax of the new relations, but this topic had been hardly discussed during his stay.

Dr. Mohammed Jawad Al-Abousi, the Minister of Finance, stated that the budgetary allocations amounted to ID145 million. This Budget was considered the biggest in the history of Iraq. It was ID18 million higher than the previous year's. He added that the most important increases included in the Budget covered the following items:

(1) Allocation for the Ministry of Education. These were increased to ID28 million. The increase, however, was meant to meet the expenses of expanding the primary, secondary and vocational education and training.

(2) Baghdad University's grant was increased from ID3,250,000 to ID4,000,000, besides an amount of ID2,000,000 derived from allocation of the Economic Plan to be added to the allotments of the regular items in the University budget.

(3) Allocations of the Higher Body for the Agrarian Reforms were increased from ID2,250,000 to ID4,250,000, in addition to ID1,750,000 derived from the allocations of the Economic Plan to be added to the allotments of the regular items in the Body's budget. This was meant to expedite the implementation of the Agrarian Reform Law and the various irrigation projects for the purpose of increasing the agricultural production.

(4) Increasing the allocations of the Ministry of Economy; two Directorates for importation and exportation will be opened in Mosul and Basrah to facilitate the importation movement. The necessary allocations were also made to the Ministry's budget to meet the expenses of the Arab Economic Unity Board.

(5) Allocations of the Directorate-General of Social Services were increased for the purpose of expanding the Centres of Social Welfare. Special funds were also allocated to increase the capital of the Co-operative Bank.

(6) Allocations for the Ministry of Justice were increased, to help open new courts in remote areas where no courts exist at present.

(7) Allocations of the Ministry of Health were increased largely, in order to secure wider free medical service for the citizens.

(8) Allocations of the Ministry of Agriculture were increased. The additions were actually made for combating vegetable blights and animal diseases, and to encourage agricultural researches for the purpose of improving and increasing agricultural and animal production.

(9) The sum of ID1 million was added to the Estate Bank's capital. Another ID250,000 was allocated to cover the administrative expenses of the National Oil Company.

JAPAN

A. Aid To South-East Asia: Japan is trying to increase her share of contributions towards the economic development of South-East Asian countries through a new foreign aid policy in which she intends to spend one per cent of her national income.

Under the new policy, direct and "project" loans will be increased in preference to deferred payment exports.

While foreign aid operations amounted to $330 million (about one per cent of her national income) in 1961, the amount declined to $280 million (0.66 per cent) in 1962. In 1963, it was estimated at $270 million.

The decline is due to two reasons. One is that, insofar as deferred payment exports are concerned, Japan cannot compete with Western industrial countries which are capable of offering much easier terms. The other is that developing nations consider deferred payment exports more as export promotion measures on the part of industrial nations than as aid.

The Foreign Ministry has stressed that the new formulae to be drafted would be more workable and acceptable to developing nations as a pattern of economic co-operation.

The Ministry is also considering extension to other South-East Asian countries direct loan facilities similar to those extended to India and Pakistan under the aegis of the World Bank over a period of 15 years with an annual interest rate of 5.75 per cent.

The new plan also envisages promotion of technical and combined technical and monetary aids for "self-sustaining" economies.

Stop-gap loans may also be available to countries who have a favourable trade balance with Japan. Such loans are intended as deterrents against the invocation of Article 35 of GATT and in order to encourage export industries.

B. Mr. G. Pompidou's Visit: The French Prime Minister, Mr. Georges Pompidou, visited Tokyo in the second week of April.

His talks with Japanese leaders during the official visit were largely concerned with the implications of French recognition of China. French sources said Japanese misgivings were allayed by assurances that France would furnish no nuclear aid to Peking.

Mr. Pompidou and Mr. Couve de Murville, the Foreign Minister, also sought to convince their hosts of the wisdom of French policy for the neutralization of South-East Asia, a policy that is now seen to be in open conflict with the present regime in South Viet-Nam, whose Foreign Minister, Dr. Phan Huy Quat, was said to have been sent to the S-EATO ministerial meeting at Manila to seek an explanation of the French position from Mr. Couve de Murville.

News Conference:

On April 9, Mr. Pompidou told newsmen in Tokyo that it was necessary for France to recognize China because of the ideological dispute between Peking and Moscow.

He said that before the split it was possible to know what was going on in both countries. But because of the split it had become necessary for France to send her own representatives to Peking to understand the situation. Recognition did not mean that France would force any other country to follow her example.

France was "very glad" that Japan was considering her position and taking a wise policy towards Peking. France understood her position, and was glad she was standing her ground.

Answering a question, he said he did not think France had broken the Western alliance by her recognition of Peking. The world situation was changing, and with disputes in the communist bloc and in Europe a new situation was arising. While Moscow's policies and principles were crumbling, why could the West not adopt a new policy?

He added: "We are in alliance with the West and if necessary will give aid to fight against the common enemy." Asked if France would take the initiative to have China seated in United Nations, he said: "We are not taking any initiative on this problem. The fact that we have recognized the People's Republic of China has nothing to do with this question."

He said France would not sell nuclear weapons, either for cash or deferred payments, to China. If France could influence China, she would do as much as she could with regard to the defence problem.

Asked about the suggestion for neutralizing South-East Asia, he said France wanted to sound out Peking on its attitude. Neutralization, particularly of South and North Viet-Nam, could only be brought about by complete agreement between China and the United States.

He returned to Paris on April 13.

A. Prince Souvanna Phouma's Visit To Viet-Nam (DR) And China: The Prime Minister, Prince

Souvanna Phouma, paid visits to the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam and China in the first fortnight of April.

Laotian sources attached much significance to the visit in the context of the Premier's repeated plea against foreign interference in the internal affairs of the Kingdom and continued reported support to the Pathet Lao faction by China and North Viet-Nam.

His visit to Hanoi lasted from April 2 to 4. At the end of the talks with Viet-Namese leaders, a joint communique was issued.

It said that the only correct way to improve the Laotian situation was to ensure full implementation of the 1962 Geneva Agreement and to restore the normal activities of the National Union Government in Vientiane.

It said: "The Laotian party declared that it is resolved to carry out fully the 1962 Geneva Agreements on Laos, realize national harmony, lead Laos to the path of genuine peace and neutrality, and develop friendly relations with the neighbouring countries and other countries on the basis of equality and respect of one another's independence and sovereignty. The two parties express confidence that the restoration of the normal activities of the Laotian National Union Government will create conditions for the Kingdom of Laos to develop the building of its economy and culture with the assistance—with no political and military conditions attached—from friendly countries, including the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam and other countries which signed the 1962 Geneva Agreement on Laos.

"The two parties solemnly referring to the Joint Statement of President Ho Chi-Minh and King Savang Vatthana on March 12, 1963 re-affirm that they will 'devote all their efforts to consolidating and developing the relations of friendship and fraternal co-operation in all fields with a view to stepping up the peaceful construction in both countries'. The two parties pledge to guarantee normal activities for the representative organs, and protect legitimate and legal interests of the residents of each country living in the other country. The two parties hold that the good-neighbourly relations between the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam and the Kingdom of Laos are strictly necessary to the benefit of the two countries.

"The two parties hold that it is necessary to ensure the strict implementation of the 1954 Geneva Agreements on Viet-Nam; Viet-Nam must be peacefully reunified in accordance with the spirit of these Agreements.

"The two parties show great concern over the present tension in Indo-China and many other parts of South-East Asia. They unanimously hold that the peoples in Indo-China and South-East Asia have the right to decide their own fate and no foreign country can be allowed to interfere. The two parties hold that it is necessary to convene as early as possible a Geneva-type conference as proposed by Head of State Prince Norodom Sihanouk and declare to be ready to participate in this conference."

Visit To China:

From Hanoi, Prince Souvanna Phouma went to Peking for talks with Chinese leaders.

On April 7 he said he was confident of Chinese help in restoring peace in Laos. He said the Chinese leaders had informed him that they had no intention of linking the situation in Laos with the war in Viet-Nam.

According to him, the attitude manifested by the Chinese Government during the three days of the talks would contribute to a settlement at a forthcoming summit meeting of leaders of the three contending factions in Laos.

He indicated that he had sought Chinese assistance in obtaining withdrawal of North Viet-Nam troops from Laos. "We are very glad to note that the Government of the People's Republic of China has no intention of linking the Laotian question with either the question of Viet-Nam or that of Cambodia. This is a candid and a wise attitude. I wish that such a position will ultimately prevail among all signatories to the 1962 Geneva accords."

The Chinese Premier, Mr. Chou En-lai, led a powerful delegation and conducted two long sessions with his Laotian counterpart during Prince Souvanna Phouma's stay in Peking.

The People's Daily welcomed the Prince with an editorial and front-paged a picture of the "Laotian guest of honour".

A China-Laos joint communique said the Chinese "hope in all sincerity that the three political forces in Laos will get united and peacefully settle their questions free from all foreign interference."

Returns Home:

Returning to Vientiane on April 12, Prince Souvanna Phouma said he had told the Chinese and North Viet-Namese leaders that he would resign if the Geneva accords guaranteeing Laotian neutrality continued to be violated by some of its signatories.

Before leaving on the tour, he had said the purpose of his visit was to ask the two countries to respect Laotian neutrality and stop interfering in the internal affairs of Laos.

"It seems that North Viet-Nam is ready to help me solve the Laotian problem" and "our stay in Peking, it seems, was also fruitful".

He hoped that his talks with the Right-wing leader, General Phoumi Nosavan, and the Pathet Lao chief, Prince Souphanouvong, on April 17 in the Plain of Jars on the Laotian crisis would show concrete results.

MALDIVES

A. British Air-Strip Put Out Of Action: Maldivians in the group of Indian Ocean islands round the capital Male put out of action an air-strip on the island of Hulule, through which the British representative, Mr. Arthingon-Davy, receives supplies, according to a report in the London Times on April 6.

According to reports from Ceylon, quoting Mr. Abdul Sattar, the Maldivian representative in Colombo, food had to be parachuted to Mr. Arthington-Davy on April 4.

The Maldivians' action was caused by their anger at alleged British procrastination.

The tension followed a call by Mr. Arthington-Davy on April 4 on Mr. Ibrahim Nasir, the Maldivian Prime Minister, who repeated a Maldivian demand for complete independence.

At present the islands are an internally self-governing British protectorate—in fact, if not in name—under an Agreement of February 14, 1960, under which Britain obtained the right to re-establish an airfield at Gan island and to establish a radio station on Hitadoo island.

In September, 1963 Mr. Duncan Sandys, the Commonwealth Secretary, visited Maldives and it was agreed that the British Government would in effect back the Maldivian Government in a long-standing dispute with rebellious inhabitants of the Addu Atoll, who were, however, promised a full amnesty, for having set up a "Suvadive Republic" of their own. The British Government obtained facilities for the BBC to operate a relay station on Hitadoo Island.

Since then, according to the Commonwealth Relations Office, the British Government had fully carried out its part of the Agreement, providing for the re-establishment of the authority of the Maldivian Government in the Addu Atoll.

Evidently to the surprise and chagrin of Mr. Nasir, however, Britain removed Mr. Afif, the leader of the Addu revolt, at his own request to the Seychelles. This appeared to have been used by Mr. Nasir "as a pretext for accusations of double-dealing."

According to the Commonwealth Relations Office, delay in carrying out the 1963 Agreement and setting up a BBC relay station was due to the fact that the Maldivian Government had not submitted proposals as a basis for discussion. Mr. Nasir maintained that pending independence he would not entertain direct discussions with Mr. Arthington-Davy. He also declined an invitation to come to London for discussions, or to send a deputy.

The British Government wants a settlement so that the air staging post on Gan island can continue to be operated. The Maldivian Government wants a settlement, so that it may fully consolidate its rule over the islands, and so that the economic benefits from the British Agreement may be used for the good of Maldivians as a whole.

There had been repeated damage in recent months to RAF property at the air-strip on Hulule island, near Male, and latterly to the airstrip itself. As a result, no landings can be made at Hulule until repairs to equipment and the air-strip have been effected. At their meeting on April 4, Mr. Nasir told Mr. Arthington-Davy that he could give no assurance that sabotage would cease, and he said repairs would have to wait until "conditions improve". This means that the RAF must supply Mr. Arthington-Davy by air drop.

The British Government considers that there should be no difficulty about reaching a mutually satisfactory agreement with the Maldivian Government about revision of the 1960 Agreement.

On the question of Mr. Afif, the one-time leader of the Addian revolt, the British Government's view is that he is free to decide his own future. The question of his return to the Maldives is a matter entirely for him and the Maldivian Government.

The Maldivian Government has accused the British Government of procrastination on the issues outstanding between them. Mr. Arthington-Davy in fact asked for an interview with Mr. Nasir on January 11 and again on March 8. He received no reply to either request. It was only after Mr. Sandys wrote to Mr. Nasir about this that he agreed to see Mr. Arthington-Davy on April 4.

Demand For Withdrawal Of Liaison Officer:

A Colombo message on April 13 said that the Maldivian Government had demanded the withdrawal of the British Liaison Officer in Addu Atoll, Mr. Rounthwaite, within one week from April 11 consequent to his activities during the last few weeks "directed against the interests of the Maldivian Government."

The Government also protested against the incident in which "the British frigate, Leopard, had harassed one of our (Maldivian) fishing boats about ten miles out of Male" on April 10.

It warned the British that if such acts were repeated the Maldivian Government would be forced to terminate the Agreement under which the British had established an RAF base on Gan island of the Addu Atoll.

The demand for the withdrawal of Mr. Rounthwaite and the protest were conveyed by the Maldivian Home Minister, Mr. Ibrahim Rasheed, in two separate letters to the British representative in Maldive islands, Mr. Arthington-Davy.

The letters were released to the Press in Colombo by the Maldivian Government representative, Mr. A. Sattar on April 12.

Mr. Rasheed, in his first letter, said: "I have to state with regret that the activities of Mr. Rounthwaite at Gan during the last few weeks have been directed against the interests of the Maldivian Government, in particular, consequent to which relations between the Governments of Britain and the Maldive Islands is affected adversely. As such, his further stay in this country has become undesirable."

The letter protesting against the incident on April 10, in which the British frigate was involved, pointed out that such acts were contrary to the Agreement between the two Governments. It quoted the Agreement concerning the use of Gan island for an RAF base, and said that under it the British had agreed that the "activities of Her Majesty's force will in no way interfere with the legitimate fishing of the local inhabitants in any part of the Maldive Islands."

"Therefore, if such acts are repeated the Maldivian Government would be forced to terminate the Gan agreement."

MONGOLIA (Outer)

A. Demarcation Of Border With China: A cryptic report by the Hsinhua News Agency on April 3 announced the arrival in Peking of a Mongolian Boundary Demarcation Commission.

Reports said that China and Mongolia had completed the work of demarcating the long boundary between their two countries.

The Hsinhua despatch merely stated that the 15-member Mongolian delegation headed by Mr. D. Bata, the chief delegate, had arrived in Peking on April 1 and had been welcomed by members of the Chinese delegation in the Joint Boundary Demarcation Commission headed by the chief delegate, Mr. Lu Ching.

Mr. Lu Ching entertained the Mongolian officials to a banquet on April 2.

Although Hsinhua gave no reason for the sudden arrival in Peking of the Mongolian Commission, the most logical explanation was that the two countries had completed the work of physically demarcating the boundary with markers on the basis of the Boundary Treaty signed in Peking on December 26, 1962. Details of this Boundary Treaty, however, have never been made public.

NEPAL

A. Chinese Intrusion In Ganesh Himal Range—Report Refuted: A Nepalese Foreign Office spokesman on April 15 refuted a report of Chinese intrusion in the Ganesh Himal region which is in north-east Nepal.

The spokesman said the Government had good communications with the region in which the border with Tibet had been surveyed and delineated with pillars in accordance with the Sino-Nepalese Boundary Treaty.

The Ganesh Himal range falls between 85 degrees and 85.15 degrees longitude.

Referring to a report that Lord Shaftesbury had given up his expedition because of a Chinese intrusion in the Ganesh Himal region, the spokesman explained that Lord Shaftesbury wanted to climb Yangra Himal, which is a peak on the Sino-Nepalese border in the Ganesh Himal range, while the main Ganesh Himal peak is well within Nepalese territory. Lord Shaftesbury wanted to follow Lambert's 1955 route to the north of Chilme river, which is now, after the border demarcation, in Tibetan territory. Lord Shaftesbury did not want to follow alternative routes which were difficult and longer.

Lord Shaftesbury and his team left Khatmandu on April 13 to climb some peaks in the Langtang range for which he was given permission after he abandoned the Ganesh Himal venture.

PAKISTAN

A. Indirect Elections To Legislative Assemblies And Office Of President—Bill Passed: The entire Opposition in the National Assembly walked out on March 21 as an official Bill providing for indirect elections to the office of President and to the legislative assemblies was moved by the Law Minister, Mr. Khurshid Ahmed.

Before the walk-out, the Opposition leader, Mr. Mohammed Yusuf Khattak, said it was "the blackest day" in the history of Pakistan. "People have been totally disenfranchized."

The Opposition comprises the Awami League, National Awami Party, Islamic Democratic Front and the independents.

They, however, returned after the House had granted leave amidst shouts of "go back" from the Government benches.

The Bill was the final rejection of the recommendations of the Franchise Commission set up by the Government and was based on the majority report of a Special Committee of the House.

Earlier as Chaudhury Zahur Elahi, secretary-general of the ruling Party and chairman of the House Special Committee presented its recommendations, the Opposition shouted "hired mules, down down."

In the debate on March 27, Mr. Ghulam Gilani criticized the Government for its various "acts of oppression and repression" and depriving the people of their elementary right of citizenship.

[The Electoral College Bill seeks to constitute an 8,000-strong electoral college against about 50 million adult voters to elect a President and different legislatures.]

Mr. Gilani warned the Government that if it persisted in the passage of the Bill after its long list of oppressive and repressive acts, disaster "is ahead and is coming soon". He said that during the last two years many political leaders had been arrested, several newspapers suppressed, students lathi-charged and arrested.

He said the Government Bill depriving the people of their basic rights had thrown them into mourning. They had to tolerate the misgovernment by "money-mad and power-hungry men". The people were in "anguish and distress".

Stating that it was his duty to awaken the people to assert their rights, he warned the Government that "furious mobs are waiting with clenched fists and bloodshot eyes to assert their rights." He said this Bill was another Elective Bodies Disqualification Order promulgated to disqualify and discredit a number of persons from holding any public office. But now this Bill disqualified millions of people unlike the previous Order which disqualified only specified persons.

He said that the life of the existing Assembly had been restricted to three years and not its full term of five years simply to keep out of the Assembly persons whose Martial Law-imposed disqualification term would expire only after the next elections in the middle of 1965. Could there be "greater fraudulent transaction in politics and stabbing in the back?" When the Speaker, Mr. Fazlul Qader Chaudhury, asked him not to mention the late Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy's name lest it might lead to controversy, he retorted: "To rule his name out of order in the House is to repudiate our political heritage."

He said the Government leaders had argued that the future would not be safe in the hands of illiterate people and direct elections could not be had on adult franchise basis. But he asked if an illiterate person could be depended on to defend the country and its integrity, why could not he be trusted to look after its future?

Under the system proposed by the Government it would be easy for any Assembly member to resort to corruption and distribute patronage to a small electorate of about 500.

He likened the imposition of military rule in 1958 to the British conquering the country over a century ago.

He said they were being asked "to legalize lawlessness and proclaim usurpers of rights as custodians of law." But he warned that struggle for freedom would continue till it was achieved.

Evefy Opposition member in the National Assembly, including the leader of the Opposition, Mr. Yusuf Khattak, on April 2 asked the Government to bring about political settlement and unity in the internal forces of the country so that the entire nation could "successfully" solve the Kashmir issue.

Disturbed at the unexpected trend in the debate on the subject which had always commanded unanimity, the Speaker, Mr. Fazlul Qader Chaudhury, inquired of the Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto whether he would like to address the House in a secret session about developments in regard to the Kashmir issue. On Mr. Bhutto replying that he was in the Speaker's hands, Mr. Chaudhury took the sense of the House and called for a secret sitting. Mr. Bhutto spoke for about half-an-hour at the secret sitting.

These exchanges took place when the House discussed an adjournment motion moved by Mr. Qamarul Hasan on "India's moves to integrate Kashmir with the rest of India."

Replying to the debate, which was talked out, Mr. Bhutto repeated his recent statement that India was on the run in Kashmir and said they would see that India was "thrown out of Kashmir by the combined efforts of the people of Pakistan and Kashmir."

He charged the Opposition leader with doing disservice to the country by impliedly admitting that Kashmir was part of India which they were trying to integrate more completely and said the Government's position was that Kashmir, which had been under "Indian and Brahmin rule" for the last 15 years, was not part of India.

He seemed to be at pains to ridicule India's Mr. M. C. Chagla for taking "a judge's look" at a political problem and said that not being a politician Minister like himself, Mr. Chagla was not able to appreciate the "political reality." He did not have the sixth sense to understand the aspirations of the people. But the Speaker pulled up Mr. Bhutto, saying: "Come to your own sense."

As Mr. Hussain Mansoor (Awami League) said that "Mr. Bhutto returned empty-handed from the recent Security Council meeting and he could not refute the Indian Education Minister, Mr. M. C. Chagla," the Speaker pulled up the member, saying: "Kindly stop there. It is not a matter to play about."

The Speaker appealed to the member to realize the implications of the debate and what they said in the House. He warned that what they said in the House should be "consistent with the security and prestige of the country and decency and decorum of the House."

When another Opposition Awami League member, Mr. Qamaruzzama asked whether the Government should not give the people of Pakistan their right of franchise before they asked for the right of self-determination for the Kashmiris, Mr. Bhutto jumped up in his seat and chastised the member, saying that the trend of his argument "is highly injurious to national interests."

He said what was relevant was not whether India was a democratic country and Pakistan was not, but "the demand of the people of Kashmir for right of self-determination."

When Mr. Khair Bakhsh Marri said the Government never bothered to keep its commitments in internal matters, while they asked other countries to keep their commitments, Mr. Bhutto again interrupted to say that the members' statement might prejudice the outcome of the debate.

The Speaker of the National Assembly, Mr. Chowdhury, on April 6 asked Mr. Ramizuddin Ahmed, a former Central Minister, to avoid reference to the success of adult franchise elections in India.

Mr. Ramizuddin Ahmad, from East Pakistan, who was opposing the Electoral College Bill during the consideration stage, asked why adult franchise elections could not succeed in Pakistan when they had in India.

The Speaker told the member there was "no need to refer to India". He also warned the member against referring to possible trend towards dictatorship because of this Bill. He said such references were derogatory to what he called "sovereignty" of the House.

Mr. Ramizuddin Ahmad said the Bill was devised to eliminate the Opposition from East Pakistan which had successfully exposed during the last two years the injustice that had been committed on that Wing.

He said while the Opposition had committed a mistake by entering the Assembly in the hope of getting the Constitution amended, the Government had "duped" the people by raising their expectations by appointing the Franchise Commission. If the Opposition had not entered the Assembly, the country would have got adult franchise elections by now.

He challenged the Government to seek the people's verdict on the question of franchise and warned it that whatever it might do now, the people would wrest all their rights from the Government.

Mr. Khair Bakhsh Marri from Baluchistan said that before the people, in different regions of what was now West Pakistan, gave support to the movement for Pakistan Mr. Jinnah and other leaders had given a clear understanding that the regions would be given full autonomy and their cultural identity respected. But now certain sections of society "by intrigue and conspiracy" had deprived the people of these rights.

He said that worse than this deprivation, the people were being even denied the chance of free discussion. The Press had been gagged. Free public discussions were being barred. The Government resorted to shooting down of the people as in Baluchistan and East Pakistan.

Mr. K. Mohammed Yousuf (Islamic Democratic Front, East Pakistan) said on April 7 that the Government had by its arguments in defence of indirect election only confirmed the views of Jawaharlal Nehru, Sardar Patel and other Indian leaders that the Pakistan movement was only an emotional issue.

The Government, he said, had argued that a large number of people had participated and voted for Pakistan. They should not be put forward to demand adult franchise. Pakistan was then an emotional issue with the people and in the practical circumstances of today, people had to eschew emotion and view adult franchise issue from a different angle.

Mr. Sohrab Hussain (Opposition, East Pakistan) said after 17 years of independent existence, the Government had declared the people of Pakistan to be politically bankrupt. It would have been better to have continued under alien rule even with the limited rights they gave than be under the dictatorship of today. Independence won by the people had been snatched away from them in October, 1958. "We don't want this sort of Pakistan".

He said that foreign countries were giving only lip sympathy to Pakistan's demand for right of self-determination for the people of Kashmir, only because they knew very well that people in the country had no similar rights. This Bill was confirming dictatorship already existing.

Mr. Qamruzzaman (Awami League) said the Bill was aimed at bringing about and preserving stability in the country. But where was the stability in the country except at the point of bayonets, lathi charge and tear gas? he asked.

He contended that the National Assembly was not competent to decide the mode of election and franchise and demanded that it should be referred to the people at large.

Changes In Bill:

Winding up the debate on April 7, the Law Minister, Mr. Khurshid Ahmed, announced two changes in the Electoral College Bill.

By one amendment, husbands of women who are Government servants would be entitled to contest the elections. However, wives of Government servants would continue to be debarred from seeking election to any elective body. Another significant concession related to persons detained under preventive laws.

Mr. Ahmed said any person who had been detained for nine months or more would remain disqualified from contesting election for five years. At present any one detained for six months is not qualified for elections.

The Opposition went for division when the Speaker put Mr. Akhtaruddin's motion for circulating the Electoral College Bill to elicit public opinion on indirect system. The move was, however, lost by a majority of 28 votes. Voting was 35 to 63. This was the first lobby division during the current session.

Bill Passed:

The controversial Electoral College Bill providing for election of 80,000 electors who in turn will elect the President, the National Assembly and the two Provincial Assemblies early in 1965 was passed by the National Assembly on April 14 by a majority of 37 votes.

The Opposition pressed for a division when the Speaker put the Bill to the House finally. Voting was 75 for and 38 against. The Opposition declared that since certain clauses of the Bill violated the Constitution, the issue would be taken to the Supreme Court.

Earlier the Speaker, Mr. Fazlul Qader Chowdhury, said that he could not go into the niceties of law or interpretation of the terms in the Constitution. He said he was not in a position to interfere on such points.

He made these observations in connexion with Mr. Akhtaruddin's point of order that Clause 55 of the Electoral College Bill violated the provisions of Article 171 of the Constitution which empowered the Election Commission to settle all disputes arising out of elections.

[Clause 59 of the Bill provides that the Election Authority would set up a one-man tribunal to decide finally the disputes arising out of the Electoral College elections.]

Mr. Khurshid Ahmad contested Mr. Akhtaruddin's assertions and said that Clause 50 did not constitute any violation of the Constitution.

ASIAN RECORDER

May 13—19, 1964

Regd. No. D-727

NEPAL

A. Gandak Barrage Foundation Stone Laid: King Mahendra laid the foundation stone of the Gandak Barrage in Bhainsalotan on May 4 in the presence of the Indian Premier, Mr. Nehru and over 100,000 people from the surrounding countryside who had gathered for the occasion.

The ceremony was conducted according to traditional Vedic rites by Pandit Krishneshwar Jha, who chanted mantras for the prosperity of the people of Nepal and India.

The crowd cheered as the King lowered a marble slab with an inscription in Hindi recording the occasion.

The dais carried a painting depicting India and Nepal clasping hands.

King Mahendra said on the occasion that when completed the Barrage would be a symbol of the growing bonds of friendship between India and Nepal. "I think that there cannot be two opinions about the fact that it would be beneficial to both sides to be ever active in enhancing and deepening the scope of this friendly feeling on the basis of parity".

Earlier Mr. Nehru, requesting the King to lay the foundation stone, said he hoped that the execution of the Kosi and Gandak projects, symbols of Indo-Nepalese co-operation, would usher in an era of plenty and prosperity for both Nepal and India.

He also announced that India was ready to build two roads in Nepal. One, between 12 and 16 miles long, would eventually serve as a feeder to Nepal's ambitious east-west highway. The other would be eight miles long.

The Gandak irrigation and power project will usher in an era of prosperity in the densely populated Gandak Valley regions of Bihar, Uttar Pradesh and Nepal.

It is one of the major projects in which India and Nepal are collaborating as neighbours. In India it is an inter-State project in which Bihar and UP are joining hands.

When completed, the project would annually irrigate 26,52,000 acres of land, in Saran, Champaran, Muzaffarpur and Darbhanga in Bihar. Increase in the yield of crops will be about 22 million maunds of which about 12 million maunds will be in food crops and 10 million maunds in cash crops. The value of the additional yield is estimated at about Rs. 210 million.

In UP about 5,92,000 acres of land in Gorakhpur and Deoria districts will be irrigated annually.

In Nepal, the project will provide irrigational facilities to an area of 1,43,900 acres (gross: net area 1,18,000 acres) and will yield, annually, additional agricultural produce valued at Rs. 10 million.

Availability of power will accelerate the pace of economic development in the region.

There will be opportunities for employment of skilled and unskilled local personnel. Further, the road bridge over the Barrage will open all-weather communication between Eastern and Western Nepal.

With the execution of the flood protection works on the right bank of the river, for which the Nepalese Government has made available the necessary land, some areas of Nepal and Gorakhpur and Deoria in the adjoining area will be permanently saved from floods which have been an annual feature so far.

Construction work will open up fresh avenues of employment to the people of the Gandak Valley and will save the large expenditure incurred annually on relief operations due to chronic scarcity conditions.

The Valley, with an average of 1,020 persons per square mile, is one of the most densely populated regions of the country. It is also potentially one of the richest and most fertile agricultural tracts in North Bihar and Nepal, and is capable of producing almost every crop cultivated in the plains of India. Agriculture here, however, has suffered in the past by failure of timely rainfall, though the average rainfall is moderately high.

The present Gandak project owes its birth in 1947 to the inspiration given by the late Dr. Rajendra Prasad, the then Indian Minister of Agriculture and Food. In a letter to the Bihar Government, he urged investigation of possibilities of taking out canals from the Gandak for irrigating large portions of Saran, Champaran and Muzaffarpur districts of Bihar, Deoria and Gorakhpur districts of UP and parts of Nepal.

The first consolidated project report was prepared in 1951, but as the Bihar Government preferred to give priority to the Kosi Project to provide immediate relief to the lakhs of victims of Bihar's "River of Sorrow," the work on the Gandak scheme remained in abeyance from 1951 to 1954.

Later, after about three years of negotiations, an Agreement with the Nepalese Government about the Barrage site was signed on December 4, 1960. India agreed to bear the expenses of the two Nepalese canals, the branch canals and distributaries.

The project has four main features:

(1) A 2,487-foot-long Barrage with road bridge across the Gandak at Bhainsalotan in Bihar. About half the length of the Barrage will fall in Indian territory and the other half in Nepal.

(2) Main western canal to irrigate 14,08,000 acres of land in the Saran district of Bihar, and about 8,31,000 acres of land in the Gorakhpur and Deoria districts of Uttar Pradesh. A separate canal will also take off from the western bank to irrigate 48,400 acres of land in the Bhairwa district of Western Nepal.

(3) Main eastern canal to irrigate 17,54,000 acres of land in the Champaran, Muzaffarpur and Darbhanga districts of Bihar, and 1,64,000 acres of land in Parsa, Bara and Ratuhat districts of Nepal.

(4) One power house with an installed capacity of 15,000 at a suitable place on the main western canal in Nepal. (This power house will be handed over as a gift to Nepal when the connected load from it in that country has developed to the firm potential of 10,000 kw at 60 per cent load factor).

B. Five Aid Agreements With India: India and Nepal signed in Khatmandu on May 1 five development aid Agreements.

Under these Agreements India will spend Rs. 2 crores (Nepalese currency) on various schemes in the country.

Of this amount Rs. 80,00,000 will be spent on irrigation, water supply, power and drainage schemes; Rs. 5,60,000 on the setting up of maternity homes and child welfare centres; Rs. 80,00,000 on the development of airports; Rs. 36,64,000 on the Bagmati bridge; and Rs. 3,00,000 on the Balaju road.

Five airports are proposed to be developed. The airports at Bhairwa, Janakpur and Biratnagar will be provided with metalled runways. The Simra and Pokhara airports will also be improved.

On behalf of India the Agreements were signed by Mr. D. R. Kohli, Director of the Indian Aid Mission to Nepal. Nepal was represented by Mr. B. B. Thapa, Secretary, Ministry of Planning.

C. Chinese Aid For Development Projects: Nepal and China signed in Khatmandu on April 27 an Agreement under which the latter would undertake construction of three development projects in Nepal.

These projects are in place of the cement and paper factories which China had originally agreed to set up. It abandoned plans for these factories later for "technical" reasons.

Under the new Agreement, China will construct a 170-kilometre road constituting the Najakpur-Biratnagar section of the east-west highway in Nepal Terai bordering India.

It will also establish a brick and tiles factory in Khatmandu besides several warehouses.

The Agreement is in the nature of a supplementary protocol to the Agreement on economic aid signed by the two countries on September 5, 1961.

The total outlay on the projects and the time it would take to complete them can be ascertained only after detailed project reports have been prepared.

Under the 1961 Agreement, China is already constructing the 104-km Khatmandu-Kodai highway, which will eventually link the Nepalese and Tibetan capitals. The Chinese are also building a small-scale tannery in Khatmandu.

It was not clear if any more projects would be undertaken by the Chinese. During the recent visit by a team of Chinese experts, a proposal to construct hydro-electric and irrigation projects had been mooted. It was not known if the proposal was still engaging the attention of the Chinese.

The latest Agreement was signed by Mr. Ko Shen, Vice-Minister for Communications, on behalf of China, and by Mr. N. P. Rijal, Assistant Minister for Finance and Economic Planning, on behalf of Nepal. The Chairman of the Council of

D. "Mt. Gya Chung Kang" Climbed By Japanese: A three-man Japanese team has climbed Mt. Gya Chung Kang (25,910 feet), which had till now remained the second highest unclimbed peak in the world.

The highest unclimbed Himalayan peak is Gosaithan in Tibet.

According to a Radio Nepal broadcast, the three members who reached the top were Mr. Yukihiko Kati, Mr. Sakazawa and Mr. Pasang Phuto.

The broadcast said one member of the expedition lost his life on April 9 in an icefall. It did not give the date of the successful assault.

Five expeditions had vainly tried to scale the peak before.

Mr. Kati is a member of the Nichiken Mountaineering Union. He is 32. Twenty-seven-year-old Sakazawa is a hotel manager, Mr. Phuto is one of the sherpas recruited in Nepal.

The expedition left Khatmandu for the base camp on February 17. It set up the base camp at Ugojumba glacier (4,900 feet) in March.

According to the original schedule, the expedition was to have made the final assault in May.

A. Additional Allocation From World Bank For Indus Basin Works: The World Bank announced on April 7 that $315,000,000 in additional foreign exchange resources had become available under a prior agreement for works to be constructed by Pakistan in the Indus River Basin.

Mr. George Woods, President of the Bank, making the announcement, said it was in implementation of an understanding reached in November, 1963 between himself and President Ayub Khan.

Contributions in grants toward the supplemental resources were made as follows: Australia £4,669,643; Canada $16,210,794; West Germany DM8,400,000; New Zealand £503,434; Britain £13,978,571 and the United States $188,590,000.

Proceeds of a US Government loan to Pakistan accounted for a further $51,220,000 and a World Bank loan for $58,540,000.

All contributions will be paid, as needed, into the Indus Basin Development Fund which is administered by the World Bank.

The Fund resources will finance the construction of the Jhelum river dam complex and other works to be undertaken by Pakistan in the Indus Basin.

The Bank said the Government of Pakistan had undertaken to provide the rupees required to finance the local currency expenditures not covered by the rupee contributions provided for under the 1960 Indus Basin Development Fund Agreement.

In addition, the Fund will finance the cost of a study to be organized and administered by the World Bank of the water and power resources of West Pakistan, which would provide the Government of Pakistan with a basis for development planning in the water and power sectors of the economy within the context of their successive Five-Year Plans.

A Bank announcement said: "It is intended that this study will be completed within two years from the date of its commencement.

"The first objective of the study will be the completion of a report covering the technical feasibility, the construction cost and the economic return of a dam on the Indus at Tarbela. The Bank will use its best endeavours to ensure that this report will be completed by the end of 1964.

"To head the study the President of the World Bank has appointed Dr. Pieter Lieftinck—an Executive Director of the Bank and a former Finance Minister of the Netherlands.

"Any balance of foreign exchange remaining after the costs of the above works and of the study have been provided for, will be disbursed, in accordance with procedures to be agreed between Pakistan and the Bank, to be used by Pakistan, as required, towards the foreign exchange costs of the Tarbela Project (if Pakistan and the Bank agree that Tarbela is justified on the basis of the report) or, otherwise, of some other development project or projects in the water and power sector in West Pakistan, to be agreed between Pakistan and the Bank on the basis of the study."

Memorandum On Foreign Aid Requirements For Second Plan:

A Karachi despatch said on April 11 that in a memorandum sent to the World Bank containing foreign aid requirements to the tune of $500,000,000 for the final year of the Second Five-Year Plan, Pakistan had suggested that $300,000,000 should be utilized for development purposes, supporting the foreign exchange component required for the new projects to the extent of 30 per cent.

The remaining $200 million was intended to be spent for the utilization, balancing and modernization of the existing industrial capacity in the country.

The pre-Consortium meeting, due to be held in Washington in May, will consider Pakistan's aid request. Following another Consortium meeting, the aid to Pakistan for financing the Second Plan projects for 1964-65 is expected to be pledged by June, 1965.

B. President Ayub Khan To Seek Re-election: President Ayub Khan's candidature on behalf of the ruling faction of the Muslim League for election for another term was announced on April 7 by the Law Minister, Mr. Khurshid Ahmed.

According to the constitutional amendment proposal which he also introduced in the National Assembly, President Ayub's term will expire on March 7, 1965 instead of in August as provided in the Constitution and the election to the office will be held earlier than election to National and Provincial Assemblies. Election to the Assemblies will now be held a month or two later.

The President will be elected by 3,000 persons who would form the electoral college to be created under a Bill currently under discussion in the Assembly.

C. "Integration" Of Kashmir With India—Pakistani Protest: Pakistan lodged another protest with India on April 3 against the move to "further integrate" the State of Jammu and Kashmir with the Indian Union.

The protest was against the Bill moved in the Kashmir Assembly proposing to change the nomenclature of the Head of State and the head of the Government.

The Note said that though the Bill had been moved by an Opposition member, the State Revenue Minister, Mr. Mir Qasim, had said the Government would not oppose it.

The Note reminded the Government of India that "this was a deliberate attempt on her part to flout the decisions of the Security Council with regard to Kashmir and that it would not help the cause of peace".

He said high-level conferences would be held in Washington towards the end of April to decide whether traffic should be started on this, the world's longest land tele-communication system by July or it should be subjected to prolonged trial testing and opened to traffic by January, 1965.

Delegates from Pakistan, Iran, Turkey, UK and USA would participate in the conference.

E. Government Action Against Newspapers—Dacca Protest Meeting: A protest meeting held in Dacca on April 10 voiced strong resentment against the Government's "extraordinary powers in muzzling the Press, in attacking them financially and sometimes banning their publication for periods".

The meeting was presided over by Mr. Abu Hosain Sarkar, a former Chief Minister of East Pakistan.

The meeting further criticised the Government for the promulgation of Security Act and Press and Publication Ordinance with the intention of imposing censorship on news and views even to the extent of forbidding newspapers to inform their readers that they had been subjected to such censorship in respect of certain news.

In this connexion the meeting also referred to the notices recently served on three Dacca dailies, Azad, Refiq and Sangbad, demanding security deposits from them totalling Rs. 1,15,000.

The meeting further expressed "doubts and misgivings" about the formation of the National Press Trust "at the instance of the Government." Many speakers contended that the Press Trust was intended "to dominate the newspapers' field, cripple independent papers and to impose dead uniformity in the country's information media". These fears, they added, were all the more enhanced by the proposed Advertisement Board and an Advertising Corporation, to be formed under the auspices of the Government.

The meeting deprecated "all these undemocratic attempts to muzzle the freedom of Press" and made a fervent appeal to the people and all political parties to resist such attempts.

It was addressed among others by Mr. Hamidul Haq Chowdhury and Pir Mohsenuddin.

Mr. Hamidul Haq Chowdhury stated that no Government could function without newspapers' co-operation which he termed as X-ray reports of daily events of the country. He also criticised the National Press Trust.

Journalists' Concern:

The Standing Committee of the Council of Pakistan Newspaper Editors on April 9 expressed its deep concern over the restrictive orders issued by the Government to several newspapers.

At a three-hour emergent meeting held in Karachi under the chairmanship of Mr. Fakhre Matri, the Committee reviewed the situation arising out of these orders.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the Committee:

"The emergent meeting of the Standing Committee of the CPNE having considered the situation arising out of several show cause notices served on some member-newspapers and restrictive orders issued regarding the publication of news expresses its deep concern that the provisions of Press and Publications Ordinance are being used in a manner which makes functioning of even a reasonably free Press difficult if not impossible.

"The Standing Committee expresses its solidarity with the newspapers on which these orders have been passed and notes the steps taken by the affected papers to seek redress within the law. While awaiting the result of these efforts, the Committee is of the opinion that concerted steps should be taken by all concerned with the printing and publication of newspapers to safeguard the freedom and the interests of the profession."

F. British Industrial Delegation's Visit: A British businessmen's delegation sponsored by the Federation of British Industries, which arrived in Pakistan on February 23, concluded a three-week tour of major industrial and business centres of Pakistan on March 13.

It held talks with the Provincial Governors as well as businessmen and industrialists.

The leader of the delegation, Mr. F. J. E. Tearle, said that they had found the incentives offered by the Pakistan Government to private foreign investors generally attractive and he did not think that "Pakistanization" of foreign firms would be a deterrent to investment.

One of the members of the team, Mr. E. N. Griffiths, Chairman of Howard Rotavator Limited, said he would like the tax holiday concession offered to foreign technicians to be extended. At present, concessions are valid for a period of two years, which, he felt, was much too short. All agreed that Pakistan's most pressing need was technical knowledge and assistance.

A detailed report on the findings of the delegation was being prepared which, Mr. Tearle said, would be of a general nature and would not specifically suggest any Pakistani industry or industries for likely investment by UK private investors.

H. Twelve Jute Mills For East Wing: A spokesman of the East Pakistan Regional Office of the Industrial Development Bank of Pakistan (IDBP) said on March 28 that the Bank proposed to finance the setting up of 12 new jute units of 250 looms each in East Pakistan.

The new units would be set up in collaboration with the East Pakistan Industrial Development Corporation and private parties. Each unit would cost about Rs. 1.5 crores.

The spokesman said the IDBP would provide Rs. 10,000,000 in foreign exchange for each unit, while the Development Corporation would contribute Rs. 1,000,000 in each case. The sponsoring parties of each unit will provide Rs. 2,500,000, while the remaining Rs. 1,500,000 will be provided by floating shares.

He said that the establishment of these units had been planned to disperse industries in various parts of the Province.

Four units, one each in Choumohant, Khulna, Ghorasal and Narsinghdi would be financed out of the fifth United Kingdom credit. Another four units, one each in Chandpur, Narsinghdi, Bhairab, and Ghorasal will be financed out of the sixth UK credit.

He said that four units had been planned for Chittagong, Chandpur, Khulna and Narsinghdi.

He said that the IDBP would also help set up Hafiz Jute Mills in Chittagong (500 looms). This project would be financed entirely by the IDBP out of the third and fifth UK credit.

I. Cyclone In East Pakistan: About 259 persons were killed and 573 injured in a cyclone which ripped through the northern and southern parts of Narail Sub-Division in East Pakistan on April 11.

The Commissioner of Khulna Sub-Division said that five unions in the Sub-Division had been badly affected. The exact figure of the casualties could not be ascertained.

According to reports received in Dacca, many houses were damaged and a considerable number of cattle and domestic animals also perished in the cyclonic winds. The velocity of the wind was so great that many big trees were uprooted.

Thirteen villages under Narail and Lohagara police stations were damaged by the cyclone. The worst affected villages were Gachbari, Bariopur, Jalalshi, Halda, Bai, Kanthapur and Moapara in Naldi union, Eranda Bairpara of Lakhipassa and Kasepur Union, Paikmari, Sibandupur.

On April 14, the death roll in Magura and Narail Sub-Divisions in Jessore district was officially put at 310.

Local newspapers said that at least 500 persons had been killed.

Twenty-five villages in the two Sub-Divisions were totally wiped out.

PHILIPPINES

A. S-EATO Ministerial Conference: The eight-nation S-EATO Ministerial Council met in Manila from April 12 to 15.

The Conference opened amid growing signs of sharp differences among member-nations—USA, UK, France, Australia, New Zealand, the Philippines, Thailand and Pakistan—on issues confronting the region.

Among the main problems facing the delegates were the war in South Viet-Nam; France's proposal for neutralization of South-East Asia, which followed its recognition of China; Cambodia's border dispute with Thailand and South Viet-Nam and its demands for an international conference to ensure its neutrality; and Indonesia's confrontation threat to Malaysia which had precipitated a guerrilla border conflict in Borneo.

American sources said that USA hoped to convince S-EATO members that they should make increased "symbolic" contributions to the Viet-Nam conflict, but stressed this did not mean large monetary outlay and troops.

On April 11, the US Secretary of State, Mr. Dean Rusk, had a private meeting with the French Foreign Minister, Mr. Maurice Couve de Murville, at which they exchanged views on South-East Asian policy and Communist threats to stability in the area, particularly in South Viet-Nam.

At the Conference Mr. Couve de Murville expressed the opinion that the present S-EATO meeting would not be able to solve its many problems at the two-day Conference.

Calling for an "objective and friendly discussion" in the interests of reality, he said "it is not in a few days that we are going to find a solution to problems", some of which were new, some of which dated back to the immediate post-War years.

"At least an objective and friendly discussion should enable us to do away with myths, to eliminate ambiguities and squarely face realities."

Australia's Foreign Minister, Sir Garfield Barwick, said that since the 1963 S-EATO meeting, Australia had added new dimensions to its international responsibilities. In particular, his Government had pledged to come to the defence of Malaysia in certain defined contingencies.

He warned of the "menace of the People's Republic of China" and spoke of "aggressive countries" which did not have industrial bases to support modern warfare.

The Philippines Foreign Secretary, Mr. Salvador Lopez, recalled the formation of S-EATO 10 years ago in Manila, and compared its performance as a peace-keeper unfavourably with that of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Mr. A. M. Malik, Pakistan's Ambassador to the Philippines, said that Pakistan was watching with "profound concern the development of a serious imbalance in military power in the region, arising from the attitude of a certain non-member country in the area".

Thailand's Foreign Minister, Mr. Thanat Khoman, said that neutralization of South Viet-Nam would be contrary to the Manila Pact which established the eight-nation alliance. "My country, for one, will have no part in it".

Communique:

The Council rejected the French proposal for neutralization of South Viet-Nam by seven votes to one.

A communique issued on April 15 at the conclusion of the talks reaffirmed faith in the present Government of South Viet-Nam and the policies it was pursuing.

It said: "The Council agreed that the defeat of the communist campaign is essential not only to the security of the Republic of Viet-Nam, but to that of South-East Asia".

Conference sources said that at the close of the Conference even Mr. Couve de Murville had stated that his country did not oppose its long-range success. A French reservation in the communique said that in the circumstances Mr. Couve de Murville thought it wise to abstain from any declaration on Viet-Nam.

The French delegation was said to have maintained that Chinese fears of South Viet-Nam being used as an American base would have to be dispelled before a neutralist solution could be negotiated.

The representative of the host country, Mr. Salvador Lopez, the Philippines Foreign Secretary, summed up the Conference in these words: "S-EATO has surmounted a crisis of confidence."

France's stand on Viet-Nam had not weakened the alliance, a spokesman for the French delegation said. He was answering questions for Mr. Couve de Murville, who declined to see newsmen at the airport.

In the communique the Ministers did not disclose any new aid plans for the area beyond saying that S-EATO nations should remain prepared to take any further necessary steps in line with their obligations.

Prince Norodom Sihanouk of Cambodia had asked for his country to be excluded from the ranks of "protocol States" under S-EATO protection—but S-EATO had declined to act on his plan.

In a letter to Mr. Konthi Suphamongkhom, the Secretary-General of S-EATO, the Prince said his country was a sovereign and independent State. He described the protection of S-EATO as "in fact, a protectorate, which there is an attempt to impose."

Mr. Konthi, answering questions at a news conference said the Malaysia issue had been raised under the heading of problems of interest to members "involving their relations with non-member-States". But no decision had been taken, mainly because the matter was being handled "through other channels".

The communique said that despite the sharpening of the Sino-Soviet dispute, world domination remained the aim of Communism, so vigilance must not be relaxed.

French Policy:

Meanwhile, sources in Paris explaining French policy on Viet-Nam said France was not opposed to a military solution in South Viet-Nam, but considered that it could not be dissociated from a political solution.

To this was added the corollary that a political solution implied negotiations with China to guarantee the neutrality of Viet-Nam.

It was maintained that China as well as other countries might find it advantageous not to interfere in South Viet-Nam's affairs as the Soviet Union does not interfere in the affairs of Finland.

This official analysis of the French position came in for some searching comment in the French Press.

One view was that the lone vote cast by France against continued military action in South Viet-Nam should not be construed as meaning either a breakdown of the S-EATO alliance or even as a defeat for France on a matter of policy-making for South-East Asia.

It was pointed out in Paris that France continued to appreciate American efforts to contain Communism in Viet-Nam and that if the Gaullists were opposed to war there, it was not because war is unjust but that it was proving to be inconclusive.

During the Manila discussions on the advisability of neutralising Viet-Nam, Britain and New Zealand abstained from taking sides and Pakistan stayed out of the talks.

SAUDI ARABIA

A. Economic Pact With Syria: Damascus Radio reported on March 17 that Syria and Saudi Arabia had signed a new Economic Agreement in Riyadh, replacing the Agreement which ended in 1963.

The Radio said economic talks between the two countries had opened in Riyadh on March 12, and ended three days later, when the Agreement was signed by Dr. Hassan Muraywed, Syrian Foreign Minister, and Emir Musaid Abdul Rahman, the Saudi Finance and Economic Minister.

B. Jeddah Port Survey: A London report on April 10 said that an Agreement had been signed in Riyadh between the Saudi Arabian Government and Sir William Halcrow and Partners, the London firm of consulting engineers, for a comprehensive survey of the port of Jeddah.

This followed discussions held earlier in Jeddah between technicians of the Ministry of Communications and representatives of the British company on the basis of which a draft Agreement was initialled.

The Government intends to improve the port facilities by enlarging the port itself and installing a number of guidance beacons within the harbour area and its approaches. At present, coral reefs and islands prevent easy access to the port.

The survey will include analyses of existing and prospective trade, meteorological and topographic conditions and hydrographic and subsoil conditions, as well as an assessment of the economic development of the hinterland, pilgrimage traffic, port operations, health and quarantine arrangements and the effects of the development of air and internal transport. Work under the Agreement will be carried out over a period of five years.

SYRIA

A. Authority On Jordan Waters Diversion Set Up: Arab Government experts, preparing plans to divert the Jordan River tributaries, ended a three-day conference in Damascus on April 9 by setting up a central Authority to supervise the $235,000,000 operation.

The Conference named an engineer, Mr. Subhi Kahhale, a former Syrian Public Works Minister, as Director-General of the Authority.

This announcement came in a communique summing up the outcome of the board's secret deliberations led by the Arab League Secretary-General, Mr. Abdel Khalek Hassouna, on final plans for the operation.

It was ordered by the "Summit" Conference of Arab Heads of States in Cairo in January to counter Israel's plan to help tap the Jordan River waters from the Sea of Galilee some time this year.

Jointly financed by 13 Arab Governments, the operation is designed to make between 35 and 44 per cent of the Jordan river waters bypass Israeli territory in an attempt to cripple the Israeli diversion project.

B. Anti-Baath Revolt Crushed: An armed anti-Baath revolt broke out on April 15 in the central Syrian city of Hama, but was crushed by the Government. Two persons were killed in the fighting.

The acting Information Minister, Mr. Shibli Eissami, told newsmen that reports from the troubled city indicated that the town was under full Government control.

An earlier announcement said the Government had sealed off the town, some 130 miles north of Damascus, by declaring a State of Emergency and a 24-hour curfew.

Mr. Eissami said trouble broke out on April 13 when students from one school staged a demonstration in protest against the arrest of one student and the transfer of a few teachers. During the demonstration, shots were fired and one citizen was killed. The shot was not fired by security forces. It came from a roof-top.

He said: "But reactionary and feudalist elements, who had been infuriated by the Government's seizure of their extra land under the agrarian reform law, exploited the incident and provoked a large part of the business section of the city to go on strike."

The authorities, he said, had exhausted every possible means to handle the situation peacefully. The revolt proved to be a premeditated attempt to create disorder and handicaps for the Government.

TURKEY

A. New Tax Legislation: A London despatch on March 27 said that Bills were under discussion in the Turkish Parliament to introduce fiscal reforms aimed at increasing the number of taxpayers and eliminating tax evasion.

The Government proposes to impose tighter controls, to appoint more tax inspectors and to lower exemption limits. It was expected that when these reforms were passed by the National Assembly, 25 per cent more commercial and industrial incomes would be taxed on personal declarations instead of overall estimates.

In the past, farmers have evaded taxes by dividing their profits among members of the family so that nobody earns more than the exemption limit. The Government plans to reduce agricultural exemptions by 25 per cent and to levy a minimum land tax. This will raise the number of agricultural incomes subject to land tax from 20,000 to over 40,000 and increase the Government's income by 200 million liras ($22 million). These measures have already been accepted by a joint committee of the five political parties.

The Government hopes to raise an additional T£490 million ($54.5 million) by increasing taxes on fuel and diesel oils, vehicles and buildings and by introducing a new real estate tax. The Finance Minister, Mr. Ferit Melen, said that these reforms were absolutely necessary if enough investment capital was to be raised to implement Turkey's Five-Year Plan, now in its second year.

VIET-NAM (DR)

A. Dr. Ho Chi-Minh's Report To Political Conference: The President, Dr. Ho Chi-Minh, reviewed the international and domestic situation, and outlined the tasks before the people in a report to the first Special Political Conference held in Hanoi on March 26.

"Tremendous changes have taken place both at home and abroad since the signing of the 1954 Geneva Accords on Indo-China," he said. In these ten years, the people in North Viet-Nam, united as one under the correct leadership of the Viet-Nam Workers' Party and Government, have overcome many difficulties and achieved tremendous successes. These successes testified to the great superiority of socialism and were a source of inspiration to the compatriots in the South.

"The only correct solution to the South Viet-Nam question is the correct implementation of the basic provisions of the 1954 Geneva Agreements on Indo-China. The participants of the Geneva Conference including the United States must live up to their commitments. They must respect the sovereignty, independence, unity and territorial integrity of Viet-Nam, and refrain from any interference in its internal affairs".

He expressed full support to the demands made by the South Viet-Nam National Liberation Front that the United States should end its intervention in South Viet-Nam and withdraw its troops and war material.

Regarding foreign policy, he said: "The foreign policy of our party and State is: to strengthen solidarity with the fraternal socialist countries on the basis of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism; to wage a resolute struggle against the policies of aggression and war of the imperialists headed by the United States; to achieve peaceful co-existence between countries with different political and social systems; to extend resolute support to the national liberation movement and the struggle for the maintenance of national independence; and to support the struggle of the working class and the people of the world for peace, national independence, democracy and socialism...

"As a South-East Asian country, we wholeheartedly support the just struggle of the nations of this area against aggression and enslavement by imperialism and colonialism, old and new.

"We are always willing to develop friendly relations with the Kingdom of Laos in all fields. We support the just struggle of the Laotian people against US imperialist aggression, and the efforts made by the National Union Government of Laos with Prince Souvanna Phouma as Premier for the implementation of the 1962 Geneva Agreements on Laos and for safeguarding the peace and neutrality of Laos.

"We consistently stand for the establishment of good neighbourly relations with the Kingdom of Cambodia. We fully support the Cambodian Government against the provocations and threats of aggression by the US imperialists and their lackeys."

He then set the following five tasks for the people:

(1) Strengthen the unity of the party, the people and the army, heighten the revolutionary fighting will, and ensure the fulfilment of the 1964 State Plan and the Five-Year Plan;

(2) Ensure the success of industrial and agricultural campaigns and the drive for economic development in the mountainous areas;

(3) Steadily strengthen the people's State power and consolidate national defence;

(4) Wholeheartedly support the patriotic struggle of the compatriots in the South; and

(5) Uphold and develop the relations with the fraternal socialist countries and support the revolutionary and national liberation struggles of the people of the world.

More than 30 delegates including Mr. Ton duc Thang, President of the Presidium of the Viet-Nam Fatherland Front; Premier Pham van Dong, and General Vo Nguyen Giap, Vice-Premier and Minister of National Defence, spoke at the Conference which unanimously approved President Ho Chi-Minh's report, and expressed determination to carry out the five tasks laid down by him.

B. State Development Plan For 1964: The Chairman of the Planning Commission, Mr. Nguyen Duy Trinh, presented to the National Assembly in Hanoi on March 30 a report containing outlines of the State Development Plan for 1964—the fourth year of the five-year Plan.

The first part of the report was a review of the fulfilment of the 1963 Plan.

He said: "We have started construction and continued building 139 projects, 32 of which have been completed. Among the latter, the completion of the blast furnace system Number 1 of the Thai-Nguyen Iron and Steel complex and the first part of the Uong-Bi thermo power plant marked an important advance of North Viet-Nam towards socialist industrialization.

"Last year, agricultural production met with many difficulties due to natural calamities, but with the strength of the relations of collective production our peasants have triumphed in their struggle against drought, typhoons and floods, and succeeded in ensuring production. Sowing and planting were achieved by 97 per cent. This constitutes a great success."

He said that the 1963 achievements were the result of the patriotic emulation movement which developed in many branches, localities and units. In the State-run economic branches, nearly 10,000 units had signed to become "socialist labour" teams or brigades.

The most noticeable fact was that the patriotic emulation movement had educated the labouring people in closely combining the two revolutionary tasks, namely, "to build socialism in the North and liberate the South for achieving peaceful re-unification of the country."

As for the 1964 Plan, he said the agricultural and industrial sectors would be expanded. "With regard to agricultural production in 1964, we rely on the movement for improving the management of agricultural co-operatives, improving techniques and the movement for building irrigation works, to develop vigorously the superiority of the new production relations in the countryside, take a further step in settling successfully the three great demands—production of food, development of animal husbandry, especially pig and fish rearing; and the increased plantation of the main industrial crops aimed at serving industries and export.

"This year we must give more attention to intensive cultivation to increase the output of paddy, and at the same time to all active measures aimed at expanding the cultivated area.

"In industries, it is necessary to continue stepping up the emulation movement to rationalize production, improve techniques, and endeavour to develop industries and handicrafts more rapidly than in the last year, helping industry to better meet the requirements of agriculture, export, communications and transport and its own requirements. The industrial branches which need special attention are coal, machine building, cement, timber, fish and salt.

"About 47.7 per cent of investments earmarked for industries would go to heavy industrial branches such as electricity, coal mines, iron and steel and chemical fertilizers' production. We start constructing a number of new centres of machine building.

"As far as light industry is concerned, we must complete a number of enterprises, step up the building of a number of such important projects as the Ham Rong-Vinh railway, and the Haiphong shipyard.

"The investments in non-constructive branches aim mainly at construction of more houses for the workers and public employees at industrial centres, 13 more water plants and 15 more hospitals for mountain regions.

"In 1964, supplementary education remains the foremost task in our education. In culture and arts, we must raise quality, take into consideration the study of the relics of national culture, sum up the experiences drawn from the education of artists and trainers with basic theories of Marxism-Leninism, world and home events and policies of the Party, and with the socialist conception about culture and arts, and raise further their professional levels.

"We must bring the study and popularization of sciences and techniques to quirements of the development of various branches of production and construction with a view to practically contributing to the raising of labour productivity, reducing production cost and improving such a level as strictly meeting the re- the quality of products.

"With regard to public health, hygiene and prophylaxis, the prevention of diseases remains the main motto....

"To carry out successfully the 1964 State Plan, we have to strengthen ideological work, and help the patriotic emulation movement develop powerfully along the line of collective emulation.

"The ideological work aims at helping the working people understand more thoroughly the line laid down by the Party for socialist construction in the North, and the line of the revolutionary struggle in South Viet-Nam. It is necessary to grasp deeply the views of the Party and State about building a self-supporting economy on the basis of self-reliance and international co-operation; about carrying out socialist industrialization and developing agriculture into a basis for industrial development; and about building the Fatherland with industry and thrift.

"At the same time, the patriotic emulation movement must develop powerfully along the line of collective emulation in all branches, localities and units.

"The task of the emulation movement is not only to ensure the successful carrying out of the State plan, promote the development of the productive forces, but also to build new socialist men and women and to contribute to consolidating and developing the new relations of production.

"We must make the 1964 emulation movement reach its goal—high labour productivity, good quality and great economization."

YEMEN

A. British Jets Attack Yemeni Fort: British "Hunter" jet planes launched on March 28 an attack on a Yemeni fort across the border from Beihan State, claiming that it was in retaliation for attacks by Yemeni planes on the State.

Yemeni authorities denied launching any attack and declared that a complaint would be made to the UN Security Council against Britain. According to the Yemenis, 25 persons were killed in the British raid.

Mr. Mohammed Ali Elaswady, Minister for Southern Yemen Affairs, described as "completely false" British claims that Yemeni planes had flown into Beihan, adding that Britain had been opposing the Yemeni revolution "from the first day".

The Yemeni Political Bureau called an urgent meeting to consider steps to halt "British aggression". Afterwards, it was announced that the Yemeni delegate to United Nations would be instructed to lodge a complaint with the Security Council, and that their representative to the Arab League would be asked to notify the League of the incident.

Beihan State is a member of the South Arabian Federation, and the jet attack on the fort across the border near Hareeb was reported to have been ordered in retaliation for two Yemeni attacks on that territory.

The acting President, Mr. Mohamed Elroainy, claimed that the raid had killed women, children and old men.

The following statement was issued by the British High Commission in Aden on March 28:

"It will be recalled that on October 22, 1962 and February 27, 1963, aircraft coming from the Yemen carried out attacks on the territory of the Federation of South Arabia, the first of which resulted in the loss of a child's life and the destruction of houses. Strong protests were made about these incidents, and on the second occasion the British Government sent a message to the Yemeni Republican authorities pointing out that Britain had a duty to protect the population of the Federation for whose defence she was by treaty responsible, warning the Republicans that any attack mounted from the Yemen might have the gravest consequences, and reserving to the British Government liberty to take whatever action seemed to them to be necessary.

"In spite of that stern warning, further infringement of Federal air-space has taken place, and on March 13, 1964 two aircraft from the Yemen attacked Bedouin and their flocks within the State of Beihan, using machine-guns and incendiary bombs. Two camels were killed and two tents burnt. Fortunately there were no human casualties. The British Government thereupon addressed a further message to the Yemeni Republican authorities containing a further strong protest and warning.

"Simultaneously, the matter was reported to the President of the Security Council.

"Yesterday morning (March 27) a renewed attack upon the Federation was carried out when a helicopter crossed the Beihan frontier at 09:15 hrs. to the north of Najd Marqad in the area of Jebel Bulaiq and opened fire with machine-guns on camels grazing within Federal territory. The helicopter then fired upon the fort at Jebel Bulaiq occupied by troops of the federal guard until 10:05 hrs. when it flew back across the frontier into Yemen.

"After obtaining ministerial approval from London, the Commander-in-Chief, Middle East, ordered British aircraft to deliver a counter-attack upon a Yemeni military fort just inside the Yemen frontier.

"In order to minimize the risk of loss of life, a warning message was dropped by the British aircraft half-an-hour before the attack was made.

"The need for this counter-attack is regretted, but the responsibility for it rests with the Yemeni Republican authorities. It is hoped that this will make it clear that Federal territory cannot be attacked with impunity, and that the British Government intend to discharge to the full their treaty obligations to defend the Federation."

UN Security Council Meeting:

When the UN Security Council met on April 2, the Yemen Republic urged that the British military base in Aden should be closed immediately.

Mr. Yahya Geghman, the Yemeni representative, said the base was a threat to peace in the whole area.

Sir Patrick Dean, Britain's chief UN representative, said Britain was forced to make a "defensive response" after it became clear that the Federation was facing very serious provocations from Yemen on a mounting scale and of increasing frequency.

He denied that an attack was made on the town of Hareeb itself. Hareeb fort was chosen as the target because it was a military base and because it was isolated and about a mile outside Hareeb town.

Several speakers condemned the British action.

The Council heard the Yemeni charges, the British reply, and speeches by Iraq and UAR, who were participating in the Council without the right to vote and the Soviet Union's delegate, Mr. N. Federenko.

Mr. Federenko said that the British raid had to be understood in the context of the entire Western policy in the area and warned Britain that her days of gunboat diplomacy were over.

The UAR's Mr. El Zayyat said the language of the British action might have been understood in the Victorian age, but could neither be understood nor be accepted by the Security Council now.

He quoted from newspaper reports to show that the British aerial attack was not the action of local authorities but one sanctioned by Mr. Duncan Sandys and Sir Alec Douglas-Home and said whatever might be the British constitutional procedures for declaration of war, he was sure that even the British people would not tolerate the actions of Mr. Sandys and Sir Alec.

He quoted from newspaper reports to show that Britain had apparently informed USA beforehand of her intention to carry out the reprisal and that "the lower level" of State Department officials had told the British that the reprisal could cause troublesome consequences to Anglo-American interests in the Middle East, "perhaps affecting the tricky situation in the bases in Libya."

But, the reports said, Washington did not ask London to cancel the order, according to British sources.

Mr. El Zayyat noted the British Note to the Security Council of March 28 clearly spoke of "counter-attack" while according to newspaper reports, quoted to British sources, the raid was intended as "a psychological and not military operation". He contrasted it with Sir Patrick Dean's statement that it was "defensive response."

Sir Patrick Dean denied that any British troops were massing on the frontier between the Federation and Yemen and rejected the Yemeni claim to sovereignty in the Federation. He denied that bombs were used in the attack. Britain's only desire was to see peaceful conditions established on the frontier and the whole of the area.

In the interests of peace on the frontier, Britain was prepared to "look again" at the possibility of an equal withdrawal on both sides of the frontier to create a demilitarized zone.

Three Arab countries—UAR, Iraq and Yemen—on April 3 asked the Security Council to condemn Britain for its act of aggression.

Speaking as non-voting participants in the resumed debate on Yemen's complaint, they said the Council could not condone the British action when it had consistently refused to do so in the case of similar acts of reprisal or retaliation committed by other countries.

The three Arab countries also said the Council should ask the British to compensate the victims of the raid and call for British withdrawal from Yemeni territory and cessation of all activities aimed at undermining the Yemeni Republic.

Resolution:

By a vote of nine to nil, the Security Council on April 9 deplored the British air attack on Hareeb and condemned the principle of reprisals. The resolution was sponsored by Morocco and Ivory Coast.

Britain and USA abstained.

The resolution adopted by the Council deplored all attacks and incidents which had occurred on the border of Yemen and the British-supported South Arabian Federation. It called on Yemen and Britain to exercise the maximum restraint to avoid further incidents.

U Thant, the Secretary-General, was requested to use his good offices to settle outstanding issues with the two parties.

The Council said it was "deeply concerned at the serious situation prevailing in the area."

Sir Patrick Dean, chief British delegate, said after the vote that Britain did not consider the Yemeni complaint of "aggression" to be justified.

He said the attack at Hareeb was "wholly defensive in order to prevent further attacks against the territorial integrity of the South Arabian Federation and its inhabitants."

Mr. Adlai Stevenson (United States), explaining his abstention, said the resolution was not equitable or "responsive to the realities and facts", and implied that the resolution did not take enough account of the alleged Yemeni provocations.

Mr. Mohsin Alaini (Yemen) said his Government was "content" with the resolution because it had condemned British aggression.

He added: "We wish to make it known that Yemen will spare no effort to effect the evacuation of all its territory, always seeking the protection of the Security Council."

Dr. Nikolai Fedorenko, chief delegate of the Soviet Union, said the essence of the resolution was the "unambiguous condemnation of British aggression which will serve as a true warning to those who initiated it and will promote the strengthening of peace in the region."

Indian Criticism Of Britain:

On April 6, India criticized Britain for bombing the Yemeni fort of Hareeb.

The Indian delegate, Mr. Natwar Singh, told the UN Colonialism Committee that the British action had aroused great resentment among Afro-Asian people because it smacked of old colonial methods.

He said the British action was being "justifiably deplored and censured" for this both in the Committee and in a superior organ of United Nations.

The situation in Aden and the South Arabian Federation remained "unsatisfactory and precarious" and the lack of progress towards decolonization was due to British refusal to implement the United Nations' resolutions.

Britain blamed current troubles in South Arabia and Aden on "outside elements". But this, he said, was neither convincing nor praiseworthy as it was a "typical colonial gamut to try and shift the blame on to others".

B. President G. A. Nasser's Visit: President G. A. Nasser of the United Arab Republic paid a surprise visit to Sanaa, Capital of Yemen, on April 23.

Sanaa Radio said he received a hero's welcome by 1,000 cheering Yemenis headed by President Abdullah Sallal. All day long the Radio played Egyptian nationalistic songs and music interspersed with glowing tributes to "Nasser, protector of Yemen".

President Nasser was accompanied by Marshal Abdul Hakim Amer, Vice-President and Deputy Commander of the UAR forces, and Mr. Zakariya Mohieddin, Vice-President.

Crowds along the route from the airport to the city frequently stopped the open car in which President Nasser and President Sallal travelled to slaughter sheep in welcome.

This was President Nasser's first visit to Yemen.

President Nasser said to a crowd of thousands in a broadcast speech: "We swear by God to expel Britain from all parts of the Arab world. We shed blood and sacrificed souls and were victorious. We shall shed blood and sacrifice souls and we shall be victorious as we were in Egypt and in Yemen."

Referring to the "occupied South" (Aden and the neighbouring British protectorates) and "British aggression" on Yemen territory, he said: "Britain, which looks upon your revolution with hatred and disgust, must take up its staff and leave Aden and the South.

"It is our duty to help our brothers fighting British colonialism and those who suffer oppression in the prisons of British colonialism.

"I remember our brothers in the occupied south (Aden and the protectorates) who are exposed to the harshest form of tyranny and oppression under British colonialism.

"In the name of the people of the UAR and the Yemen, I say we are with you with our blood, hearts and souls."

Communique:

UAR and Yemen are to set up a committee to co-ordinate their political and economic policies, according to a joint communique issued on April 28 at the end of President Nasser's talks with President Sallal.

The communique said that British forces must withdraw from Aden and the Protectorates in South Arabia. It criticised the British Government for not allowing a UN Committee to enter these territories. (The Committee was set up by the UN De-Colonization Commission).

President Nasser returned to Cairo on April 28.

British Reaction:

Britain protested to United Nations on April 24 over a speech by President G. A. Nasser pledging to hurl the British out of the Arab world.

A Foreign Office communication to the UN Secretary-General, U Thant said: "President Nasser's words would only make more difficult the settlement of Britain's dispute with Yemen."

The British statement drew U Thant's attention to President Nasser's words and added: "In Her Majesty's Government's view this speech must make it more difficult for the Secretary-General to carry out his task of using his good offices to try to settle outstanding issues between the Yemen and the Federation of South Arabia."

A Security Council resolution of April 9 empowered U Thant to try to settle the dispute between Yemen and the neighbouring British-protected Federation.

C. Political Bureau Approves Pacts With USSR: Sanaa Radio announced on March 30 that the Republic's 12-man Political Bureau had unanimously approved on March 29 all the Agreements concluded by President A. Sallal during his visit to the Soviet Union (see below).

The Bureau, which is headed by the President, further endorsed all contacts the President and his delegation had in Moscow.

The Council appreciated the unconditional aid given by the Soviet Union, as well as the support given to Yemen's revolution.

Moscow had offered free aid to Yemen, a long-term loan and delayed payments on earlier loans during the visit by President Sallal.

A spokesman of the French Foreign Ministry made it clear in Paris that France would advocate admission of China to all international organizations.

The proclamation re-iterated that Yemen was prepared to accept unconditional aid from East or West, provided the assistance was based on mutual respect. (The United States is financing and undertaking a road building project in the Red Sea country.)

The statement, according to the Radio, re-iterated Yemen's policy of non-alignment, peaceful co-existence and the combating of imperialism in all its forms.

D. Alleged British Air Violations—Protest To UN Security Council: Yemen lodged a protest on April 16 with the UN Security Council against alleged new British flights over Yemeni territory.

In a Note to the Council, the Permanent Yemeni Representative at UN said his country had to protest, particularly in view of Britain's violation of the Security Council resolution calling on Yemen and the Aden Federation to respect each other's territory.

E. President Sallal's Visit To USSR: President Abdullah Sallal arrived in Moscow on March 16 on a State visit at the invitation of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of USSR.

He was received at the airport by the Soviet President, Mr. Leonid Brezhnev, and prominent Soviet leaders.

Later in the evening, the Presidium and the Soviet Government gave a dinner in the Kremlin in honour of President Sallal.

President Sallal had talks with the Soviet President, Mr. L. Brezhnev, in Moscow on March 16.

A joint communique issued on March 24 at the end of President Sallal's visit said the Soviet Union would give more economic and technical assistance to Yemen.

The communique supported Yemen's demand for Britain's withdrawal from Aden as well as President G. A. Nasser's call for an end to foreign bases in Arab countries and in Cyprus.

President Sallal also signed a Treaty of Friendship with the Soviet Union.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

SUMMARY: WHO Assembly; Cut In US Foreign Aid Programme; Commonwealth Trade Ministers' Conference; Earthquake In Alaska:

A. WHO Assembly: About 400 doctors, officials and public health specialists from the member-States of the World Health Organization (WHO) took part in the 17th session of the World Health Assembly, which opened in Geneva on March 3.

Mr. Moses Majekodunmi, Minister of Health of the Federation of Nigeria and President of the World Health Assembly in 1963, presided over the opening session at which the new President was elected.

[The World Health Assembly meets once a year to review the year's activities, to decide on the Organization's programme and budget for the next year, and to adopt international health policies to further WHO's objectives. The Assembly's main task is to give WHO a programme for 1965 (about 1,000 projects are proposed), and to fix the budget to which all member-States will contribute.]

The effective working budget proposed by the Director-General for 1965 amounts to $38,360,000—an increase of about 11 per cent over the 1964 level. More than one-half of this increase (54 per cent) would meet some of the more pressing requests for public health programmes of member-Governments and 16 per cent would provide for the expansion of international medical research.

In his introduction to the 1965 programme and budget document, the Director-General, Dr. M. G. Candau said: "The programme for 1965 attempts to underline three fields of activity of primary importance to the future success of the Organization's work—national health planning, education and training, and research.

"Critical shortage of educational facilities for health workers and a serious lack of teachers in pre-clinical and para-clinical subjects, are among the major problems which the world will still have to face in 1965. WHO plans to help remedy this situation in 1965 through a series of expert committee meetings, which will go into the various aspects of this question.

"There is hardly any WHO programme that does not have a substantial research component and the ultimate success of which does not depend on the increased knowledge born of research".

To increase the research potential of all countries, and particularly that of the developing nations, WHO plans in 1965 to make significant contributions in the three following fields—research training grants; exchange of research workers; tuberculosis, nutrition and immunology.

The subjects covered by WHO-assisted medical research projects include cardio-vascular diseases, cancer, virus diseases, tuberculosis, nutrition and immunology.

Several sessions were devoted to the question of water supply which was the subject of this year's informal "technical discussions" to be held under the chairmanship of Mr. Abel Wolman, a professor of Johns Hopkins University in the United States.

It has been estimated that to provide the urban population of Africa, Asia and Latin America with piped water within reasonable distance of their homes, by 1980, would cost at least $400 million a year. Present construction rate, however, is probably under $50 million a year. Yet the suggested rate of $400 million a year is less than 0.25 per cent of the gross national product of the countries concerned.

New President:

Dr. M. K. Afridi of Pakistan was on March 3 unanimously elected President of the Assembly.

Dr. Afridi who took over from Dr. M. A. Majekodunmi will also be the President of the World Health Organization during the coming year.

Dr. E. B. S. Lumu, Uganda's Health Minister, Mr. J. Alvarez Amerquita, Mexican Health Minister, and Dr. Hurustiati Subandrio, of Indonesia, were elected Vice-Presidents.

A number of African nations, including Senegal, Nigeria and Somalia, protested in the Assembly against the presence of South African delegates.

Membership Of China—French Bid Fails:

The Assembly rejected a French proposal to seat Peking in place of Formosa.

The Credentials Committee's report was adopted with 51 votes in favour, 21 against and 22 abstentions.

The Committee said that Formosa was the "sole representative of the Chinese people".

France voted against the report. The USA, South Viet-Nam and South Korea voted in favour, Sweden, Norway, Yugoslavia and the Malagasy Republic were among those who abstained.

A spokesman of the French Foreign Ministry made it clear in Paris that France would advocate admission of China to all international organisations. France's attitude, he pointed out, was "normal and logical."

The French demand was rejected by Mr. Nathaniel McKitterick, leader of the US delegation, who said: "China is represented rightfully in this Assembly."

He said the last UN General Assembly had decided that the Formosa regime should represent China in UN. "In these essentially political matters, let us not here and now challenge the authority of the General Assembly either for innocent reasons or for propaganda purposes".

In Washington, the State Department made it clear that USA would continue to oppose China's admission to UN and all organizations associated with the world Organization.

African Refusal To Vote For Budget:

African countries at the Assembly on March 11 refused to vote for next year's Budget of the Organization in protest against the racial policies of South Africa and Portugal, both members of WHO.

The Ghana delegate told the Assembly that the 33 African delegations did not wish to obstruct the work of WHO, but wanted to draw the attention of the world to the seriousness of the present situation in Africa.

The Budget of over $38,000,000 was finally adopted by 73 votes to three, with all the African delegations abstaining.

South Africa's Expulsion—Resolution Approved:

African States submitted a resolution to the Assembly on March 17 demanding the expulsion or suspension of South Africa from the Organization.

The resolution was presented by the Senegalese delegate, Dr. Hamat Ba, who spoke in the name of all States of the Organization of African Unity.

The resolution, presented in the Assembly's financial and legal committee, called on the World Health Organization to withdraw immediately South Africa's right to vote.

It also invited the Organization's executive committee and the Director-General to submit to the 18th Assembly formal proposals for the suspension or expulsion from the World Health Organization of all members who violate the WHO principles and whose official policy is based on racial discrimination.

Dr. Hamat Ba said that a resolution adopted by the Assembly last year had invited the South African Government to renounce its policy of apartheid in the interests of the physical, mental and social well-being of the population. This had not been followed by the South African Government, which continued to scorn both the UN Charter and the WHO resolutions.

The World Health Organization on March 18 approved the resolution proposing the suspension or expulsion of South Africa because of its apartheid policy.

The vote was 63 to 22, with one abstention.

The following day, South Africa withdrew from the Assembly.

Decisions:

The 17th session of the Assembly ended on March 20.

It reviewed the work of WHO in 1963, recommended measures for an intensified assault on major diseases and admitted four new associate members to WHO. They were Malta, Northern Rhodesia, Nyasaland and Qatar. They brought the total of members and associate members in WHO to 125.

In a concluding statement to the session the Assembly President, Mr. Monawar Khan Afridi of Pakistan, said the achievements of the Assembly had been of "no mean order". However, he added, certain events should be reviewed later and in perspective, especially "our hazardous incursion into the non-medical areas, entry into which we have so far scrupulously avoided".

"What is essential is that we keep our ears constantly attuned to the cry of misery and disease that reaches us from millions of men, women and children to which we alone are capable of responding with expert skill that we have painfully acquired over the years. We must beware of the perils of playing at politics for which we have neither the training nor aptitude nor experience."

The Assembly noted that the malaria eradication campaign of WHO now covered more than two-thirds of the world population previously exposed to this disease, and that many millions of people living in areas in the "attack phase" were already benefiting from a striking reduction of malaria infection.

It also noted that during the next two years 200 million doses of smallpox vaccine, estimated to cost $2 million, would be required by countries engaged in smallpox eradication campaigns. It asked the Director-General of WHO to prepare a further comprehensive plan for the world-wide eradication of smallpox.

It was pointed out that water-borne diseases such as typhoid and para-typhoid fever, dysentery and cholera every year kill five million babies and attack 500 million people. The Assembly recommended to member-States of WHO that greater emphasis be given in national programmes to the provision of safe and adequate water supplies for communities, and asked the Director-General to continue to assist member-States in this direction.

After discussing a proposal for the establishment of a world health research centre, the Assembly agreed that it was desirable to apply the latest advances in communications, science and technology under the aegis of WHO towards improving and co-ordinating the world-wide exchange of information on health problems and bio-medical research". It asked the WHO Director-General to continue his study of this subject and report back to the Assembly and the WHO Executive Board.

The Assembly also authorized the Director-General to enter into discussions with five countries—West Germany, France, Italy, United Kingdom and the United States—with a view to the establishment of a world research agency for cancer. It was proposed that the agency be financed by 0.5 per cent of the military budgets of these countries, and that it work in close contact with the secretariat of WHO.

The Assembly decided that WHO should re-inforce its efforts to prevent a recurrence of disasters such as that caused when women taking the drug thalidomide gave birth to deformed babies. It unanimously adopted a resolution suggesting measures to prevent the "dumping" of sub-standard drugs in developing countries. Countries exporting drugs were asked by the Assembly to consider the possibility of making testing facilities available to an importing country where they did not exist.

The Assembly decided to hold its next session in Switzerland.

B. Cut In US Foreign Aid Programme: The American President, Mr. Lyndon B. Johnson, sent to Congress on March 19 a sharply-cut foreign aid programme, calling for $3,400,000 to combat world-wide poverty, ignorance and communism in 1964-65.

The recommended sum, for the fiscal year beginning July 1, took into account mounting Congressional displeasure with foreign aid.

It totalled $1,100 million less than the figure sought by the late President J. F. Kennedy for the current fiscal year and equalled the appropriations provided in December, 1963 after a prolonged fight in Congress.

The foreign aid money voted for this year's programme consists of $3,000 million in new funds and $400 million carried over from previous programmes.

President Johnson's specific recommendations called for $1,000 million in military aid for the new programme and $2,400 million in economic assistance.

Privately, Administration sources agreed that the White House was taking a gamble in hoping that an appropriations request trimmed of all its padding would not suffer further cuts at the hands of foreign aid foes in Congress.

President Johnson, in a special message requesting the funds, said: "It would be repugnant to the national interest if USA retreated from its obligations, while freedom remained under siege."

The message gave only a brief analysis of where funds would go in the coming new fiscal year.

Two-thirds of the proposed military assistance, the President said, would be allocated to 11 nations along the periphery of the Sino-Soviet bloc, from Greece and Turkey through Thailand and Viet-Nam to Formosa and South Korea.

Supporting assistance—funds used chiefly in countries facing defence or security emergencies—would continue to be reduced, and 14 countries which received supporting assistance three years ago (the President did not name them) would receive none under the new programme.

Four-fifths of this type of aid in the new programme would go to four countries—South Korea, South Viet-Nam, Laos and Jordan.

Two-thirds of the development lending proposed for the new fiscal year, including alliances for progress loans in Latin America, would be concentrated in six countries—Chile, Colombia, Nigeria, Turkey, Pakistan and India.

President Johnson said that USA would speed up the transition from reliance on aid to self-support wherever possible. In 17 nations, he said, the transition had been completed and economic aid had ended.

He disclosed that 14 countries—unnamed in the message to Congress—were approaching the point where soft economic loans and grants would no longer be needed.

In addition, new funds for military equipment grants were being requested for seven fewer countries than for the current fiscal year.

Country-by country analyses of the allocation of appropriated funds in the new fiscal year will be released at Congressional hearings later.

The AID agency gave the following regional analysis respecting the major portion of the $2,400 million in economic assistance funds requested by the President:

Near East and South Asia—$38 million in support assistance, and $834 million in development assistance;

Latin America—$17 million and $570 million;

Far East—$262 million, and $118 million;

Africa—$31 million, and $188 million.

President Johnson told Congress that USA would seek greater international participation in aid programmes for under-developed countries.

He said that other "free world" industrial countries had increased their aid since the early 1950's and there were indications that further increases were being planned by Britain, France and others.

He asked Congress to support continuing US subscription to the International Development Association, a World Bank affiliate. (The Administration refused to accept a recent House of Representatives vote which rejected new US commitments for the IDA).

Mr. Johnson also requested authority to provide a special tax credit for private investment by US businessmen in less developed countries.

He announced that he had decided to keep economic assistance under the control of the Agency for International Development (AID) and to reject call for absorption of the Agency in the State Department.

C. Russian Refusal To Pay For UN Costs In Congo And Middle East: A message from UN Headquarters on March 21 said that the Soviet Union had stressed that it would never help pay for the UN Congo and Middle East forces and hinted that any challenge to its General Assembly vote on that account might break up United Nations.

A Government statement issued by the Soviet delegation added that if any effort was made to withdraw the vote, "we may be obliged to reconsider our attitude toward United Nations activities."

[The International Court of Justice has given an advisory opinion that these are legitimate expenses that must be borne by all members.]

The Soviet statement said that any "groundless changes" prompted by Moscow's position would be regarded as "an unfriendly act towards USSR."

It said it would like to make it "absolutely clear" it would regard any action to take away the Soviet vote "as the actions of those who do not care for United Nations and who do not take into account the prospect of its break-up as the result of such actions."

[The Soviet Union is one of 18 countries that stand to lose their votes in the 112-nation Assembly next Autumn if a controversial financial provision of the Charter is applied. This provision, Article 19, says any UN member two years behind its dues "shall have no vote" unless the Assembly finds its non-payment stems from conditions beyond its control.]

Diplomatic sources said the United States and Britain had sought to head off a showdown over this Article in a private talk with the Soviet delegation on March 6. The two countries had proposed that the Soviet Union pay part of its Congo and Middle East assessments and accept a compromise giving the Security Council more power as against the General Assembly to start new peace-keeping operations; and creating a 15-nation Assembly Committee with major Power participation to arrange the financing.

The informants said the Soviet delegation had not yet had Moscow's reply to this proposal, but the statement seemed to herald a rejection.

The United States, like the International Court, and most other countries, contend that Congo and Middle East dues must be counted along with regular budget assessments in figuring whether a country is two years behind.

Those more than two years in arrears now are the Soviet bloc—the Soviet Union, Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, Rumania, and White Russia—plus Argentina, Bolivia, Formosa, the Dominican Republic, Haiti, Paraguay, the United Arab Republic, Uruguay and Yemen. France is due to join the list on January 1, 1965.

The Soviet Union owes $52,623,137 in Congo and Middle East dues and would have to pay $8 million to keep from being two years behind over-all. Altogether 72 members owe about $84 million for Congo and 63 owe about $30 million for the Middle East.

D. Commonwealth Trade Ministers' Conference: A two-day Conference of Commonwealth Trade Ministers began in London on March 19.

The Ministers examined problems which will confront the UN Conference on Trade and Development when opened in Geneva the following week. They exchanged views on various issues.

According to a London correspondent, it became apparent that the developing countries attach the greatest importance to the question of removing trade barriers and providing access to the markets of the developed countries for the manufactures and semi-manufactures of the developing nations.

There were 12 speakers on March 19 at what was described as a useful and constructive session. Speeches came from representatives of developed and developing members of the Commonwealth, and between them, in one way and another, covered practically all the major issues which are likely to be raised at the UN Conference.

Great emphasis was placed on the need for removing restrictions which impeded access to the markets of developed countries for the manufactured and semi-manufactured goods of the developing countries. It was pointed out that it was not really possible for the developing countries to build an export trade in manufactured goods if the quota on the market of a developed country was restricted to a tiny figure. All the developing members of the Commonwealth were greatly concerned about this.

There was also discussion on the question of institutions governing trade. There was some criticism of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), but the majority of the delegations from the developing countries took the view that it was desirable to build on existing institutions and to develop and adapt them, rather than discard ruthlessly those institutions already in existence and start again with some grandiose scheme. There was clearly a strong view that while institutional changes might be necessary, these could be achieved by adapting GATT, a view which was shared by Britain. Action in GATT to meet the needs of the developing countries is, of course, already in hand.

The session was opened by the British Secretary of State for Industry, Trade and Regional Development and President of the Board of Trade, Mr. Edward Heath, who briefly explained the British position on the main issues before the UN Conference.

On commodity prices, he recognized the very real problem which this question posed, and said that Britain was prepared to co-operate in the study of commodity agreements designed to prevent catastrophic falls in prices. But he said it was essential to study commodities one by one, because each had its own particular problems, and not all commodities were suitable for treatment by special agreements. The level of the price itself presented problems, because if it were too high the result might be disadvantageous in that it might discourage consumption of the product or encourage substitution.

He restated the British position on preferences, which is that Britain is prepared to consider the case for the manufactured and semi-manufactured goods of developing countries on three conditions—that the industrialized countries as a whole are prepared to grant preferences; that Commonwealth countries are prepared to release Britain from contractual obligations to give them preference; and that new preferences are not created by raising an existing "most-favoured-nation" tariff.

On institutions, he said that Britain was opposed to the formation of any new International Trade Organization.

Conference Ends:

The Conference ended on March 20.

The UN Conference was the only topic discussed by the Ministers. A brief communique emphasized the "frank and valuable exchange of views" on questions of international trade and especially the trade and development problems of the developing countries which are to be discussed at the Conference.

The communique said that the Ministers' discussions had highlighted the importance which all Commonwealth Governments attached to the Geneva Conference and their determination to do all in their power to contribute to its success.

Mr. Edward Heath said afterwards that the views put forward by the Commonwealth representatives had been "moderate and reasonable", and they had "clarified a considerable number of the issues". He very much doubted whether anything would be brought up at Geneva which had not been raised by one delegate or another at the London meeting.

It was generally accepted that the approach to the UN Conference "should be one of co-operation between the developed and the developing countries and not a question of animosity between two sides", and this was "very important". Prosperity, he said, was indivisible—the more the developed countries increased their own strength, the better able were they to help the developing countries.

Mr. Heath (who was speaking to correspondents as Chairman of the meeting) said that in considering the problems of the developing countries the most important aspect was the question of access to the markets of the developed countries for the products of the developing nations. "Everyone emphasized that whatever other aspects you considered, what really mattered to the developing countries was access." This, he added, was also the British view.

On commodity prices, there was general agreement on the need for each to be dealt with on its own merits. "There was full recognition that if you try to get too high a price for a commodity you will affect consumption and encourage substitutes, and so the country of origin of the commodity will be no better off than before."

There were some Commonwealth representatives who wanted to see new institutions for international trade—and they were limited to two or three. "But," said Mr. Heath, "I think the great measure of agreement was that we should try to build on existing foundations, and where people were dissatisfied with GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade), try to improve it.

"They all recognized that you cannot solve problems through institutions. What you need is a change of policies which are carried on within the institutions. And this is really the means to get other countries to provide access for the products of the developing countries."

Some of the suggestions put forward on the subject of institutions included the idea that there can be a link with the Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) of the United Nations, or that the Geneva Conference might be the first of a continuing series.

On the question of preferences, he said that a wide range of suggestions was put forward as to how these might be handled. There was discussion of the British position—she would consider accepting in principle proposals under which the developed nations grant preferences to the developing countries, subject to three conditions.

These are: (1) that joint action would be taken by all the developed countries; (2) that the Commonwealth countries would be prepared to release Britain from contractual obligations to accord them preferences; and (3) that new preferences should not be created by raising the "most-favoured-nation" rates.

He said that the Commonwealth countries were approaching the question pragmatically. They seemed ready to consider proposals if they were put forward at Geneva, provided that there would be a worthwhile return for them.

He said that everyone at the Trade Ministers' meeting recognized the difficulty of getting detailed negotiations going at a conference attended by over 120 countries. (The Geneva Conference, due to last three months, will be attended by some 122 countries.)

"We should try to get the objectives of the Conference right, see what the problems are, and then see if we can get out of it some sort of outline as to the way in which the problems can be solved."

As a result of the two-day meeting and the frank discussion which had taken place, he added, "all the countries of the Commonwealth will go into the Geneva Conference with a much fuller understanding of each other's problems and the potential solutions to them. And this should enable us to co-operate most closely during the Conference".

A London despatch on March 20 said that the continuation as a permanent international organization of the UN Conference on Trade and Development will be backed by all Commonwealth countries.

This was one of the points of agreement which emerged from the Commonwealth Trade Ministers' Conference. India favours the idea and has canvassed it among friendly countries.

As envisaged in the discussions, the proposed new body will periodically review the progress of world trade and explore ways for its expansion with the needs of less developed countries in mind.

It will have a permanent secretariat and standing committees on various aspects of world trade. It will be, in the words of Mr. Manubhai Shah, who represented India in London and will represent India at Geneva, an international umbrella over world trade seeking by agreement to achieve a more equitable distribution of trade.

There was very little support in the Conference for the establishment of an international trade organization on the pattern of the Security Council on the ground that trade cannot be expanded by sanctions or international dictates.

It became clear that all Commonwealth countries were prepared to give up Commonwealth preferences, if industrialized countries gave non-discriminatory treatment and preference on the whole range of goods from developing countries.

Mr. Manubhai Shah of India emphasized that a reasonable and just relation must be established between prices of primary raw materials and semi-manufactures and prices of manufactured goods of developed countries. Today they bore no relation to the detriment of the developing countries. The gap tended to grow as the prices of finished products rose constantly to keep abreast of the soaring standards in the developed countries, while the prices of primary products remained low or rose disproportionately. The result was that developing countries had to export more to buy more expensive manufactures of the industrialized nations.

Finally, the despatch said, the London Conference agreed that the UN meeting must succeed in showing the way to help developing countries. The hopes of millions of people were involved and failure would be disastrous not only for a greater part of the world but would also be harmful for peace.

The well-known facts of the serious trade situation at present were re-iterated by Mr. Shah. He pointed out that the share of world trade of developing countries was 50 per cent to 20 per cent, whereas they should have population-wise 72 per cent. On the other hand, trade of developed countries had doubled. The loss in trade of developing countries was three times the aid given to them.

E. Earthquake In Alaska: The heart of the metropolitan city of Anchorage was virtually destroyed by an earthquake that shook Alaska on the night of March 27.

The quake struck at 5.36 p.m. at the height of the rush hour. Hundreds of persons were caught out in the streets or en route home in cars. Huge cracks opened in the ground, two of which were from six to 12 feet deep and ranged from six to 50 feet wide.

The earthquake was one of the severest in history. In the city centre, three-storeyed concrete buildings—many of them quite new—tumbled or caved in upon themselves. Power supply totally failed and rescue work had to be carried out with emergency lights. There was also lack of water supply. Regular communications with other cities were not established until more than 8½ hours after the earthquake.

Extensive damage was reported in other cities. Oil tanks burst and fires broke out.

The State Police Civil Defence Coordinator, Mr. Vince Chellis, said that Seward, 100 miles south of Anchorage, was "half gone and on fire", and that a tanker in the Alaskan Gulf Port had caught fire and burned.

In Anchorage more than 50 houses were reported to have rolled over a cliff when the ground broke away under their foundations. About 50 per cent of the buildings were destroyed in the centre of Anchorage. Valdez was "wiped out".

The Los Angeles coast guard reported that a 12-foot wave from the quake had hit the Northern California sea coast towns of Crescent City and Humboldt Bay.

In Berkeley, California, the University seismograph registered the quake as between eight and 8½ points on the Richter scale.

Anchorage was rocked again by a series of earth tremors on March 28.

Huge tidal waves caused by the quake struck Crescent City in California, killing 10 persons and injuring dozens of others. In addition to those drowned, some 50 persons were reported missing in that town of 3,000 inhabitants.

Tidal waves travelled 100 miles in 25 minutes and crashed over the Washington coast, knocking out bridges and causing evacuation of several areas.

The 150 buildings which formed the business section of the city were destroyed or damaged. All the inhabitants who were able to, fled the area and were saved. Four great oil tanks exploded and burned as a result of short circuits in the electric lines.

Alaska's Military Command reported that 82 persons were killed or missing and 70 injured in the earthquake.

The US Pentagon announced that the Alaska earthquake had destroyed or damaged civil and military airports in Anchorage, military hospitals, and planes which were on the ground. The announcement was made on the basis of reports received from General Raymond Reeves, Commander-in-Chief of American forces in Alaska.

It said the areas hardest hit by the earthquake were Anchorage, Valdez, Seward, Cordova, Kenai and Kodiak.

The Alaska earthquake had released ten times more energy than the atomic bomb which doomed Hiroshima near the end of World War II. The US Coast and Geodetic Survey's Director of Seismology, Mr. Leonard Murphy, gave this comparison in a preliminary analysis of reports from Alaska and reports about the earthquake received from more than 100 stations on all the continents. The Hiroshima bomb's energy release was equivalent to 2,000 tons of TNT (explosive).

The earthquake was widely felt in British Columbia, but no serious damage was reported.

In Moscow, Tass, the Soviet news agency, said a "very strong" earthquake was recorded by the Soviet seismological station in Moscow.

According to provisional data, the epicentre of the earthquake was in the area of the Aleutian Depression, 7,300 kilometres from Moscow.

So strong were the tremors of the Alaskan earthquake felt in Britain that the seismograph at the Science Museum in London nearly went out of action.

The worst earthquake of recent times was at Tokyo in 1923 when 90,000 people were killed. Major earthquakes recorded during the 1960s have been: 1960 (March)—12,000 were killed and 2,000 injured when the city of Agadir was destroyed; 1960 (April)—3,500 were killed or injured and more than 17,000 homeless in a double earthquake in the South Persian towns of Lar and Garash; 1960 (May-June)—over 2,000 people were killed in a series of earthquakes at Concepcion, Chile (370,000 homeless); 1962—more than 11,000 persons were killed in the worst-ever Iranian earthquake at Tehran; 1963—half the town of Barce, Libya was demolished and 262 persons were killed; 1963—more than 1,000 were killed and 3,350 injured at Skoplje in Yugoslavia.

Eastern Seaboard Of USA Lifted By Earthquake:

It was revealed by the US Bureau of Standards on March 30 that the Alaskan earthquake had moved the US Capital and much of the American eastern seaboard by about two inches, then put it back where it had been.

The ground on which Washington stands went up in the air about an inch, then sank about two inches from that new height, then rose by two inches. These ups-and-downs went on for about two hours on a diminishing scale, finally leaving the land at its original level.

The ground also moved a bit sideways. Over-all, the motion can best be described as a slow, rolling vibration.

Why did this movement do no damage? Why did people not even feel it? Dr. R. K. Cook, Chief of the Sound Section of the Bureau of Standards, explained that there was no great jar, no rending of the earth's crust; it was a slow movement taking about 12 seconds up and down, and it occurred with much uniformity over wide areas. Thus, all the foundations, and other parts of a building no matter how big, would move uniformly without any damage.

The motions were detected by instruments attuned to low frequency sound, well below the hearing range of the human ear, and then were recorded photographically in the form of waving lines. Here is the idea: seismic, or shock waves from the earthquake travelled inside the Earth and produced the vibrations. These in turn caused alternating changes in air pressure, thus turning the Earth into a huge loudspeaker. The Bureau's modern equipment then recorded those sounds.

F. Jack Ruby Sentenced To Death: In Dallas (USA), Jack Ruby was convicted on March 14 of murdering Lee Harvey Oswald who had assassinated President John F. Kennedy, and sentenced to death in the electric chair.

Jack Ruby, 52-year-old strip club operator, was found guilty of murdering Lee Harvey Oswald, and the jury set the sentence as death in the electric chair.

Judge Joe B. Brown, who read the verdict shortly before midnight, ordered the jurors escorted back to the deliberation room and dismissed.

But the Judge had said earlier he would wait for the defence to file motions before actually pronouncing sentence.

The defence had already stated that if Ruby was found guilty of murder with malicious intent, it would appeal.

The verdict came after the jury had deliberated for two hours and 19 minutes. It found Ruby guilty of murder, with malice aforethought, in the shooting of Oswald.

There was no demonstration following the Judge's instructions that the courtroom audience must remain quiet and seated until dismissed.

Ruby had shot Oswald at point blank range in Dallas police headquarters on November 21, 1962—two days after Mr. Kennedy was cut down by a sniper's bullet.

Throughout the month-long trial, the defence claimed Ruby's mind was so unhinged at the time he shot Oswald that he was incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong.

The jury's verdict read: "We, the jury, find the defendant was sane at the time the events charged in the indictment are alleged to have been committed and we further find that the defendant is sane now at the time of his trial, and we further find the defendant guilty of murder with malice, as charged in the indictment and assess his punishment as death".

G. West German Trade With East Asia: A Dusseldorf message on March 12 said that West Germany's trade with East Asia had increased by four per cent to DM4.881 billion in 1963.

In 1962, it was DM4.692 billion. Imports rose by 8.5 per cent from DM1.938 billion to DM2.103 billion.

East Asia's share in the total West German foreign trade was 4.4 per cent compared to 4.5 per cent in 1962.

Compared with 1962, when for the first time since the War, West German imports from and exports to East Asia declined, the present trend is a good one, says the Ostasiatischer Verein (East Asian Association) in Hamburg.

The total West German imports rose by 5.6 per cent to DM52.3 billion, and the total West German exports by 10 per cent to DM53.3 billion.

The main reason for the falling West German exports to East Asia was stated to be the increasing indebtedness of West German partners in East Asia. West Germany is not able to agree to the demand for long-term export credits. Besides, the possibility of establishing factories in developing countries has become remote in view of measures like nationalization, etc.

The West German export surplus in trade with East Asia declined to DM677.7 million (DM816.8 million). The increase in imports, however, does not help developing countries in East Asia because finished products from Japan and Hong Kong are the greater beneficiaries.

According to preliminary figures, imports of finished goods increased in 1963. In the period under review, 40 per cent of East Asian goods were imported via third countries, particularly via Great Britain, the Netherlands and Switzerland. The share of direct imports rose a little.

Nearly 90 per cent of West German exports to East Asian countries are finished goods. Machines top the list, followed by chemical products, cars, electro-technical products, goods, pharmaceutical products and optics.

The most important trade partners for West Germany in East Asia are Japan and India. Their share in its trade with East Asia is 27 per cent and 20 per cent respectively. These countries are followed by Malaysia (10 per cent), the Philippines (8.2 per cent), Indonesia (7.5 per cent), Hong Kong (7.1 per cent), and Thailand (5.6 per cent).

I. Space Zone Of Radiation—Discovery By US Satellite: An American scientist on March 12 reported the discovery of a large zone of high energy radiation stretching out behind the Earth in the direction away from the Sun.

He described the zone as streaming back like the wake of a ship, and suggested that the Moon must be peppered with high energy particles during that part of its monthly journey round the Earth when it is passing through the radiation.

The existence of this hitherto unknown radiation was reported by instruments in the interplanetary monitoring plant, or Imp satellite, which was launched by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration on November 26, 1963 to study the dangers which solar flares present to manned space flights.

The new radiation zone is believed not to be so intense as to be dangerous to manned flight, but it stretches out far beyond the well-known Van Allen radiation belt. Its existence was disclosed by Dr. Kinsey A. Anderson, of the University of California, at a symposium on the results of the Imp experiment held at the NASA space flight centre at Greenbelt, Maryland. Dr. Anderson described his discovery in the following words: "A bulky region of high energy radiation has been detected far beyond the usual reaches of the Earth's radiation belt. The region appears to fan out beyond the belt on either side of the Earth and trail off in a kind of wake in the direction away from the Sun. The extent of this radiation wake suggests that the Moon may be peppered with high energy radiation particles during a portion of each monthly lunar orbit."

It is still not clear whether the zone can properly be described as a part of the Van Allen belt, but in the direction of the Sun it appears to be farther out than the 40,000 miles of the Van Allen belt. How far the radiation trails back into space away from the Sun is not known, but it is suggested that it is farther than the 240,000 miles between the Earth and the Moon.

Dr. Anderson believes it to be caused by a collision between the Earth's magnetic forces and the particles streaming from the Sun, which are normally referred to as the solar wind.

The Science Correspondent of The Times, London wrote: "The most likely explanation of Dr. Kinsey Anderson's comment about the Moon is a suggestion that more distant radiation areas would tend to be 'blown out' on the far side of the Earth from the Sun, so that they extended farther on that side than on the Sunward side. The implication, in any case, is that the new radiation belt may extend some 10 times farther from the Earth than the outer limit of the outer Van Allen belt."

L. Soviet Satellite Crashes In Canada: The Soviet artificial satellite Cosmos XXIII broke up and crashed on March 27 in the Canadian Province of Quebec.

This was stated by a spokesman of the Smithsonian Astrophysical Institute at Harvard University. The satellite weighed several tons.

Earlier, an alert was sounded in Sydney where Mr. Gordon Patson, director of the Australian Government observatory at Bellfield, said wreckage from Cosmos XXIII could crash down into the city on the morning of March 27.

The Smithsonian spokesman said the area where the debris landed from Cosmos had not been pinpointed.

Another spokesman at Smithsonian said the last sighting along Cosmos's predicted path was made by an amateur astronomer about 100 miles north of Duluth, Minnesota.

From the Duluth astronomer's report, the Smithsonian spokesman said pieces of the satellite would have landed somewhere over Quebec at about 6 a.m. on March 27.

In Washington, Captain J. K. Holcomb, director of flight operations for the NASA Apollo space programme, said that Cosmos XXIII was observed by "Moonwatch" to re-enter the atmosphere over the Great Lakes early on March 27.

Mr. James Cornell, Smithsonian public information officer, said that newspapers, radio and television stations and police in Quebec had been asked to watch for the debris.

Tass reported that the new Soviet satellite's scientific equipment was functioning normally and that its radio transmitter was operating on 19,735 megacycles.

Cosmos XXIII, a cosmic research satellite, was sent into orbit on December 13, 1963. As its three-month life ended, Russia announced that she had launched another in the Cosmos series, Cosmos XXVII.

Cosmos XXVII was circling the Earth once every 88.7 minutes in an orbit varying from 237 km (147 miles) to 192 km (119 miles) up, at an angle of inclination of 64 degrees 48 minutes.

M. "Cosmos XXVI" Launched By USSR: The Soviet Union on March 18 launched Cosmos XXVI, an unmanned satellite of the Cosmos series.

The satellite carried scientific instrumentation designed to continue outer space studies in conformity with the programme announced on March 16, 1962.

The new sputnik had been orbited with the following parameters: period of rotation round the Earth—91 minutes; apogee—403 kilometres; perigee—271 kilometres; and inclination—49 degrees.

The scientific equipment, the radio system for accurate measurement of the orbit elements, the radio-telemetric system for the transmission to the Earth of data on the functioning of instruments were functioning normally. The co-ordinating computing centre was processing the information as it came in.

"Cosmos XXVIII" Launched:

On April 4, the Soviet Union launched another satellite in the Cosmos series—Cosmos XXVIII.

It carried scientific instruments for continued space research in accordance with the programme announced by Tass on March 16, 1962.

The orbital elements of the satellite were: period of rotation round the Earth 90.38 minutes; apogee—395 kilometres; perigee—209 kilometres; and inclination—65 degrees.

In addition to scientific equipment, the sputnik carried a radio transmitter working on the frequency of 19.996 megahertz, a radio system for the exact measurement of the orbital elements, and a radio telemetric system for the transmission of scientific information to the Earth.

All equipment on board the sputnik was functioning normally.

Reporting this, the official Czechoslovak news agency Ceteka said that under the Trade Agreement, Czechoslovakia will increase her exports of machinery and engineering equipment, motor vehicles, tractors and other agricultural machinery, diesel engines, telecommunication equipment and other goods.

Her imports from Afghanistan will include cotton, wool, oil seeds, fodder, goat and sheep skins, dried fruit, tinned products, spices, etc.

BURMA

A. Role Of Buddhist Monks In Politics: In a statement issued in Rangoon on April 18, the Chairman of the Revolutionary Council, Gen. Ne Win, asked Buddhist monks to keep aloof from politics, which was worldly, and not to allow their dignity and prestige to be compromised by participation in temporal matters.

He referred to "misunderstandings" that had arisen among the Buddhist sangha (monks) over the recent Government order for registration of all non-political organizations including religious institutions with the Government by the end of April (see page 5795). The date had, however, been extended to the middle of May.

He said: "Since the promulgation of the order for registration there has been controversy among the Buddhist sangha and some of them decided to register, but others have not decided anything."

CEYLON

A. Emigration Inducement Scheme—Workers' Opposition: The Ceylon Workers' Congress, led by Mr. S. Thondaman, has called upon the plantation workers of Indian origin "to reject outright" the inducement scheme announced by the Government for persons willing to leave Ceylon for good.

The Congress in a resolution passed by its general council said on April 19 that the scheme did not reveal a genuine desire on the part of the Ceylon Government to offer an overall solution to the entire problem, nor did it provide adequate facilities or means for rehabilitation even to those who might choose to avail themselves of the scheme.

According to the Congress, the scheme was neither an inducement nor an incentive for persons of Indian origin to leave the country.

The Congress at the same time urged the Government to take positive steps without delay to initiate negotiations with the representatives of the people concerned with a view to arriving at an agreed solution, thus ending the political destitution to which a tenth of the population of Ceylon had been relegated.

[The Immigration and Emigration Department of Ceylon early in April announced a scheme to pay repatriation allowance not exceeding Rs. 1,000 per family willing to leave Ceylon for good.]

CHINA

A. Birthday Greetings To Mr. N. Khruschev: Mr. Mao Tse-tung and other Chinese leaders sent greetings to the Soviet Premier, Mr. N. Khruschev on his 70th birthday on April 15 proclaiming the unity of Russia and China.

The greetings message said that "although at present there are differences between you and us on a number of questions of principle concerning Marxism-Leninism and there is lack of unity, we are deeply convinced that all this is only temporary.

"In the event of a major world crisis, the two parties, our two countries and our two peoples will undoubtedly stand together against our common enemy."

On April 22, Mr. Yuri Andropov, a leading Soviet ideologist, publicly taunted the Chinese about their greetings message, which stated that in the event of a world crisis China and Russia would stand together against a "common enemy".

Speaking at a meeting attended by Mr. Khruschev in Moscow, Mr. Andropov said that this was an important statement, but added: "How does it agree with the slanderous assertions of Chinese propaganda that our country has entered into collusion with the imperialists and has concluded an alliance with them?" He accused the Chinese leaders of insincerity.

He said that on the day that the Chinese leaders sent their message "foul anti-Soviet articles" appeared in the Chinese Press. It was unbelievable that this was done without the knowledge of the Chinese leaders, but "everyone knows the system in China".

At this point Mr. Khruschev interrupted, saying: "Yes, they kill flies under instructions and they catch spiders under instructions".

B. East German Communist Party's Criticism: The East German Communist Party blamed China on April 14 for having "worked up" the Sino-Indian border dispute to open conflict.

In a statement published by the official news agency, ADM, the Central Committee of the Socialist (Communist) Unity Party also called the Chinese leaders racists, nationalists, chauvinists and ultra Leftists.

It was the East German Party's second such attack on the Chinese Communists in 10 days. The previous attack was published in the Central Committee's organ Neues Deutschland on April 5.

The statement said: "The leaders of the Chinese Communist Party have acted so that border questions are now being provoked between them and neighbouring countries. They themselves worked up such questions to enter into a military conflict with the Republic of India.

"What is particularly to be condemned in all this is that their pressure on other peoples does not come from the class standpoint but from the racist standpoint".

C. Trade With Japan: The strengthening of Japan's trade relations with China was reported in despatches from Japanese correspondents in Peking appearing in Tokyo papers on April 18.

The despatches reported that in the negotiations, the leader of the non-official, but high-power Japanese mission led by a senior member of the ruling Liberal-Democratic Party, Mr. Kenzo Matsumura, at the invitation of Mr. Chou En-lai, and the Chinese officials had reached agreement to step up trade in a number of fields. These included a three-year contract for the export of Japanese fertilizer to China and one for Japan's import of Chinese iron-ore and coal on a large scale.

The agreement to import Chinese ore in large quantities would suggest that China may be offering attractive terms to make it profitable enough for the steel makers to go in for it. India now supplies about six million tons yearly (including Goa) and in another three years will be supplying from 10 to 12 million tons.

D. Discovery Of Oilfield: Chinese newspapers reported on April 20 the discovery of a new oilfield and the building of a big, modern refinery there during the past four years.

They said the new field was located at a place called Teaching, but gave no precise indication of its whereabouts, size or productive capacity.

Observers said this was apparent confirmation of recent reports from Hong Kong and Tokyo of the discovery of a large new oilfield in China. It also went some way towards explaining recent Chinese claims that the country was "in the main self-sufficient" in oil.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Pakistani Violation Of Cease-fire In Jammu; US 7th Fleet Enters Indian Ocean; 17th Amendment Bill Rejected; US Loans.

A. Pakistani Violation Of Cease-fire Line In Jammu And Kashmir—Letter To UN Security Council: In a letter to the President of the UN Security Council on April 25, India has charged Pakistan "with deliberately trying to create tension and conflict across the cease-fire line (in Jammu and Kashmir) in utter disregard of the provisions of the Cease-fire Agreement."

The letter, handed by Mr. B. N. Chakravarty, the chief Indian delegate at UN, to the President of the Security Council, drew his attention to the United Nations military observers' verdict against Pakistan over the violation of the cease-fire line at Karen on February 21.

The Indian letter also enclosed a copy of the Indian protest to Pakistan over the incident.

The letter to the Security Council added that "in consequence of this grave violation by Pakistan of the cease-fire line and the Cease-fire Agreement, proved by the findings of the UN military observer group for India and Pakistan, 14 valuable lives were lost and nine members of (Indian police) the patrol captured and unlawfully detained.

"This is the second serious incident in which the UN Chief Military Officer has had to give an award against Pakistan in recent months. The first was in the case of Chaknot... It is quite clear that the Government of Pakistan is deliberately trying to create tension and conflict across the cease-fire line, in utter disregard of the provisions of the Cease-fire Agreement. It is requested that this communication be brought to the notice of the members of the Security Council."

Exchange Of Prisoners With Pakistan:

India on April 30 received 16 of her armed forces personnel held prisoner by Pakistan, in exchange for an equal number of Pakistani soldiers, who were in Indian custody.

The exchange of prisoners took place at the Wagha check-post on the Indo-Pakistan border, near Amritsar.

The prisoners, who were arrested along the cease-fire line in Kashmir, were handed over to the military authorities of either side. The exchange operations, which lasted three hours, were held in the presence of two UN military observers—one working on the Pakistan side and the other on the Indian side of the cease-fire line.

Out of the 16 Indian personnel, released by Pakistan, one was in a bad condition, with burns all over his body. He was later admitted in the Military Hospital for treatment. When asked about his condition by the Indian military authorities, the Pakistan Military Commander stated that the person received burns on his body when he attempted to commit suicide.

Brigadier M. S. Rik received the Indian prisoners, who included some jawans of the Jammu and Kashmir State Border Police. Brigadier Chaudhari Abdul Karim took over the Pakistani prisoners, all of whom were military personnel.

Some of the Indian prisoners repatriated on April 30 had been in the custody of Pakistan since 1947.

A similar exchange of 12 prisoners on each side took place in 1960.

B. US 7th Fleet Enters Indian Ocean: It was learnt in Washington on April 9 that a US Navy carrier squadron had quietly entered the Indian Ocean and was bound for East African waters.

This marked the beginning of what were expected to be regular cruises by strong US Navy fleet units through an increasingly important sea area visited only infrequently up to now.

Heading the five-ship Concord Squadron was the 42-000-ton carrier Bon Homme Richard. Other ships in the group included the destroyers Shelton, Frank Knox, and Blue and the fleet oil tanker Hassayampa.

The Associated Press learned that the squadron entered the Indian Ocean on April 5 from the Pacific via the Malacca Straits which separate Indonesia and the Malaysian Federation. The first port of call was Diego Suarez on the Island republic of Madagascar on April 14.

Then, the squadron steamed north to the Gulf of Oman, just south of Iran. This took the squadron within a few hundred miles of Zanzibar and other East African countries like Kenya.

The beginning of the Indian Ocean cruise, in the wind for some time, came without announcement, perhaps to avoid arousing President Sukarno and other neutralists in that area.

Discussion of a regular US Navy patrol in the Indian Ocean had been under way at least since late in 1963 when Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, visited India and Pakistan. There was outspoken opposition in India, although the Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru said the movement of US warships into the Indian Ocean did not appear to be detrimental to his country.

The Secretary of the US Navy, Mr. Paul H. Nitze, in January referred to a "power vacuum" in the Indian Ocean area and suggested that the way to fill such a vacuum would be to station a US carrier task force there. The idea actually originated late in 1962 when China attacked India's northern border regions.

At that time, it was known that a US carrier force from the Seventh Fleet had moved into the Bay of Bengal in case its planes should be needed. It later withdrew to the Pacific.

The Pentagon said the Concord Squadron was expected to spend about six weeks on this cruise which would take it to other ports yet to be disclosed.

It said there were no marine forces larger than ship security detachments with the squadron. Bon Homme Richard normally carries about 80 planes and its firepower is both atomic and conventional.

On April 10, American Embassy sources in New Delhi confirmed that certain units of the US Navy had been cruising in the Indian Ocean. The cruise was part of a goodwill visit to get acquainted with the area.

These sources, however, added that the ships did not come anywhere near the territorial waters of India. Nor was permission sought to visit any Indian port. The ships were in fact on their way to Madagascar. The sources said it would not be correct to describe them as part of the 7th Fleet.

In Parliament on April 13, the Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru expressed regret that ships with nuclear weapons should "wander about in the Indian Ocean".

But he did not agree that India should lodge a protest about it. The Indian Ocean was a vast area and no reference had been made to India about the matter. India would not allow the ships of the Fleet to come within her territorial waters.

C. Motion On Constitution (17th Amendment) Bill Rejected In Lok Sabha: The Constitution (17th Amendment) Bill seeking to give protection to several State land reform enactments came to grief in the Lok Sabha on April 28 when in a surprise voting debacle it failed to secure the requisite majority.

The dramatic and unexpected end to the Bill came when the voting figures fell short of the constitutional requirement. Two-hundred-and-six voted in favour and 19 against, but this was less than the simple majority of the total membership of 510 in the House.

[A constitutional amendment requires a simple majority of the total membership of the House and not less than a two-thirds majority of the House present and voting.]

After the Central Law Minister, Mr. A. K. Sen, had replied to the general discussion, the motion was put to vote. As it was a Bill to amend the Constitution, the procedure required division of the House.

When the lobbies were opened after the announcement of the result of the division, Mr. Sen and several other members, who had rushed in, pleaded for another voting.

Many, including Mr. H. C. Dasappa, Central Railway Minister, pointed out that the division bell was not heard and therefore, it was but proper for the Speaker to order a fresh vote.

The Speaker, Mr. Hukam Singh, firmly rejected this demand, saying that all the formalities had been observed by him. He also did not agree to have a fresh count.

The Congress Party had issued a three-line whip to its members to be present at the time of voting in the House. Another whip had also been issued to members to cast their votes in the election to parliamentary committees.

This was the second time that a constitutional amendment Bill had been thrown out for failing to fulfil the constitutional requirement in regard to voting.

On the first occasion in 1955, a motion for reference to a select committee of the Constitution (7th Amendment) Bill connected with re-organization of States fell through under similar circumstances.

The then Law Minister sought to revive the measure through the 8th Amendment Bill in the same session but was challenged by the Opposition on the ground that under the rules of procedure of the House he could not do so in respect of a matter on which the House had already taken a decision.

The House later suspended the relevant rule, enabling the Law Minister to introduce the motion in the same session. (Under the rule, a motion which raises substantially a matter on which the House has already taken a decision cannot be brought forward in the same session.)

The 17th Amendment Bill sought to remove certain difficulties in the way of speedy land reforms created by pronouncement of courts.

Kotwari land had not been included in the terms of "estate," and the Bill sought to define this position clearly and to revalidate many State legislations which had been struck down by courts on technical grounds.

Lands within the ceiling fixed would not be taken away. Even when such lands were taken away for public purposes, adequate compensation at prevailing market rates would be given.

It was later decided by the Government to re-introduce the Constitution (17th Amendment) Bill and also to seek to have it passed during the current session of Parliament.

D. Constitution (18th Amendment) Bill Dropped: The Central Law Minister, Mr. A. K. Sen, announced in the Lok Sabha on April 28 that the Government had decided not to proceed with the Constitution (18th Amendment) Bill.

The measure sought in effect to indemnify the actions of the officers in implementing Presidential orders under Article 399 of the Constitution. It encountered stiff opposition from all parties other than the Congress.

Mr. Sen said that this decision was taken in deference to the wishes of many members in the Congress Party and other groups in the Lok Sabha. He said the Government would consider later in consultation with others whether any safeguards were necessary for the protection of officers and what steps should be taken for this purpose.

Earlier, the Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru, informed the Congress Parliamentary Party Executive that the Cabinet had decided to withdraw the Constitution (18th Amendment) Bill. As such, he said there was no need for the Executive to discuss the matter any further and pass any formal resolution to that effect.

Under Article 358 of the Constitution, the fundamental rights of freedom of speech and expression, assembly, etc., contained in Article 19 get automatically suspended with the proclamation of an Emergency.

Article 359 provides that when an Emergency is in operation the President may by order declare that the right to move any court for the enforcement of such or the other fundamental rights as may be mentioned in the order shall remain suspended for the period during which the proclamation is in force.

The Constitution (18th Amendment) Bill sought to provide that the power of the State to make laws or take executive action in an Emergency shall be unrestricted by the rights.

E. Bokaro Steel Plant—Russian Aid Offered: The Central Minister for Steel, Mines and Heavy Engineering, Mr. C. Subramaniam, announced in the Lok Sabha on May 1 that the Soviet Union had expressed its willingness to assist India in building the Bokaro Steel Plant.

He said: "I have great pleasure in announcing for the information of this House and the country that the Government of USSR has now expressed its willingness to assist India in the building of the integrated Bokaro Steel Plant. The first stage of the project is intended to produce 1.5 million tonnes of ingots and will have a built-in provision for expansion to produce four million tonnes ultimately. The assistance which USSR has now offered will be for building the first stage of Bokaro up to 1.5 million tonnes of ingots. Credit will be provided on the same terms as has been provided for building the steel plant at Bhilai.

"Further technical details have to be worked out and a contract entered into. For this purpose a team of Soviet experts will be coming over here soon.

"I take this occasion to express our thanks to the Government of USSR for having so readily come forward to assist us in building this national project which is of such vital importance to the growth of our country's economy. The USSR has been of great assistance to our country in the planning and building up of basic industries. I am confident that in many more such projects to come, we can count on their friendly assistance.

"I take this opportunity also of expressing my thanks to the various other countries who have shown keen interest in assisting Bokaro. As a matter of fact, as I mentioned earlier, some tentative proposals have been put forward for our consideration by private steel building interests in USA, UK, Japan, France, West Germany and Italy. I want to inform these friends abroad that Bokaro is not the only steel project which we propose to build in the immediate future. It is our intention to explore the possibilities of utilizing these friendly offers to build other steel plants which are under study."

[The Bokaro Steel Plant with an initial capacity of 1.5 million tonnes was originally to have been taken up in 1962. (Bokaro is a place near Ranchi in Bihar.) Aid from USA for meeting the foreign exchange requirements was sought. A team of experts, sponsored by the US Steel Corporation came to India, made a techno-economic survey and submitted a report to the US Government. The report favoured the establishment of the plant, but the team estimated the cost at a much higher figure than Indian estimates and also envisaged a longer time for the actual production of steel. A controversy also broke out in USA whether that country could finance a Government-owned project. The controversy assumed such proportions that the Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru felt it was better to withdraw the aid request to USA and wrote to President Kennedy accordingly in August, 1963. The request was formally withdrawn in September, 1963. The project was then expected to be financed entirely by internal resources, except for parts which could not be fabricated locally. Global tenders were to be invited and in January the Government registered a separate company for the Bokaro Plant. Tenders, however, were not actually invited.]

F. Two US Loans For Fertilizer Plant: Agreements were signed in Washington on April 23 providing two US development loans totalling Rs. 23.6 crores ($49.7 million) for one of India's largest fertilizer plants to be built at Visakhapatnam.

The loans are being extended to Coromandel Fertilizers Ltd., a new company organized by an Indian-American consortium.

The new plant, expected to be in operation in late 1967, will produce 365,000 tons of ammonium phosphate and 16,500 lbs of grilled urea annually. When in full production, the factory will supply more than a third of the estimated fertilizer consumption of Andhra Pradesh and also meet some of the requirements of Mysore, Madras, Orissa, and Madhya Pradesh.

The fertilizers to be produced will be particularly suited for the major crops of the area, such as rice, sugarcane and tobacco, and will be in sufficient quantity to increase crop production by one million tons a year. In addition, the new plant will result in an annual saving of foreign exchange of about Rs. 10 crores.

Coromandel Fertilizers Ltd. has been organized by Parry Company of Madras. California Chemical Company, a wholly owned subsidiary of Standard Oil Company of California, and the International Minerals and Chemicals Corporation of Illinois.

The two US companies will invest $6.08 million in foreign exchange (Rs. 2.8 crores) in the shares of Coromandel and both companies will bring to the project extensive and successful experience in operating a number of fertilizer plants in USA. The remainder of the financing, Rs. 9.29 crores, will come from Parry Company and the Indian public, who will own a majority of shares in the new company.

Of the two Agreements signed, one was for a loan from the US Export-Import Bank totalling up to $27 million (Rs. 12.9 crores). The second was from the US Agency for International Development for an amount up to Rs. 10.7 crores ($22.5 million) under the Cooley Amendment of the Food-for-Peace (PL 480) programme.

I. Canadian Loan For Nuclear Power Station: Canada and India signed in Ottawa on April 28 an Agreement under which India will be given a loan of $37 million to cover purchases in Canada for a 200,000 kw nuclear power station.

The station, to be located in Rajasthan, will be similar to the one under construction at Douglas Point, Ontario.

The money will be provided through the Export Credit Insurance Corporation. The total cost of the new power station will be $74 million. India will provide the remaining amount.

Speaking after the signing ceremony, the Trade Minister, Mr. Mitchell Sharp, said that the Canadian Government was prepared to consider making long-term loans to any country with a good credit rating to help it buy Canadian-designed nuclear power plants.

He said the export of Canadian engineering services and capital equipment to India would mark the opening of a new and important phase for Canadian industry and research. "This is one of the first international co-operative nuclear power projects and will place Canada in the competitive forefront of the world market for similar atomic power stations".

Mr. K. S. Sundara Rajan of the Indian Embassy in Washington said India's decision to buy a Canadian-designed plant was influenced by her lack of facilities to produce enriched uranium. India had supplies of uranium and the capacity to produce natural uranium fuel, the type used in Canadian power reactors.

The Rajasthan plant is expected to go into operation in 1970. It will help India meet her power requirements.

J. A-IMO Annual Conference: Inaugurating the 24th annual Conference of the All-India Manufacturers' Organization (A-IMO) in New Delhi on April 24, the Central Minister without Portfolio, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri defended the Government's decision to set up the Monopolies Commission (page 5812) by pointing out that there had been a steep increase in profits and consequent concentration of wealth in the hands of a few industrialists.

He quoted figures to show how a small minority of people had been gradually gaining greater control over the means of production in the past few years.

His remarks were a rebuttal of the A-IMO Chairman's earlier criticism of the Government's economic and labour policies.

He said the Government wanted to have correct figures to assess its policies. The growth of monopolies or concentration of wealth in a few hands was not conducive to industrial growth.

He also referred to the Chairman's critical references about the Bonus Commission and his amazement at the way the Government was "tolerating" growing labour indiscipline.

He expressed his regret that the employers' representative, after having agreed to the recommendations of the Bonus Commission, had appended a note of dissent at the last minute.

He emphasized that the employers should not have a closed mind on the subject. "Our approach to the employees has to be a liberal one."

He said that he had always attached great importance to small industries because they could revolutionize the country's economy. They could give a technological bias to the country, provide additional jobs to the people and change the face of rural India.

Referring to the controversy about the public and private sectors in the country's economy, he made it clear that the Government did not wish to enter into the field of small industries. "We have neither the man-power nor the necessary administrative machinery to take over small industries." The big industries created monopolies. But the growth of small industries could help to bring about a socialist society.

Earlier, Mr. Prabhu V. Mehta, Chairman of the A-IMO, said that while deciding the fiscal policy, the need for providing incentives to earn and save more was not given adequate consideration and that even efficiency of operation was not recognized.

He criticized the Government's policy to levy an additional corporation tax of 10 per cent on companies affected by Section 104. The small entrepreneur was entitled to ask why he was penalized and made to pay more than his "big brother."

Resolutions:

In a resolution adopted on April 25, the A-IMO called on the Government to revive the confidence of industrial investors by the immediate abolition of dividend tax and tax on bonus shares and a general reduction in the incidence of tax, including surtax on profits from industrial enterprises compared to profits from purely speculative activities.

It recommended to the Government to mobilize resources for the exchequer without inhibiting generation of savings and their ploughing back in industry or depriving industry of its normal sources of finance.

The Conference was of the view that, with this end in view, there should no longer be any reliance on raising tax incidence on the corporate sector and on entrepreneurs but on profits from public enterprises by their more efficient operation and on buoyancy of public revenue from an expanding economy through stimulation of savings, investment and production. It suggested that drastic savings be effected by cutting down all wasteful expenditure on public administration and by improving its efficiency.

It recommended steps to encourage saving and investment in industries in the private sector by giving liberal tax concessions on ploughed profits in the case of all companies, especially small-scale and medium type manufacturing companies where the overall rate of tax would be largest as per the current year's Budget proposals. Such concessions should also be given on investments in approved basic industries.

It strongly objected to the move for nationalization of banks as a measure of fiscal policy on the plea that they had a useful role to play in a rapid and orderly development of industries by democratic and competitive methods.

It felt that there should be no major changes in the country's fiscal policy in the middle of a five-year planning period. This would enable entrepreneurs to plan their production programmes properly.

It also urged the Government to give positive encouragement and support to industrial units to expand to optimum size without any inhibition or fear of monopolies developing thereby. For a rapid growth, it was essential that industrial units operated on an adequate scale.

It emphasized the need for having certain specified objectives of fiscal policy and also for comparatively lower priority for social ends till the country was firmly set on the path of rapid industrialization. It felt that discriminatory treatment as obtaining at present in the incidence of excise duties was out of place and that no fiscal measures should have retrospective effect.

It also adopted a resolution on the wage policy and productivity in industry in which it recommended that immediately workable agreements be evolved for each specified industry to raise productivity in close consultation with industrial engineers and other experts representing employers and trade unions.

The agreements should stipulate proper work-loads, consistent with working conditions and based on scientifically-determined norms for minimum production and providing for extra payment for additional production.

The Conference also recommended that highest priority be given for the progress of rationalization in industry. Also, indiscriminate and compulsory profit-sharing bonus should be done away with and replaced by an incentive scheme of payment by results in production.

It recommended that non-co-operation by any trade union or management in implementing the agreed programme of increased productivity be treated as a breach of the code of discipline.

It emphasized that stern action should be taken by the Government to discourage inter-union rivalry by strictly enforcing sanctions prescribed under the inter-union code of conduct and, if necessary, by modifying the Trade Union Act.

It also urged the Government to take early action in the matter of amalgamation of all the existing social security measures.

cial Powers) Regulation, which confers special powers on officers of the armed forces to enable them to aid effectively the civil authority in the disturbed areas of Kohima and Mokokchung districts of Nagaland.

Replying to the brief debate, Mrs. Lakshmi Menon, Minister of State in the External Affairs Ministry, denied that there was any fifth column activity in Nagaland.

She said: "There has never been any fifth column activity either in the civil or the armed forces there. There is a possibility of some such activity being carried out by hostile Nagas. But the administration is very vigilant about it."

About the working of the Regulation in the past, she said it had helped the administration destroy about 350 hideouts of hostile elements, apprehend about 700 of them and seize considerable quantities of arms and ammunition. The powers provided under the Regulation had also helped co-ordinate the activities of armed forces with civil intelligence.

M. Income Distribution—Mahalanobis Committee's Report: In its report on the distribution of income and wealth, its second term of reference, the Mahalanobis Committee of the Planning Commission says that there is "no clear indication of a significant change" in the distribution of incomes during the first two Plans.

The growth in the income of employees in these 10 years has been found to have generally kept pace with the growth in the average income per head per employed person for the country as a whole. A notable exception is agricultural labourers who "do not seem to have shared in the increase in income".

Analysing income-tax data, the Committee records that the average incomes of contractors have registered the highest increase, and the rise in the income of this group has been "very much higher than the rise in the income per employed person for the country as a whole".

Self-employed persons engaged in manufacturing, trade, transport and financial business and the salaried class among the tax-payers have also increased their incomes, just keeping pace with the growth of average income per employed person.

Notice has been taken of the "general feeling" that the average person in both urban and rural areas is better fed, better clothed and better housed today than in the 1950s, and that the working conditions have also improved. But the Committee has not been able to collect data to support that feeling.

Data available to the Committee suggest that "the degree of inequality in income distribution is not higher in India than in some other developed or underdeveloped countries, and that the distribution in the urban sector is more unequal, as in other countries, than in the rural sector".

According to rough estimates, the value of the aggregate wealth owned by households and individuals, limited and unlimited liability companies and partnerships, and Central and State Governments and local authorities at the end of March, 1950, was Rs. 17,086 crores. This increased to Rs. 32,164 crores by March, 1961.

The Committee says that the growth in the incomes of mining and factory workers has kept ahead of the average rate of growth. This is also said to be true of the rate of growth in the salary incomes of school teachers and professors at least up to the beginning of the Second Plan.

The rise in the income of professionals was much lower than the rise in the per capita income for the country as a whole between 1951 and 1959.

"It is necessary to re-iterate that the comparability of these trends is seriously vitiated by the highly varying extent of tax evasion among different occupational groups, in particular as between salaried and non-salaried income earners".

At prices prevailing in 1951, the annual earnings of agricultural labourers were as low as Rs. 300. On an average, skilled rural workers earned between Rs. 600 and Rs. 750, the same as school teachers and mining workers who were at a lower income level than factory employees.

During the first two Plans, the index number of average earnings of mining workers roughly doubled. There was a rise of 44 per cent in the average income of factory workers drawing less than Rs. 200 a month and 27 per cent in the average income of Central Government employees. Taken separately, the rise in the case of Railway employees was about 37 per cent. The increase in the case of rural skilled workers was 23 per cent.

Note has been taken of the growth in social services which are "increasingly affecting real incomes particularly of the low-income groups". These services include low-cost housing, free primary education, health and other welfare measures.

Of the total tangible wealth in 1950 the household sector accounted for 71 per cent, the organized private sector 12 per cent and the public sector 17 per cent. By 1961 the respective shares were 60 per cent, 15 per cent and 25 per cent. This substantial increase in the share of the public sector is significant in that "it provides an offset to the tendency towards concentration in the private sector."

Referring to land distribution in urban areas, the Committee says that the top 20 per cent of the households own 93 per cent of the land and operate practically the entire land belonging to urban households. The top 5 per cent of these have 52 per cent of the total land.

In the rural sector, the greatest concentration of land ownership is in the southern States while that in the urban sector is greatest in the eastern States.

No data whatsoever were available for a direct study of the distribution of personal wealth held in the form of bank deposits, shares, securities and commercial property. The Committee could, therefore, study the distribution of dividend income and examine its implications only on the basis of income-tax data.

Ranked according to their dividend income, the top 10 per cent of income-tax assessees shared about 55 per cent of the total of such incomes in 1955-56, while the bottom 10 per cent accounted for only about 2 per cent. In 1959-60 the share of the top 10 per cent was 52 per cent and that of the bottom 10 per cent rose to 2.5 per cent.

Basing itself on the fact that income-tax assessees constitute not more than one per cent of all house-holds, the Committee concludes that the top one-tenth of 1 per cent of households, when ranked by dividend income, own more than half of the total personal wealth in the form of shares. It would thus appear that ownership of shares is much more concentrated than the ownership of land-holdings or residential house property.

This conclusion assumes that there is no tax evasion and that there are no benami shareholders. If this assumption is not correct, the concentration of shareholdings is still greater.

Concentration Of Economic Power:

The Mahalanobis Committee has expressed the view that the process of planned development, the Government's tax, credit and investment policies, and the financing system in the country have generally tended to concentrate economic power in a few hands.

Another important contributory factor has been the organization of the newspaper industry, in which large business and industrial groups have acquired controlling interests.

The Committee acknowledges that the Government has tried to counter these unhealthy trends through graduated modification of policies in the various fields, but it feels that these have still to gather momentum.

Both in the corporate sector and in the distribution of national income, the Committee feels that there are large gaps in India's knowledge.

Particularly, if the goal of industrialization is to be combined with social justice and of economic development with dispersal of economic power, a full-time agency should be set up to collect the necessary information, to analyse it and suggest concrete remedial measures. An inquiry should also be conducted into the inter-relationship between the ownership and control of the Press and of industry generally.

The chapter on concentration of economic power clearly suffers from a divided approach. Its criticism of the prevailing governmental and institutional set-up as being slanted in favour of the bigger companies is quite severe for the most part, but an obvious attempt has been made towards the end to restore the perspective somewhat by pointing out that governmental action is catching up with the problem.

It begins by pointing out that the considerable measure of concentration of rural and urban incomes and the even more marked concentration of wealth would call for rethinking on the overall strategy of development in relation to social goals.

Referring to the private sector, it declares that the working of a planned economy during the decade 1951-61 has helped the growth of big companies. This trend has been helped, among other things, by the easy accessibility of the big investor to the capital market; the extensive and lucrative system of tax incentives, particularly in the case of new units; the preference of the foreign collaborator for the large, well-established Indian operator; and the whole mechanism of company management in India, including such devices as the managing agency system, inter-corporate investment and common or inter-locking directors.

"In the Indian context, it is the concentration of control in the industrial sector as a whole rather than in any one or other particular industry that presents the more menacing aspect of concentration of economic power. Shares in joint stock companies are held by an extremely small percentage of the population. This represents a significant concentration of economic power. But more important than ownership is operational control."

It has criticised the banking structure as being unduly weighted against the small entrepreneur. While recognizing that efforts have been made in recent years to reverse this trend, it feels that a lot of ground has to be covered before the position can be considered satisfactory.

It seeks to restore the perspective by pointing out that the disproportionate growth of the larger units and the increasing accession of power and influence by them in economic terms has a certain economic logic behind it, which would counsel caution in tackling the unsocial aspects of the phenomenon.

"The growth of Big Business as such, though indicating the presence of economic concentration, does not necessarily connote the deliberate adoption of an anti-social policy. There is such a thing as economy of scale, which works in favour of Big Business, purely on economic grounds; and economic considerations are certainly relevant especially in the context of our scarce resources and the imperative need for our making the most economic utilization of these resources.

"In many industries, the size of the domestic market is small in relation to the size of the plant, at which the maximum average costs begin to obtain; and any attempt to reduce the degree of concentration by breaking down economic-sized units into a larger number of uneconomic-sized plants would only lead to waste. At the same time, there is no doubt that localized concentration of industry, even if unavoidable on economic grounds, must necessarily result in the accruing and possible exercise of monopolistic power.

"What is needed in such a case is not the break-up of large units but the adoption of a policy of regulation, continuous security and possibly nationalization which will help to prevent the emergence of anti-social consequences from the otherwise economically justifiable localized concentration in the form of big units in one industry or another."

N. Airways Agreement: An Agreement has been signed between Air-India, Aden Airways and East African Airways concerning the operation of a combined pattern of services, on a pool basis, covering routes between East Africa and India.

The Agreement is subject to approval of the respective Governments.

The types of aircraft and frequency of scheduled services in the pool are as follows:

Aden Airways—two services a week in each direction Aden|Mogadishu|Nairobi with jet-prop Viscounts.

Air India—two services a week in each direction Bombay|Aden|Nairobi with Boeing 707.

EAA—two services a week in each direction Nairobi|Aden|Karachi|Bombay with Comet 4 jetliners.

After a careful study of the route and the potential market it was decided that closer co-operation was needed between the three airlines, both in the interests of the travelling public as well as the airlines participating, by pooling each other's resources, to offer the travelling public the most frequent and convenient spread of services.

Thus the three airlines will be able to cope more readily with variable requirements, such as scheduling, seasonal traffic trends and aircraft availability. This new pooling arrangement will also entail closer co-operation between all departments of the three airlines, thereby ensuring maximum efficiency to the benefit of all passengers on the route.

The Agreement which has been ratified by the managements of all three airlines, will mean a greater choice of services, particularly between Nairobi and Aden on which sector, uptil this Agreement, Air-India did not carry traffic.

O. Foreign Aid Utilization: Out of Rs. 2,055 crores of foreign aid so far received for the Third Plan from 19 countries and from the World Bank, only Rs. 896 crores had been utilized up to the end of January, 1964.

This was disclosed in an official statement presented to the Lok Sabha on May 4. It showed that the aid received from Czechoslovakia (Rs. 23 crores), from France (Rs. 38 crores) and from the Netherlands (Rs. 13 crores) had not been utilized at all.

Out of Rs. 46 crores received from Italy, only Rs. 2 crores had been utilized.

Utilization from other countries was slightly less than 50 per cent.

The following is the break-down for the major aid-giving countries:

	Total aid for Third Plan	Utilization up to January 31, 1964.
	(Crores of rupees)
USA	Rs. 724	Rs. 429
Soviet Union	Rs. 308	Rs. 92
West Germany	Rs. 235	Rs. 119

Q. Rev. Michael Scott's Visit To Nagaland—Permission Granted: The Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru told the Lok Sabha on April 25 that the Government had agreed to the visit of Rev. Michael Scott to Nagaland to help restore peace at the instance of the Nagaland Government.

The Government, he said, was satisfied in having reposed its trust in the Nagaland leaders. Once they expressed willingness to Rev. Scott meeting people in Nagaland, the Government had gladly agreed to it.

Mr. Nehru was replying to a question by Mr. Hem Barua (P-SP) who along with some other members expressed misgivings about Rev. Scott's visit to Nagaland. Mr. Barua recalled the Prime Minister's statement in 1963 that he considered his visit to Nagaland as "undesirable."

Mr. Nehru replied he might have thought so then, but he thought differently now. The Nagaland Ministers had relied on Rev. Scott and the Government had accepted their word.

Earlier, Mrs. Lakshmi Menon, Minister of State for External Affairs, told the House that Rev. Scott came to India to join a committee to persuade the underground Nagas to have peace talks with the Nagaland Government.

The Nagaland Baptist Convention had recently passed a resolution suggesting that Mr. Jayaprakash Narayan, Mr. Shankar Rao Deo, Mr. B. P. Chaliha and Rev. Scott should contact the hostile Nagas and find ways and means of restoring peace.

She said the Nagaland Government approved this move and when the Baptist Convention approached Rev. Scott, he expressed his willingness to assist and came to Dimapur on March 27. Since then he had just commenced their work and it was too early to assess their achievements.

Asked whether it was proper for the Government to secure the services of Rev. Scott who had been supporting the demand for an independent Nagaland, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, the Central Minister without Portfolio, said Rev. Scott had accepted the position that any settlement with the hostiles should be within the frame-work of the Constitution. The Peace Committee had not yet contacted the hostile leaders.

Mr. Barua asked whether the Government had told the Baptist Mission that the Peace Committee would have to function collectively and no individual could be allowed to contact the hostiles.

Mrs. Menon replied the Nagaland Government had given an assurance that Rev. Scott was not moving in Nagaland alone. He was accompanied by the members of the Baptist Mission. There was no basis for Mr. Barua's apprehension.

When Mr. Barua said he wanted Rev. Scott to move in Nagaland with other members of the committee, Mrs. Menon said: "It is for the Nagaland Government to decide whether he should move alone or with other people. They are satisfied that Rev. Scott is doing as they wish him to do."

Answering another supplementary, she said the Nagaland Chief Minister, Mr. Shilu Ao, was convinced of the bona fides of Rev. Scott. He was also convinced that Rev. Scott was not holding the same opinion about an independent Nagaland and felt that Nagaland must remain part of the Indian Union. He, therefore, gave him permission to come there.

R. State Education Ministers' Conference: In his inaugural address to the State Education Ministers' Conference in New Delhi on April 25, the Central Education Minister, Mr. M. C. Chagla proposed that a Centrally-sponsored sector in education be set up, the main emphasis of which would be on quality. This would comprise institutions—one school in each community block and a college in every district—representing what he called "the peak of excellence and beacon light" for others to follow.

He referred to the proposal to make education a concurrent subject. But, he hastened to add that he was not so "foolhardy or ambitious" as to think that the present Conference itself would come to a decision on it.

This suggestion he placed in the context of the "need for a national educational policy and system" which, he stressed, should focus attention on the country's basic unity, ensure mobility of teachers and students and create leaders of the future. A dyarchy, as in the days of British rule, could not achieve these objectives.

He reminded his listeners: "Let us not pass a resolution which we are not prepared to implement. Let us not adopt resolutions for public consumption."

The whole burden of his speech was how best to implement the educational projects to bring about qualitative improvements. He did not mince words to admit failures at different levels and indicated remedies.

He said that the Constitutional directive regarding primary education might not be fulfilled before 1980, and suggested that arrangements for part-time schooling, as practised in China, might attract more children than now in rural areas. He also commended Madras's experiment in trying to make primary education "the concern of the local people".

Regarding secondary education, he referred to the need for new facilities for the training of teachers and for greater scope for vocational training. He disclosed that he was getting a proposal examined by legal experts for the setting up of a Secondary Education Commission on the lines of the University Grants Commission. Even if this Commission was not created, steps could be taken for qualitative improvement of secondary education.

In respect of higher education, he underlined that facilities for post-graduate research should be increased manifold and deprecated demands for more universities which, he added, seemed to have acquired a "status value". The real interest now lay in strengthening the existing universities and their improvement and expansion.

He made it clear that the Centre intended to change radically and rationalize the present procedure for financing State projects through block and matching grants.

He advocated that the status, remuneration and old-age benefits should be the same for teachers in private and Government schools and urged the States to bring forward legislation to remove the existing distinction between the two categories of teachers.

Conference Ends:

At the end of their Conference on April 26, the State Education Ministers agreed to take steps to achieve a broad measure of uniformity in the content of secondary education.

They felt that such uniformity was necessary for promoting national integration, improving the standard of education and facilitating mobility of students and teachers among different States.

Another subject which engaged the attention of the Conference was the quality of education. There was general agreement that more and more Centrally-sponsored projects should be undertaken to improve the quality. It was emphasized that grants should be earmarked for such projects.

The Conference adopted no formal resolutions, but stressed that immediate steps should be taken to realise the objectives on which there was broad agreement.

Apart from agreeing that there should be a uniform standard of attainment of students at the school-leaving stage, the Ministers made another important suggestion affecting secondary education. They said that the entire education at the secondary stage should be completed in school. Hence the pre-university course should be transferred to schools as soon as possible in accordance with a phased programme.

As regards primary education the Conference accepted the target of full enrolment in the 6-11 age-group by the end of the Fourth Five-Year Plan.

After a long discussion on the pattern of education, during which the desirability of a 12-year course was acknowledged, the Conference decided not to commit itself in view of differing conditions in various parts of the country.

Mr. Chagla, summing up the conclusions, said that what the States had agreed to would "take us a long way towards establishing a system of education which will be uniform and national." Because the Central Government was prepared to finance various schemes for improving quality and teacher training, the Ministers had "willingly agreed" that some of the burden should be taken away from them.

The Conference urged that the Centre should spend 10 per cent of its revenue on education, and the States not less than 20 per cent, as suggested by the Kher Committee. (The Central Government now spends about 4 per cent while some of the States spend 20 per cent.)

The Conference laid emphasis on special measures for speeding up enrolment of girls and students from rural and backward areas. It also urged diversification of education by opening more and more technical schools.

Regarding the opening of new universities, the Conference did not record a unanimous view. While Mr. Chagla suggested strengthening and expansion of existing universities, the Ministers pressed their claim for more universities. The Conference, however, welcomed the idea of starting schools of post-graduate studies, which in course of time could be developed into new universities. It was also agreed that all efforts should be made to expand and improve higher education, especially in scientific and technological fields.

The Conference said that programmes for eradication of illiteracy should be taken up more vigorously on the lines of the pilot scheme working in Maharashtra State.

S. Rural Indebtedness: According to a Reserve Bank survey of rural indebtedness, rural households in India are saddled with debts exceeding Rs. 3,000 crores.

Spread over 74 million house-holds, the average indebtedness of each rural family comes to Rs. 406.

The survey, which covers 1961-62, shows that in that year alone the rural population incurred debts amounting to Rs. 1,232 crores (Rs. 180 per family).

Not only does the survey provide an insight into the appalling poverty of the rural masses of the country but it also disproves the contention of many an economist that people in the villages save money which they can invest in agriculture or small industry.

A safe inference that can be drawn from the survey is that the only investment the bulk of the rural masses can make in the development plans is their manual labour. And even to be able to do that they would need some respite from the moneylender's clutches.

That 45 per cent of the debt was incurred in the year under review showed that rural indebtedness was not just a legacy of the past but a continuing facet of Indian life on which a decade of planning had made little impact.

Also the movement to save the villager from the moneylender by providing him easy loans through co-operatives seemed to have made little headway so far. Advances by co-operatives amounted to only 8 per cent of the total loans taken by rural households.

In 1961-62, when the primary agricultural credit societies seemed to be more active than in previous years and accounted for 17 per cent of the year's total loans, the co-operative credit movement appeared to be practically non-existent in some of the States.

In Bihar, for instance, only 3 per cent of the loans taken by villagers in 1961-62 were drawn from these societies. The co-operatives' share was 4 per cent in Assam and Rajasthan and 6 per cent in West Bengal.

The only State where the co-operatives seemed to have scored over the moneylender is Maharashtra where the societies accounted for 43 per cent of the debts incurred by villagers in that year.

Societies in Gujerat, Madras and Madhya Pradesh and Orissa, between them provided between 17 per cent and 27 per cent of the loans given to rural households in these States.

The extent of rural indebtedness per household during the year also varied from State to State. It was the highest in Rajasthan where, on an average, each household incurred a fresh debt of Rs. 390 in 1961-62, bringing its total debt liability to Rs. 797.

The total debt per household was the highest in Punjab—Rs. 803 per family—of which Rs. 308 was incurred in 1961-62.

The total average debts were also high in Mysore, Madras, Gujerat and Andhra being Rs. 689, Rs. 629, Rs. 542 and Rs. 526, respectively. They were comparatively low in Assam (Rs. 137), West Bengal (Rs. 215), Jammu and Kashmir (Rs. 239), Kerala (Rs. 249) and UP (Rs. 279).

Land Holdings:

According to an analysis of the 1961 census of land holdings, over 50 per cent of the agricultural land holdings in India are less than five acres each.

The average size of land holdings in the country as a whole, however, is 7.39 acres.

It was explained that small holdings constitute 2 per cent of the total cultivated area and over the rest of the area, holdings exceed five acres.

Three-fourths of the total cultivated area in the country is held by 15 per cent of the cultivating households. In Maharashtra, Madhya Pradesh, Gujerat, Rajasthan and Punjab a relatively smaller proportion of households have a higher proportion of the cultivated area, indicating that the average size of holdings in these States is comparatively large. On the other hand, in Uttar Pradesh, Bihar and West Bengal the pressure on land is higher resulting in smaller holdings.

The size of holdings is generally small in areas with greater irrigation facilities and assured rainfall and the resulting high density of population. The size of holdings is lowest in rice-growing areas, followed by wheat-growing areas. Millet-growing areas have relatively bigger holdings.

The distribution of cultivating households by interest in land shows that about 77 per cent are located in ownership holdings, 15 per cent in mixed tenancy and about 8 per cent in pure tenancy holdings. The pure tenancy holdings are concentrated mainly in Kerala, Madras, Bihar, West Bengal and Punjab.

T. Progress Of Neyveli Project: The fifth and last 50 mw unit of the Neyveli thermal power station was commissioned on April 29 by Mr. H. R. Kulkarni, Electrical Specialist Engineer, Central Water and Power Commission.

This marks the completion of the first stage of the station. The erection of the station, which began in June, 1961, was carried out by Indian engineers under the technical guidance of Soviet specialists.

With the commissioning of the fifth unit, nearly 50 per cent of the consumption of power in the State grid will be from Neyveli. The equipment for the station has been supplied by the Soviet Union and was financed from out of the Soviet credit of 500 million roubles.

Meanwhile, a programme of expansion of the integrated lignite project at Neyveli involving a total investment of Rs. 137 crores during the Fourth Five-Year Plan is under consideration of the Government.

When the scheme is put through, the generation of thermal power from Neyveli will be stepped up to 1200 mw. This is sought to be achieved by expanding the existing power station to a capacity of 600 mw. and erection of a new power station of 600 megawatt capacity.

Since the capacity of the existing mine will not be sufficient to meet the needs of the proposed expansion in power generation, it has been proposed to open a second mine capable of producing 7 million tonnes of lignite a year. Investigations in this respect are underway.

U. High Court For Goa: A Bill to declare the Judicial Commissioner's Court for Goa, Diu, and Daman to be a High Court for certain purposes of the Constitution was passed by the Lok Sabha on April 25.

Two members representing Goa, Mr. M. P. Shinkre and Mr. Peter Alvares vehemently opposed the measure. The former contended that they could have been consulted before the Bill was brought in, while Mr. Alvares said that the best arrangement would have been for the Maharashtra High Court to function through a Division Bench in Goa as provided in the Goa, Daman and Diu Act of 1962 which empowered the Centre to extend the jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court to these areas.

In her reply to the debate, the Minister of State for External Affairs, Mrs. Lakshmi Menon, insisted that the step was for the benefit of the people of Goa and it was being taken after a proper enquiry and after ascertaining the views of the concerned persons.

INDONESIA

A. Asian-African Conference—Preparatory Meeting: Representatives of 21 Asian-African countries assembled in Djakarta from April 10 to 15 for a preparatory meeting for an Asian-African Conference.

Addressing the meeting, President A. Sukarno called on the Afro-Asian countries to "smash and crush" the last vestiges of colonialism and said: "Our best weapon in this struggle against domination lies in preserving Asian-African solidarity."

He said it was not possible for the new countries to embark upon military competition in their growth towards emancipation. Nor could they abolish domination through economic means. Afro-Asian solidarity was the weapon to beat this domination during their growth.

"The inferiority complexes of the past must be transformed into the spirit of self-confidence. The spirit of passiveness inculcated during colonial days must be must be transformed into the spirit of creativeness."

He said this creative spirit could be better used in the development of new concepts. "This is the field where we are pioneers. We belong to the new world, not to the dying past. We have begun to shape new concepts for ourselves. We have the ability to enrich the world in this respect. First, however, we must rid ourselves of the inhibitions which the colonial past instilled in our mind...."

The countries represented at the meeting were: Afghanistan, Algeria, Cameroun, Cambodia, Ceylon, China, Ethiopia, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Liberia, Morocco, Nepal, Pakistan, the Philippines, Syria, Turkey, and the United Arab Republic.

In a brief speech of welcome, the Indonesian Foreign Minister, Dr. R. Subandrio thanked the participants for their presence and their "expressed desire to make it a success."

The meeting then proceeded to elect a chairman, two vice-chairmen, and the secretary-general of the Conference.

Dr. Subandrio was elected Chairman on the proposal of the Chinese Foreign Minister, Marshal Chen Yi. The proposal was seconded by India's chief delegate, Sardar Swaran Singh.

The meeting then elected the Cameroun and Cambodian chief delegates as first and second vice-chairmen.

Indonesia's Deputy Foreign Minister, Mr. Suwito Kusumowidagdo, was elected secretary-general of the Conference.

The meeting ran into serious difficulties over the Indian proposal to invite the Soviet Union and Malaysia to the Conference.

The meeting was bogged down for several hours over the controversy sparked off by the Chinese opposition to the Soviet Union's participation and the Indonesian exception to Malaysia to whose creation she is not yet reconciled.

According to conference sources, China's Marshal Chen Yi stated that the seat of the Soviet Government was Moscow which was part of Europe. He said that China had opposed Soviet entry even in Bandung in 1955 when "we were friends with them."

He made it clear that his opposition to the Soviet Union was not because of the present ideological conflict.

He pointed out that as the Asian-African meeting would be on a Head-of-Government level, he would be surprised to see Mr. Nikita Khruschev, "who is neither an Asian nor an African," at the Conference.

His arguments were effectively countered by the Indian delegation, headed by Sardar Swaran Singh, who also suggested that the second Asian-African Conference should be held in 1965 to coincide with the 10th anniversary of the Bandung meeting.

Conference sources said Indonesia, Pakistan and China wanted the Asian-African Conference to precede the proposed Cairo conference of non-aligned countries (see page 5772).

The Indian proposals drew immediate support from delegates of Ceylon, UAR, Iraq, Ethiopia and Tanganyika. The proposals also received tacit approval from Iran and Algeria.

Pakistan's Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, was the first to oppose the Indian proposal to hold the Conference in 1965. He said many Afro-Asian countries were "dangerously divided" and since the strengthening of their solidarity was an urgent necessity, a conference should be convened as early as possible.

He was also understood to have referred to "non-implementation of UN resolutions" in respect of Palestine and one of "our own disputes", and to what he described as "religious apartheid" in Asia.

At the end of the fourth day's deliberations, Dr. Subandrio said on April 13 that the proposed Asian-African Conference would be held in an African Capital. The selection of the venue would be left to the Organization for African Unity.

The preparatory meeting agreed on a 10-nation working group to prepare an agenda for the Conference.

The group consists of India, Indonesia, Ceylon, Pakistan, Ghana, China, Afghanistan, Guinea, Ethiopia and Algeria. It will consider proposals submitted by various countries.

Communique:

An official communique at the end of the preparatory meeting said that a compromise formula had been decided to enable Malaysia to be invited to the Conference "as soon as possible."

The communique added, however, that no agreement was reached on the proposal to invite the Soviet Union.

The question of invitations to Malaysia and the Soviet Union was the most controversial issue faced by the meeting, splitting the delegations.

India proposed that the invitations be sent to the two countries, while Indonesia led the group which opposed it.

The communique omitted the names of Malaysia and the Soviet Union in the list of countries to be invited to the Conference due to open in Africa on March 10, 1965.

The communique said: "With regard to the composition of the second Afro-Asian Conference:

"It was proposed that an invitation be extended to USSR.

"Some delegations supported and others opposed the proposal to extend an invitation to USSR.

"A number of delegations stated that they needed consultations with their Governments. After discussion no consensus could be reached.

"Some delegations were of the view that the matter may be placed before the Heads of State—Government at the second Asian-African Conference for their consideration.

"Some other delegations were against submitting this matter to the Heads of State—Government at the second Asian-African Conference for their consideration.

"Therefore no agreement was reached.

"It was also proposed that an invitation be extended to Malaysia.

"In this case it was hoped that the obstacles which prevented reaching a consensus on the invitation would be eliminated.

"In this case an invitation should be extended as soon as possible.

"Some countries that recognize Malaysia stated their position that Malaysia was fully entitled to an invitation and should be invited."

The list of countries which delegates agreed should be invited to the Conference consisted of:

B. Mr. Z. A. Bhutto's Visit: A joint communique issued in Djakarta on April 17 at the end of the eight-day visit of Pakistan's Foreign Minister, Mr. Zulfiqar Ali Bhutto, said that Mr. Bhutto and Dr. R. Subandrio, Indonesian Foreign Minister, had exchanged views on the international situation and relations between the two countries and noted that both the Governments had taken positive steps in the economic, cultural and other fields to bring about greater understanding and closer co-operation between the two countries.

It said the two leaders hoped the forthcoming visit of the Pakistan Commerce Minister to Indonesia would be utilized for replacing the present Trade Agreement between the two countries.

In a reference to the Kashmir dispute, the communique said a solution based on the wishes of the people of Kashmir as envisaged in the Security Council resolutions should be found.

In regard to Malaysia, the communique said, Dr. Subandrio had explained to Mr. Bhutto his Government's views and Mr. Bhutto had expressed the hope that "the efforts of Indonesia and other friendly countries would result in a peaceful settlement of this dispute at an early date."

The joint communique, according to reports, marked a complete and significant shift in Indonesian attitude over the Kashmir question.

In June, 1963, when President Sukarno and President Ayub Khan issued a joint communique at the conclusion of the Indonesian President's visit to Karachi, Indonesia had adopted a neutral position in regard to Kashmir.

The joint communique had then only expressed the hope of the two leaders that in view of the need for strengthening Afro-Asian solidarity an honourable and equitable settlement of the problem would be reached in the near future.

At the time of President Sukarno's visit to Karachi, Dr. Subandrio who was accompanying Dr. Sukarno, had told correspondents in reply to questions on Kashmir that Indonesia wanted that any solution should be acceptable to both India and Pakistan. He had also said then that Indonesia had kept her "hands off" the dispute between India and Pakistan.

Indonesia, the reports said, thus acquiesced to Pakistan's demand for holding a plebiscite in Kashmir.

According to observers, only one interpretation was possible on the new line adopted by Indonesia, coming as it did in the wake of the recent ministerial meeting for an Afro-Asian Conference. It was the direct result of the strong Indian stand over the question of inviting Malaysia to the Afro-Asian Conference in 1965.

Indonesia had made no secret of her disappointment and resentment over India's support to Malaysia.

Observers also noted that in regard to Malaysia the communique avoided any rigid views and only expressed the hope of a peaceful settlement at an early date.

C. Text Of Luns-Subandrio Communique: The following is the text of the communique issued in The Hague on April 3 at the end of the talks between the Indonesian Foreign Minister, Dr. R. Subandrio and his Dutch counterpart, Mr. J. M. A. H. Luns:

[A report on the talks and the communique appeared on page 5792].

"During the visit to the Netherlands of Dr. Subandrio, First Deputy Prime Minister and concurrently Minister for Foreign Affairs and for Foreign Economic Relations of the Republic of Indonesia and Mrs. Subandrio and a number of high Indonesian officials at the invitation of Mr. J. M. A. H. Luns, the Netherlands Minister for Foreign Affairs, the two Ministers had a thorough and frank exchange of views on the new relations between the two countries. It has become evident that bilaterally there are no political differences that might hamper the development of friendly relations.

"Agreement was reached on the following points:

"It was decided that an exchange of Ambassadors should take place as soon as possible within this year.

"The two Ministers have signed an Agreement to the effect that their respective Governments will foster technical co-operation between the two countries. Co-operation will consist in exchanging knowledge and experience in the broad sense of the terms, possibly accompanied by material aid. Experts may be made available under the Agreement and specific projects involving extensive technical assistance may be carried out. The Agreement also provides the opportunity for the granting by both countries of fellowships for further studies. The Ministers regard this Agreement as constituting an important, general basis for the development of future co-operation in the promotion of scientific and economic progress.

"The two Ministers agreed that official delegations of the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Republic of Indonesia shall meet within three months either in The Hague or Djakarta to discuss outstanding financial problems. During the negotiations the financial problems which have arisen between the two countries as a consequence of past political events will be discussed. The delegations will endeavour to submit a joint proposal to both Governments with a view to arriving at a settlement of these problems.

"The Indonesian Minister undertook to make the necessary arrangements for resuming the repatriation of Indonesians from the Moluccas and their families, still living in the Netherlands, who wish to return to Indonesia.

"It has been agreed to set up a mixed commission as described in Article XXII, Section 3 of the West Irian Agreement of August 15, 1962. The commission's terms of reference will be to advise the respective Governments on the Dutch concessions and property rights existing in that territory on May 1, 1963. The commission will start its work soon.

"Indonesia has in principle agreed to meet the Netherlands' request to grant landing rights for a twice weekly service of Royal Dutch Airlines (KLM) to Djakarta. The Netherlands has agreed to meet Indonesia's request to grant landing rights in the Netherlands for Garuda Indonesian Airways (GIA.)

"The two Ministers are happy to state that their talks and negotiations have been conducted in the most cordial way and that they have reached the most satisfactory results. They believe that a sound foundation has been laid for the new relations between the two countries.

"The Indonesian Minister for Foreign Affairs and for Foreign Economic Relations has invited his colleague, Mr. J. M. A. H. Luns, to pay a return visit to Indonesia. Mr. Luns has accepted the invitation; the date of the visit will be fixed later."

IRAN

A. US-Iranian Military Manoeuvres: Some 2,300 American troops parachuted from big transport aircraft into the Dezful area in south-west Iran on April 13 to begin Operation Delavar, the joint US-Iranian military manoeuvres sponsored by CENTO.

Simultaneously the US Middle East force, consisting of two destroyers and a converted seaplane tender, launched an amphibious landing on Kharg island on the Persian Gulf coast.

The simulated attack on Kharg island was assisted by a helicopter force which dropped troops inland. The three-day Operation was aimed at demonstrating the ability of USA to come quickly to the assistance of friendly Middle East countries and to join forces with local Iranian troops, an unspecified number of whom are taking part in the Operation.

Operation Delavar, the Persian for "courageous", assumed a mock war in which foreign troops penetrated the defensive positions of local forces. A total of 6,800 United States Army, Navy, Marine, and Air Force men took part.

The chief unit in the task force was the 2,300-man brigade of parachute troopers from the 101st Airborne Division, Fort Campbell, Kentucky. They had flown 6,000 miles from America with a stop-over in Turkey. A total of 124 US fighter aircraft and transports took part. This included two fighter squadrons with 18 aircraft each, and more than 50 C-137 and C-130 transport aircraft.

IRAQ

A. New Publicity Law: The Council of Ministers approved on April 5 the new Publicity Law.

The Minister of Culture and Guidance, Staff Brigadier Abdul Karim Farhan, said in an interview on April 6 that the Law ensured freedom of the Press. "Under the new Law, the licence of any publication can be cancelled only with the approval of the Council of Ministers. Besides, the Law will raise the standard of the local Press and provide necessary material and technical potentialities for the publication of newspapers."

An Arab, under the Law, can for the first time issue political and non-political periodicals in Iraq. In accordance with the Law, Iraqi citizens and Arabs are equal.

He said that a political periodical would be licenced in future only for a body which should consist of not less than five efficient and capable persons. "These persons are to form the board of administration of the publication and each will have equal responsibility and equal number of shares."

ISRAEL

A. Independence Day Celebrations: Israel celebrated the 16th anniversary of her independence on April 16 with popular rejoicing, State ceremonial, military parades and tributes to those who worked, fought and suffered in the cause of independence.

In a message broadcast on April 14, the President, Mr. Zalman Shazar said: "On the eve of a new year in the life of our State, its 17th year, let the blessing of peace and all good go forth to all the citizens of Israel, without distinction as to faith or ethnic origin, time of coming to these shores or type of community in which they live. May this next year bring with it for all of us blessings and grace, fruitfulness in all fields of work and spiritual endeavour, amity among ourselves, peace within and without our borders.

"The 16th year of the State was a time of large and constantly growing immigration. There was no pause, as well, in the efforts our people and State made to receive our brothers returning from the lands of dispersion and to prepare homes and work for them. Despite all the difficulties, there was no newcomer who had to say 'There is no place for me.'

"The State's growth, and the manner in which it is meeting its social, educational and cultural needs and strengthening its position in every way, are mirrored in the unprecedented size of the National Budget for this next year. This is a burden that our people will surely bear with willing hearts, knowing that these are taxes of life and progress which give far more than they take.

"Let us, too, on the eve of Independence Day recall in tenderness and grief our heroic sons and daughters who gave their lives for the liberation of our people and the security of our State from the time of the War of Independence until this day. Every one of us feels with their bereaved parents and kin; every one of us, the whole nation, will bear their memory in our hearts for ever.

"The year just ended was termed 'The Year of The First' in appreciation of those who with inspired daring returned to Zion and laid the foundations of our resettlement on the soil of the homeland. The year to come is dedicated to the memory of the courage and suffering and sacrifice that made possible Aliya Beth—'illegal immigration.'

"In this last year the wall of isolation has been breached more and more. Our emissaries, political and technical, have gone to many States in many parts of the world, near and far. We have had a growing number of distinguished visitors from abroad—Kings and Presidents of both old and newly established States; heads of Churches; public figures; distinguished scientists who have held their conferences among us; intellectual leaders who have come to observe the development of our life.

"The sprigs of new friendship have been planted before our eyes. Though many political tests await us, though hatred against us is still shouted forth by those who hope to intimidate us with threats, though hostility and intrigue have not ceased, this last year has seen the strengthening and expansion of our friendship with other nations and the consistent lessening of any threat of international isolation.

"In the light of the closer understanding between the State and the Zionist movement and the assumption of mutual responsibilities, both are now enabled, indeed obligated, to struggle even more ardently for our people's life and future. That the welfare of the State and the existence of the Jewish people everywhere are inextricably interwoven, is growing constantly clearer to all factors in Jewish life.

"To all our brothers in all parts of the world—to those whose mute cry has reached and aroused the noblest hearts among men: to all who have heard and responded; to those who live in tranquillity and those whom the hand of exile has stricken; to them all on this day of rejoicing goes the blessing of brotherhood and encouragement and readiness to aid and demand to be aided.

"Laden with grave responsibilities and rich hope, our State enters its 17th year, looking forward to brotherly harmony at home; to growth and building in the Negev and the north and in all development areas; to greater aliya and sound absorption of those who come; to physical and spiritual merging of the different strains in our people; to the disappearance of the hostility our neighbours feel; to strong and unified resistance against every enemy; to extending a strong and sincere hand to all who wish true peace in our region and in all the world.

"May it be given to us to see the fulfilment of the ancient prophecy: 'And ye shall dwell in your land safely. And I will give peace in the land.'"

B. Industrial Development Programme: A new six-year programme for industrial development has been presented by the Minister for Commerce and Industry, Mr. Pinhas Sapir.

He said its success depended on two factors—that defence expenditure during the six-year period should not exceed the average of the past five, and that the rate of increase in personal consumption be reduced to three per cent a year instead of the present six per cent.

The main target of the plan is to reduce the trade deficit, which now stands at $320 million, by a 10 per cent increase in the proportion (at present 15 per cent) of industrial production which is exported. By this means, the trade deficit would be cut to $100-150 million by the end of the plan period in 1970. The annual average rate of increase in industrial production is estimated at 9.9 per cent, rising from £14,300 million in 1962 to £19,100 million in 1970. The chief difficulty in implementing the plan is likely to be lack of skilled man-power. It is estimated that the population will increase by 500,000 to 3 million by 1970 and that the labour force will increase from 850,000 to over 1 million, 100,000 of the new workers entering industry. Of this figure, 60,000 must be skilled technicians and 7,000 managerial and professional staff if the plan is to work effectively.

The annual average rate of increase in investment during the plan period is 7.8 per cent rising from £1357 million in 1962 to £1650 million in 1970. The highest rate of increase in investment is planned for chemicals (15 per cent); electrical and electronic equipment (14 per cent); minerals (13 per cent); transportation equipment (12 per cent) and printing and publishing (12 per cent). The major increase in exports is to come from chemicals (847 per cent by 1970); refined petroleum products (671 per cent); minerals (381 per cent); and diamonds (122 per cent).

The plan has taken two years to complete and will be reviewed every two years to adapt its implementation to changing circumstances.

JORDAN

A. King Hussein's Visit To USA: King Hussein arrived in Washington on April 14 on a State visit to USA.

Welcoming the King at the White House, President Lyndon B. Johnson gave the assurance of continued US assistance to Jordan and said the King's visit would strengthen the cordial ties existing between the two countries.

King Hussein and President Johnson ended their two-day talks on April 15, and a joint communique said that the talks were marked by cordiality, goodwill and candour.

The communique said that "a common concern for preserving and strengthening a just peace in the area was evident throughout the talks".

It said that President Johnson presented the views of USA on various world problems, including those of the Middle East, and King Hussein put forward the views of Jordan and the other Arab States on various Middle East problems and their impact on relations between the two nations.

The two leaders declared their firm determination to make every effort to increase the broad area of understanding which already existed between Jordan and the United States. King Hussein's visit, it said, advanced this objective.

It added that Mr. Johnson told his guest that USA would continue to support Jordan's efforts to attain a viable and self-sustaining economy.

KUWAIT

A. Trade Agreement With UAR: The first Trade Agreement between Kuwait and the United Arab Republic was signed on April 14 by the UAR Minister of Treasury and Planning, Dr. Nazi Deif, and Kuwait's Minister of Commerce, Khalifa Khaled Al Ghaneim, setting up the overall frame-work for improvement in trade between the two countries.

Earlier in April, the UAR Vice-President, Mr. Anwar Al-Sadat visited Kuwait to discuss a proposed £35 million loan, on which agreement has been reached in principle. The loan is in two parts, a direct Government-to-Government loan of £25 million which UAR can spend as it sees fit; and a £10 million loan from the Kuwait Fund for Arab Economic Development (KFAED) which is earmarked for Suez Canal improvements and subject to the regulations of the KFAED, which are similar in many respects to the rules governing World Bank lending. Both these loans are to be repaid in 15 years, with a five-year grace period after which interest at 4 per cent is payable.

The direct Government loan of £30 million to Iraq in October, 1963 was for 25 years but was interest-free. However, some rather lengthy Iraqi-Kuwaiti talks that were carried on for some weeks last Autumn also covered several aspects of relations between the two countries, including the Iraqi offer to supply all Kuwait's additional requirement of fresh water from the Shatt-al-Arab, as well as possible minor re-adjustments of the common frontier.

Kuwait has also made direct Government-to-Government loans (as opposed to loans made through KFAED) to Algeria, and a £5 million loan has been promised to Jordan. Continuous direct aid for educational and social purposes has also been given to the Trucial States over a period of years.

It was announced in Kuwait that all future aid to Arab States would be made through KFAED, but that loans already promised would not be affected. Since all loans come from the reserves, the total Kuwait has for lending to sister-States is not affected, although her control over monies lent is likely to be more stringent.

B. Agreement On Water Pipeline With Iraq: A London report on April 20 said that more than 10 years after the first discussions began, Kuwait has settled with Iraq for a water pipeline from Shatt-al-Arab, capable of supplying 120,000,000 gallons a day.

Feasibility studies have begun, but their findings are not in doubt.

The report said: "In fact, Kuwait has finally committed itself because it no longer depends on the venture for its vital water supplies, as it might have done if the arrangement had been made in 1956. General Kassem is dead, Kuwait is a member of United Nations as well as the Arab League, and the present Government of Iraq has gratefully accepted a special advance of £32 million from Kuwait's bountiful oil revenues.

"In its way the story of Kuwait's water is as interesting as the story of its oil. Until a dozen years ago Kuwait depended for sweet water on supplies brought from the mouth of the Shatt-al-Arab by dhows. The local wells were few and brackish. In bad times an enterprising merchant could make fat profits on water. For some time after the oil began to flow from Burgan oilfield in 1946 this trade went on, but clearly an assured water supply was essential to the development plans begun by the present Emir in the early 1950s.

"According he ordered a seawater distillation plant in conjunction with Kuwait's first power station at Shuwaikh, near the town. The first unit, providing a million gallons a day, was completed in 1953, and a second with the same capacity in 1955. Since Kuwait Oil Company provided natural gas for practically nothing, the process was uncommonly cheap of its kind, about 12s, for 1,000 gallons, but expensive compared with natural sources.

"In 1953 Kuwait first approached Iraq for a piped supply from the Shatt-al-Arab above Basra. A pipeline capacity of 100 million gallons a day was costed at £36 million in 1956, but negotiations broke down because Iraq wanted a lease of some Kuwait territory as part of a scheme for a new port at Umm Qasr. Besides, the Kuwaiti ruling family were already exercised by the problem of preserving their State's identity as a small and incredibly rich community among populous neighbours with whom they share common Arab 'nationality'. Accordingly between 1957 and 1960 two more units with a capacity of 2 million gallons a day each were constructed; they operate by a more economical method at a production cost of about 8s. per 1,000 gallons. A total capacity of 6 million gallons a day, making this the world's largest distillation plant, was reckoned enough for essential needs and enough to avoid any risk of Iraqi fingers on the national gullet.

"In 1960 also, unexpectedly, Kuwait struck domestic reserves of sweet water when sinking wells to provide the Basra road contractor with brackish water. The Raudhatain water field, 55 miles from Kuwait town and 10 from the Iraq border, turned out to have reserves of sweet water—about 625 parts of salts per million—enough to provide 5 million gallons a day for 25 years. A piping system to Kuwait town was completed at the end of 1952, and runs at present about 3,500,000 gallons a day.

"Between the discovery and development of Raudhatain water, General Kassem made his bid to annex Kuwait to Iraq. Obviously, while he was in power, there could be no question of re-opening negotiations about a water supply from the Shatt-al-Arab. His successors, having resumed their place in the Arab League, recognized Kuwait and implicitly relinquished any claim to it, the most obvious political obstacle has gone.

"What will Kuwait do with the water? The obvious need is agricultural. The Government has already exploited the large reserves of brackish water at Sulaibiyah, 10 miles from Kuwait town. It contains about 4,000 parts in a million of soluble salts, but one can wash in it, flush with it, and grow flowers and some kinds of trees and plants.

"One of the changes in 10 years of development regardless of cost has been the planting of hundreds of thousands of trees, but Kuwait is still a disagreeably dusty city, and for most plants the use of brackish water involves a soil change every four or five years. Agriculture on any scale, or forestry enough to furnish a windbrake, demands sweet water in quantities far greater than the 20 million gallons a day of brackish water in use at present.

"Indeed, to any ecologist looking for promising desert to reclaim, Kuwait without its oil income would be a poor prospect. The temperature range is anything up to 100°F a year; there were eight degrees of frost this January and summer shade temperatures of more than 120° are common. Rainfall is 4 inches to 6 inches a year. The soil is thin and bitter, even by desert standards. At the same time, if Kuwait does not grow food it must import it, and while the oil revenues last there is every inducement to get under way as much growth as possible.

"Agricultural experiments have been under way for years. With a current annual oil revenue of £210 million a year, and a population, only half of it native or naturalized, of only 400,000, Kuwait can afford to experiment with the latest techniques of soilless culture and crop and livestock protection. The proposed 120 million gallons of sweet water a day could equip plantations and agriculture on a large square mile where it is now counted in acres. At the same time, a break in supply in Summer could cause the loss of every plant in two or three days.

"It is a fair guess that the feasibility studies will give a good deal of attention to storage, including the maintenance of reserves in the Raudhatain water field. Nine-tenths of Kuwait's sweet water is still supplied by road tanker, and the Summer demand for ordinary purposes will undoubtedly exceed this year's expected total of 8 million or 9 million gallons a day once piped water is a commonplace."

LAOS

A. Factional Leaders Fail To Reach Agreement: Leaders of the Rightist, Neutralist and Leftist factions met in the Plain of Jars on April 17 in a bid to resolve their differences that had made conditions in the kingdom unstable for a long time. The talks failed to produce any agreement.

The Neutralist leader and Prime Minister, Prince Souvanna Phouma, said later that "no result was obtained" at the summit talks and that he would tell the King of the "impossibility of resolving Laotian problems" and then resign his office.

Observers said the situation was critical, with the coalition of Pathet Lao, Right-wingers and Neutralists threatening to crumble at any moment.

But Prince Souvanna's half-brother, and Leftist Pathet Lao leader, Prince Souphanouvong, said: "We are not losing hope of solving the problem."

The question of the neutralization of Luang Prabang, the Royal Capital, apparently caused the breakdown of the talks.

Prince Souphanouvong said his Right-wing counterpart, General Phoumi Nosavan, would not accept Left-wing proposals on the issue.

[The failure of the summit talks was followed by an abortive coup in Vientiane, a comprehensive account of which will appear in a subsequent issue of Asian Recorder].

MALAYSIA

A. Request For UN Intervention—U Thant's Reply: The UN Secretary-General, U Thant, informed Malaysia on April 16 that he would examine thoroughly every possibility of trying to solve the confrontation issue with Indonesia and to preserve peace and security in South-East Asia.

U Thant was replying to a request from Tengku Abdul Rehman, the Prime Minister of Malaysia, for United Nations to take over again in the dispute.

A letter from the Tengku had been delivered to U Thant on April 6 by Mr. R. Ramani, Malaysia's Deputy Permanent Representative to United Nations.

An agency report said that annexed to the letter was a list of more than 50 incidents between January 16 and March 27 involving direct confrontation by Indonesia. U Thant was understood to have told Mr. Ramani that he would study the letter carefully to see what steps he could take.

Malaysian sources in New York were said to have hinted that if U Thant found it impossible to make progress towards a solution of the dispute, Malaysia might take it to the Security Council. The letter was described as preparatory. The Malaysian delegation, it was reported, was expected to have informed talks with other delegations at United Nations.

The Tengku rejected Opposition demands that the British bases in Malaysia should be closed. If that happened, he said, Indonesian troops would march into the country.

Tun Abdul Razak, the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Defence, said on April 8 that military training for young men registered under the Malaysian national call-up scheme would begin soon.

Tengku Abdul Rehman told a rally at Ipoh on April 8 that he regarded the cease-fire in Sabah (Borneo) as no longer in force.

According to the Government television service, he said that Malaysian forces would "go across the border" in the event of war with Indonesia. President Sukarno of Indonesia was a man with "no dignity or honour" and he had repeatedly broken his word.

He said that in discussions with Indonesia's Dr. Sukarno and Dr. Subandrio, he had asked why they did not regard Indonesian occupation of the former Dutch-held West Irian as being "encirclement" of Australia in the same way as they said the union of northern Borneo with Malaya was "encirclement" of Indonesia. He said they made no reply.

Australian Assistance:

The Australian Defence Minister, Mr. Paul Hasluck, said in the House of Representatives on April 16 that Australia would deploy more land, sea and air forces in support of the Malaysian forces defending the Sabah territory of Malaysia against Indonesian intrusion.

He said that Australia had decided to take this action in response to an urgent request from Malaysia.

The Malaysian Government had sought the assistance of Australian forces in countering the threat of seaborne infiltration along the coasts of Sarawak and Sabah. It had also asked for engineering construction in Sabah for helicopter support of security operations against terrorists along the northern border of Malaya, and for some air transport support.

Mr. Hasluck said that in response to these requests the Government had decided to make available at once two Royal Australian Navy coastal minesweepers for patrols off the coast of the Malaysian Borneo states. These would supplement the patrol ships in the strategic reserve and the provision of two further vessels would be considered in early June.

An Army engineer squadron of 120 men with plant and workshop capacity would be provided to construct airstrips, roads and bridges in Sabah. In addition, a detachment of four Royal Australian Air Force Iroquois helicopters with pilots and technicians would be made available in support of operations on the Thai-Malaya border. These would release other helicopters for service in Sabah. An addition to these four helicopters would be considered later.

Air transport service would be provided in the Thai-Malaya border area in freight flights from Malaya to Sabah. Mr. Hasluck said that the converted aircraft carrier Sydney would move personnel and equipment from Australia and the services were arranging for the units concerned to be made available as early as practicable.

The engineers will be the first Australian troops deployed into the Borneo territories since the Indonesian confrontation of Malaysia began. The decision to send the engineers was the latest stage in the Australian Government's strategy of graduated response to Indonesian confrontation. It followed earlier phases of material aid, assignment of other RAN ships for patrol duties and the alerting of RAAF squadrons at Butterworth to a state of operational readiness.

Sir Garfield Barwick, the Australian Minister for External Affairs, said in Manila on April 16 that he had told Dr. R. Subandrio, the Indonesian Foreign Minister, that unless Indonesia stopped her aggressive moves against Malaysia the situation would eventually involve Australia because of Malaysia's defence arrangements with Australia. The United States would be involved in large-scale hostilities over the Malaysia issue owing to her military commitments under the ANZUS (Australia, New Zealand, United States) Treaty.

British Support:

Britain's Deputy Foreign Minister, Lord Carrington, assured Malaysia on April 11 that his country would rush troops to the Borneo border, should the Indonesian military confrontation precipitate into war "as we did in the case of Cyprus and East Africa."

He was speaking to newsmen at Kuala Lumpur airport before leaving for Manila to attend the S-EATO Ministerial Council meeting.

He was satisfied that the Malaysian and British security forces at the border were doing a "very good job in the face of mounting Indonesian military aggression."

Asked if he felt it necessary to send more British troops to defend the 1,000-mile East Malaysian border, he said: "Like any commanding general I will never admit the inadequacy of troops."

VIET-NAM (DR)

A. National Assembly Elections: The President, Dr. Ho Chi-Minh, has been re-elected to the National Assembly along with 366 other deputies.

The election results were announced in Hanoi on April 26 at a meeting held jointly by the Administrative Committee of Hanoi and the Hanoi Committee of the Viet-Nam Fatherland Front.

Among other leaders returned to the National Assembly were the Party's First Secretary, Mr. Le Duan and Mr. Truong Chinh, a member of the Party Central Committee's Politburo.

B. International Conference Proposed—Note To Communist Parties: The Central Committee of the Viet-Nam Workers' Party in a letter to all fraternal Communist parties has called for a conference of representatives of Communist parties.

The letter dated April 21 was made public on April 29.

It pointed out that the split in the international Communist movement would have disastrous results. "In the face of the extremely grave situation now prevailing, we are aware that good preparations are required if such a conference is to effectively bring about the desired results. We propose that such preparations be made in two steps as follows:

"First step—resumption by the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and the Communist Party of China of the talks held in 1963 with a view to working out agreed views and jointly preparing the content of the questions to be discussed at a preparatory conference of representatives of a number of fraternal parties.

"Second step—holding of a preparatory conference of representatives of a number of fraternal parties to discuss, and make adequate preparations for the documents of the conference of representatives of the Communists and workers' parties.

"We are afraid that a conference of representatives of the Communist and workers' parties hastily convened without adequate preparations would fail to bring about a deep understanding in the socialist camp and the international communist movement.

"At present, the imperialists and their agents are attentively following every minute the differences among our Communist and workers' parties. They are trying by every provocative means to deepen the divergences, and thus to threaten the international communist movement. We, communists, must show utmost vigilance in the face of their dangerous schemes and hostile act.

"The tasks of paramount importance new confronting us require our parties to act with the greatest lucidity and circumspection. In any case, we must strive, first and foremost, to preserve the solidarity and unity of the socialist camp on the basis of Marxism-Leninism, proletarian internationalism and the revolutionary principles of the Moscow Declaration and Statement of 1957 and 1960.

"Therefore, we earnestly call upon the fraternal parties, first of all, the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and the Communist Party of China, to do good preparatory work for a conference of the Communist and workers' parties capable of resolving the present differences, with a view to restoring and strengthening unity in the socialist camp and the international communist movement.

"For our part, we pledge ourselves wholeheartedly to strive, together with the fraternal parties, for the unity of the socialist camp and the international communist movement so as to achieve still greater victories for peace, national independence, democracy and socialism."

BURMA

A. Mondaing Dam Project: Work is progressing on the Mondaing Dam project which is expected to be completed early in 1965.

Work on damming the waters of Mondaing Creek, which feeds Meiktila Lake, began in 1962.

The 53-feet-deep Dam, with a water surface area of about 1,900 acres, will hold an estimated 950,000,000 gallons of water. Its earth embankment will be 4,200 feet long and 67 feet wide. Water for cultivation will be supplied through a 7-foot diameter pipe 411 feet long. The entire project is expected to cost K89,00,000.

Normally, about 9,500 acres in the vicinity of the Dam, which lies 10.5 miles off the Meiktila-Kyaukpadaung Road, are brought under paddy and cotton cultivation during the Monsoon.

It is expected that when the project is completed, sufficient water will be made available to bring under Winter cultivation such crops as cotton (3,000 acres), groundnut (3,000 acres), beans and pulses (1,500 acres), chilli and onions (1,000 acres) and maize (500 acres).

The project will also bring extra Winter crop income to peasants in about 100 villages in the neighbourhood.

CEYLON

A. Judgment In Language Case: A District Judge has ruled that Tamil public servants in Ceylon who had not studied the Sinhala language have still a right to obtain their usual annual increments, despite the Treasury circular instructing Government agents and heads of Departments to stop increment to such persons.

Delivering the judgment in the "language case", filed by a Tamil Government servant, Kodeswaran, the acting District Judge of Colombo, Mr. O. L. De Kretser declared that the action of the Government agent of Kegalle in stopping increment for the plaintiff was an error. Kodeswaran was also awarded costs.

The Judge added: "The case of the plaintiff is that the Government in taking steps to implement the Official Language Act was taking them to implement an Act which was bad in law, in that it was an Act that offended Section 29 (sub-section 2) of the Constitution and that therefore he could not be punished by deprivation of his increments if he decided to ignore the requirement that he should show he had the requisite proficiency in Sinhala by passing the prescribed examination".

[Section 29 (sub-section 2) of the Constitution states that Parliament has no right to enact a law which confers on persons of any community or religion any privilege or advantage which is not conferred on persons of other communities and religions.]

The Judge added: "It is hard to resist the correctness of the submission that, under the cloak that it was the legitimate function of Parliament to decide in what language the official business of the Government should be carried on and that in making that decision the language spoken by the largest number of people should be the choice, an Act had been passed which gave advantage to one community which the other did not have, for the purpose of an act must be found in its natural operation and effect."

CHINA

A. Soviet Proposal To Renounce Use Of Force—Mr. Chou En-lai's Criticism: The Premier, Mr. Chou En-lai, has rejected the recent proposal of the Soviet Government (see page 5685) for renouncing the use of force in settling territorial disputes and boundary issues. He described it as a "new fraud."

In a report on his visit to 13 African and Asian countries and Albania, submitted by him to a joint session of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress and a plenary meeting of the State Council in Peking in the last week of April, he said that boundary questions between Asian and African countries should and could find a fair and reasonable solution through peaceful consultations. This was also the case with boundary questions between socialist countries. (There are boundary differences between China and the Soviet Union).

But, he said, "imperialist aggression" and occupation of other countries' territories was a matter of a completely different nature.

He said that the periodic meetings in Warsaw between American and Chinese Ambassadors had so far yielded no results. (It is well known that the two sides have been assuming irreconcilable postures—the Chinese Ambassador insisting on USA agreeing to the vacation of Taiwan while the US Ambassador insisting on China agreeing to renunciation of the use of force).

Mr. Chou's main objection to the Soviet proposal was that it deliberately confused imperialist aggression and occupation of other countries' territories with territorial disputes and boundary questions left over by history.

On April 26, the Chinese Communist Party, in a statement issued by the New China News Agency accused the Soviet Premier, Mr. Khruschev and his colleagues of lying and of sophistry and compared them with "ostriches with their heads buried in the sand".

It also suggested that the Soviet Prime Minister had once been forced to retract "Trotskyist" views. It spoke of "a person who in the past supported Trotsky's reactionary views and had therefore to make a self-criticism". It did not say when the episode took place but declared: "We are prepared to publish relevant details when necessary".

The statement, in the form of a note by the newspaper's editorial department, prefaced the full text of three Soviet documents criticising the Chinese position in the Moscow-Peking ideological dispute. These documents were the report made by Mr. Mikhail Suslov to the central committee of the Soviet Communist Party on February 14; a resolution criticising China adopted by the central committee on February 15; and a leading article in Pravda, of April 3.

The editorial note said that extracts from the Soviet "anti-China" documents—which filled six pages in the People's Daily—would be published by newspapers throughout China. They would be broadcast throughout the country and to the whole world in various languages.

In an obvious reference to Mr. Khruschev's 1956 denunciation of Stalin, the note spoke of someone who, "singing the same tune as Trotsky, launched a frenzied campaign against Stalin... with the result that Trotskyists in all countries, then at the end of their rope, began to raise their heads."

The statement said that the Soviet documents contained "lies and nothing but lies, sophistry and nothing but sophistry, abuse and nothing but abuse". The Soviet leaders apparently had profound faith in the philosophy of the lie. "Nor is there much new in Khruschev's speeches. Besides his greater vulgarity, his contribution consists of such gestures as pounding the table, stamping his feet, brandishing his fists, and grinding his teeth."

The statement defended Mr. Mao Tse-tung against Soviet attacks on him. It said that "in their vain effort to vilify Comrade Mao Tse-tung and his ideas the leaders of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union are like ants trying to shake a huge tree, ridiculously overrating themselves."

It advised people to study the Soviet documents "in spite of their offensive smell and their lengthiness", to gain a "clearer understanding of the ugly features of revisionism and to heighten our revolutionary consciousness". It said the documents confirmed that the Soviet leaders were the "greatest revisionists" and "the greatest splitters" of our times.

Chinese Exodus To Hong Kong Alleged:

On April 30, the Soviet Press reported for the first time that more than a million Chinese had fled to Hong Kong.

In a 1,800-word article describing conditions of poverty in the British Colony, Izvestia accused the Chinese leadership of tolerating the Colony as "a loophole into the capitalist world."

The Russians first attacked the Chinese publicly for their policy on Hong Kong in 1962 when Mr. Khruschev compared it with Goa, which had been liberated shortly before.

The new attack on the Chinese leadership came as China accused the Soviet Union of organizing subversion on its border with north-west China.

In a despatch from Hong Kong, an Izvestia correspondent said Chinese leaders regarded Hong Kong as "a loophole into the capitalist world" through which, according to the Western Press, they received "not less than half of their annual hard currency income".

Describing poverty and prostitution in the Colony, the correspondent declared: "I cannot keep silent about the problem of refugees. There was a mass crossing in 1962 and the whole Hong Kong Press was full of it. It is hard to realise and impossible to reconcile oneself to the fact that these refugees are from the Chinese People's Republic.

"The refugees say they decided to abandon their homeland because economic conditions are becoming worse and worse and the people are living in poverty.

"When you see these exhausted people, who only have occasional earnings in colonial Hong Kong, but at the same time refuse to go back, a thought strikes you.

"Where are the Chinese leaders of their country, the leaders who so favour ultra-revolutionary phrases but neglect the task of improving the life of their own people?"

It was easy to understand why capitalist businessmen had no fears for the future of their investments in Hong Kong. "They see that for the present no one threatens the existence of the ulcer of colonialism on ancient Chinese land."

The country was the centre of opium smuggling and "brothels constitute a substantial item in Hong Kong business. There is no shortage of 'clientele'.... and no shortage of 'hostesses,' as they are called here. More than a million refugees have crossed into Hong Kong from China in recent years.

"In order to avoid poverty and get some sort of bread, Chinese girls go on the streets and the 'luckiest' of them get into brothels."

Mediation Efforts By Rumania And North Viet-Nam:

Rumania, in a new effort to bring about a truce between Moscow and Peking on April 26 published documents revealing that it had made an urgent call for a Sino-Soviet "summit" with the Rumanian Party present as mediator.

The Rumanian Party also disclosed that Russia had "agreed in general" to the truce plan and that it was China which failed to heed it and, instead, continued its anti-Soviet campaign.

The Rumanian Party felt it was "the duty of every party to do its utmost to divert the danger of a split," and, therefore, proposed that "the two parties, together with the Rumanian Workers' Party", try to settle the dispute in a three-party conference.

This conference, proposed to Russia and China in March, should serve to "discuss and finalise an appeal to all Communist and workers' parties.... to solve controversial issues in conformity with the norms jointly established at the 1957 and 1960 Moscow conferences concerning relations between Communist Parties."

The Rumanian Party statement ran into over 12,000 words. The publication of the documents was decided by the Party's central committee on April 22 after a week-long plenary session.

The documents offer a rare insight into the power struggle between the two giants for leadership of world Communism and illustrate how the Rumanians are striving to remain neutral in the conflict and, by playing the role of a mediator trying to establish themselves as the "third power" between the two.

While supporting the Soviet idea of peaceful co-existence with the West and —without naming China—refuting Chinese criticism of the limited nuclear test ban Treaty, the Rumanian "policy analysis" made it clear that Bucharest would defend its economic position in the Communist bloc and resist Soviet attempts to curb Rumania's industrial development.

North Viet-Nam proposed also that China and the Soviet Union renew their ruptured 1963 talks as one of two preliminary steps to an international conference to resolve the present crisis.

The Viet-Namese, in a letter sent on April 21 to all 87 Communist Parties throughout the world, insisted, however, that the present Sino-Soviet differences must be solved on the basis of Marxism-Leninism, the usual reference to China's position.

The letter said it recognized that no international conference could be a success unless it was carefully prepared and unless all parties acted "with the greatest lucidity and circumspection".

The resumed Sino-Soviet talks would work out "agreed views" and prepare the questions to be discussed at a preparatory conference of representatives of "a number of fraternal parties." This would be the first step.

The second would be to hold the preparatory conference, which would "make adequate preparations for the documents of the conference of representatives of the Communist and workers' parties."

B. French Ambassador Named: France named on April 27 Mr. Lucien Paye, a former Education Minister and Ambassador to Senegal, as her first Ambassador to Peking.

The announcement from the French Foreign Ministry came exactly three months after France and China had announced the establishment of diplomatic relations.

A spokesman of the Peking diplomatic mission in Paris said the Chinese Ambassador would be Mr. Huang Chen, a Deputy Foreign Minister and former Ambassador to Indonesia.

France will shortly submit to China offers to build cargo and passenger ships, a spokesman of the shipbuilders' association in Paris said. The spokesman, Mr. Jean-Pierre Dobler, was a member of a shipbuilders' delegation which recently had preliminary talks in Peking.

C. Sino-Pakistan Air Service: The Pakistan International Airlines (PIA) inaugurated on April 29 its scheduled service to China amidst pledges of friendship and good neighbourly relations by the leaders of the two countries.

The People's Daily, organ of the Chinese Communist Party, in an editorial entitled "An airline of friendship, an airline of peace", hailed the event as "a landmark in the development of Sino-Pakistan relations of friendship and co-operation."

The opening of the new service makes PIA the first air carrier of a non-Communist country ever to land planes on Communist soil on a scheduled basis. It would appear that for some time to come, only the PIA wil be operating on the route and that reciprocal Chinese services will not be started in the immediate future.

China completed in record time the technical facilities required for the PIA inauguration, according to a message from Pakistan's Chief Administrator of Civil Aviation to his Chinese counterpart.

The People's Daily was certain that relations of friendship and co-operation between the two countries would "develop ceaselessly."

INDIA

SUMMARY: Dhebar Committee's Report On Bhuvaneshwar Resolution; Fourth Finance Commission; Textiles Agreement With USA; Increase In Exports; Tourist Traffic.

A. Implementation Of Bhuvaneshwar Resolution On Democracy And Socialism—Dhebar Committee's Report: In its report on the implementation of the Bhuvaneshwar resolution on democracy and socialism adopted by the Congress, the Dhebar Committee suggested on May 9 that the Chief Minister or the Minister in charge should be held accountable to the Congress Parliamentary Board for failures in the field of agriculture and that the "necessary consequences of failure to discharge the responsibility should follow."

The Committee, headed by Mr. U. N. Dhebar, had been appointed by the Congress President, Mr. K. Kamaraj to suggest ways and means of implementing the Bhuvaneshwar resolution.

Devoting a large part of its attention to agriculture, the Committee emphasized the need for a "very high level political machinery" under the A-ICC to ensure speedy implementation of land reform measures in the States and to clear "the hurdles on the way". It referred to "built-in deficiencies" in some land reform laws.

The Committee's opinion was that the Government should acquire, before the end of the current Plan, "a commanding position" in grains processing and trade to assure proper prices for farmers and consumers. Its other suggestions in this regard included fixation of margins to be charged at different levels and effective implementation of the policy of licensing of wholesalers.

It underlined the responsibility of the Congress organization and the Government in removing certain weaknesses in the process.

In its view the Five-Year Plans represented the correct basic strategy for achieving the objectives of socialism and democracy. If the results in the past had not been up to expectation, the fault was not that of strategy but of implementation.

The Congress and the Government carried a "moral obligation" to ensure that the results of the Plans bear a "reasonable relationship" to people's efforts and that not only the burdens and sacrifices, but the fruits were also equitably distributed. It suggested several modifications in the organizational approach also.

With suitable organizational changes, the public sector industry should expand and the Government should undertake in full or in a very large measure the responsibility for the establishment and efficient operation of all the important intermediate and capital goods industries and be ready to enter a field where the private sector fails to implement projects assigned to it.

In particular, the Committee said, additional capacities in industries of mass consumption like cloth should be created in the co-operative or State sector on a decentralized basis and there should be a powerful check on "multiplicity and sophistication of varieties" in these articles.

Recognizing that there should be effective control over the pace and manner of expansion of the private sector, the Committee recommended changes in the system of licensing of industries to avoid delay in the execution of projects and industries being controlled by large business houses.

"For a real curtailment of economic power in private hands, it will be necessary for the Government to intervene more extensively than at present in both financial and distributive activities."

Without going directly into the question of nationalization of banks, the Committee made a series of recommendations to strengthen further the Reserve Bank's control over bank operations. It suggested that the Reserve Bank should have the authority (and "be always prepared to exercise it") to direct commercial banks found to indulge in "undesirable practices" to reconstitute their boards of directors or amalgamate them with public sector banks or other approved scheduled banks or run them under the Reserve Bank's overall guidance.

The Committee briefly referred to the disparities of income to say that to remove them "more purposive fiscal measures should be adopted". About unaccounted money, its only comment was "no step (to deal with the existing evil) can be considered too drastic."

B. Fourth Finance Commission: The Fourth Finance Commission, headed by Dr. P. V. Rajamannar, retired Chief Justice of the Madras High Court, has been asked to report on five additional subjects, apart from the two items required under the Constitution.

Karve, retired Deputy Governor of the Reserve Bank; Prof. Bhabatosh Datta, Director of Public Instruction, West Bengal; and Mr. P. C. Mathew, Special Secretary in the Ministry of Finance. Mr. Mathew will also be the Secretary of the Commission.

The Commission has been asked to make recommendations to the President of India in regard to (a) distribution of the net proceeds of taxes between the Centre and the States and (b) the principles which should govern Central grants-in-aid to the States.

The President has also directed the Commission to make recommendations on the following further matters:

(1) The assistance that may be granted by way of grants-in-aid under Article 275 to such States as are in need of assistance.

In recommending this assistance, the Commission will be expected to take into account the revenue resources of the States during the Fourth Plan period other than those to be raised by way of additional taxation, the expenditure on the maintenance and upkeep of Plan schemes completed during the Third Plan, the moneys required for servicing of the debt, including the debt to be incurred in the Fourth Plan, setting apart of the proceeds of estate duty on property other than agricultural land over specified limits for repayment of the States' debt to the Centre and the scope of economy consistent with efficiency to be effected by the States;

(2) Changes, if any, to be made in the principles governing distribution among the States, under Article 269, of the net proceeds in any financial year of estate duty in respect of property other than agricultural land;

(3) Changes, if any, to be made in the principles governing distribution of grants to be made available to the States in lieu of taxes on railway fares;

(4) Changes, if any, to be made in the principles governing distribution of the net proceeds of additional excise duties levied in replacement of States' sales-tax on cotton textiles, sugar and tobacco; and

(5) The effect of the combined incidence of States' sales-tax and Central excise duties on production, consumption or export of commodities or products, duties on which are shareable with the States, and adjustments, if any, to be made in the States' share of Central excise duties as a result of the increase in States' sales-tax on such commodities or products over a limit to be specified by the Commission.

The scheme of devolution to be recommended by the Commission will cover the five years from 1966-67 to 1970-71, which correspond with the period of the Fourth Plan. It is expected to make its report well in time for the preparation of the Budget for 1966-67.

C. Soviet Equipment For Six Hydraulic Stations: The Soviet Union is supplying equipment for six hydraulic power stations in India this year.

According to a representative of the Machinoexport recently, Soviet specialists have reached agreement with the authorities in Orissa on the terms of contract for one more power station. Deliveries for the plant will begin in the second half of 1965 and completed by 1967. The station will be commissioned in 1967 or 1968.

Machinoexport will also supply the entire equipment for a 100,000 kw thermal power station at Harduaganj in UP. Though the contract has not been signed, the proposal has been accepted in principle.

Soviet engineers will take steps to meet the problems of setting up the plant at Harduaganj as it has "high seismicity and loose ground". The power station will be built on piles. The boiler will be designed to withstand "nine-point earthquakes". The highest resistance of boilers in Soviet power stations is eight points.

About the 400,000 kw Patratu power station in Bihar, Machinoexport says that while work on it is in progress, the Government of India has decided to double its capacity. It had asked the Soviet organization to supply more equipment for the thermal power station. "Preliminary talks on this question have already been held and agreement on principle reached."

Mr. Boris Resinchenko, a representative of Machinoexport, told Tass on his return from India that Indian specialists had praised the quality of Soviet equipment for these power stations. Over 120 Soviet enterprises were taking part in supplying equipment to India's power stations being built with Soviet help.

D. Textiles Agreement With USA: India and the United States announced in Washington on May 8 the conclusion of a bilateral Agreement concerning trade in cotton textiles between the two countries for a 2½-year period, beginning April, 1964.

The Agreement was negotiated under Article 4 of the long-term arrangements regarding international cotton textiles, concluded in Geneva in February, 1962.

The Agreement between the two countries is designed to promote orderly development and growth of cotton textile exports from India to USA. It is the result of the bilateral talks held between the two countries in February this year.

It provides specifically for export ceilings on carded sheetings, printed cloth, carded twills and satins, fabrics, and towels.

India's cotton textile export to USA in five principal fabrics is limited during the first six months to the agreed level of 18.5 million square yards.

The annual agreeable level for these categories which is 37 million square yards, will be increased by a growth factor of 2½ per cent for the next 12-month period, and on a cumulative basis by a growth factor of five per cent for the final 12-month period.

All specific category ceilings are also subjected to the same increases that are applied to the aggregate ceilings.

Under the Agreement, the US Government has agreed not to request restraint under Article 3 of the long-term arrangements in respect of the categories which are subjected to specific limits during the term of the bilateral Agreement.

The two Governments agreed to exchange statistical data required for effective implementation of the Agreement.

The Indian Government agreed to use its best efforts to space evenly the annual exports of six categories covered by the Agreement.

E. Light Water Nuclear Power Station At Tarapur—Agreement With General Electric: International General Electric Company and its Indian subsidiary signed a contract in Washington on May 8 with the Indian Government to build one of the world's largest light water moderated nuclear power stations at Tarapur.

The Agreement covers a complete 380,000 kw. (net electrical) boiling water reactor power station consisting of two 190,000 kw. units and includes the supply of all associated equipment, related services and the initial fuel load.

The atomic power station, to be located about 60 miles north of Bombay, will be India's first US-designed nuclear power station. It will feed electric power to consumers in Maharashtra and Gujerat.

The Agreement is the largest commercial contract ever undertaken in the company's history. It represents a total of $95 million in US dollars and Indian rupees for equipment and technical services to be supplied by the company and its Indian subsidiary.

Site preparation and other expenses of the Indian Department of Atomic Energy, not a part of the General Electric station and fuel contracts, bring the total project cost to $114 million. The Agency for International Development (AID) is financial $80 million of the project cost under a long-term loan to India.

H. India Not To Ratify ILO Convention: India will not ratify a convention on basic aims and standards of social policy adopted by the International Labour Conference in 1962 although the law and practice in India "generally satisfy the various provisions of the convention."

Giving reasons for this, a Government statement laid on the table of the Lok Sabha on May 6 said that the convention was not being ratified at present because "it may not be practicable to give immediate effect to all its provisions."

The Government of India found it particularly difficult to legally prescribe a minimum age for employment and to bar employment of children in any occupation during the school hours as required by the convention.

It also did not consider it practicable to grant migrant workers from other countries special benefits, in addition to their normal wages to meet the needs of their families left behind.

India will ratify another ILO convention—on equality of treatment in the extension of social security benefits to nationals and non-nationals alike—but will accept obligations only for provision of medical care, sickness benefit and maternity benefit to non-nationals working in India.

The Government statement said that it was not possible to accept obligations under the convention for the provision of old-age, employment injury, survivors and invalidity benefits to non-nationals because of foreign exchange difficulties.

The statement said no racial or other discrimination was practised in India in giving vocational training to workers except that some additional concessions were given to Scheduled Castes and Tribes.

There was a net-work of training facilities available throughout the country and in many cases training was given free. Facilities extended to teaching staff of training institutions compared favourably with those in other institutions.

J. Indian Ocean Weather Study—American Scientist's Report: An American scientist, Dr. Colon S. Ramage, reporting in Washington on May 5 the first major meteorological results on the International Indian Ocean Expedition, said that the Monsoon system influenced weather conditions far beyond the borders of India and Pakistan.

Dr. Ramage had spent 20 months in the Indian Ocean area gathering meteorological data from three specially-fitted weather aircraft.

The powerful Summer system, spawned over the Indian Ocean, he said, was so complex that accurate long-range weather forecasts were apparently not now possible for the subcontinent.

He stressed that the findings were pieced together from information gathered by scientists of the 20 nations working together in a "high degree of co-operation". "Included were cloud cover pictures from the American Tiros VIII satellite, meteorological stations rimming the Indian Ocean area and the collection of data by the International Meteorological Centre in Bombay."

He added: "The Summer winds, picking up enormous amounts of moisture and heat over the Indian Ocean, bring torrential rains to the southern land masses of Asia and have a profound effect on the area's agriculture.

"The Monsoon system acts to inject vast amounts of energy into the atmosphere above India and Pakistan, affecting temperature and air circulation throughout that area and probably around the entire globe."

K. Increase In Exports: Exports during 1963-64 totalled Rs. 795 crores—highest on record—showing an increase of over Rs. 81 crores over the previous year.

This was stated in a review of the Ministry of International Trade.

The most encouraging feature was that more commodities were sent to more destinations. The higher value of the exports was accounted for by the increase in the volume of goods exported rather than any fortuitous gain in prices.

The items showing increases were sugar, jute manufactures and new manufactures such as engineering goods, chemicals, art silk fabrics and plastic goods.

Exports, were, however, lower by nearly Rs. 4 crores in respect of tea and about Rs. 1 crore each for essential oils, bones, hides and skins, mica, coal and coke.

The declining trend in cotton fabrics export had been arrested.

Exports to the ECAFE region increased by Rs. 42 crores. Exports to ECM countries rose only marginally.

There was an increase of Rs. 12 crores in the exports to Eastern Europe.

To give a fillip to the export of Indian films, a Corporation called the Indian Motion Pictures Export Corporation has been set up. The Corporation proposes to enlist the support of 10 to 15 top class producers of films with whom it is proposed to conclude agreements for the acquisition of rights for exploitation of their productions in specified overseas territories. It

L. Increase In Dearness Allowance To Central Government Employees: The Central Government's decision to give dearness allowance to its employees earning basic salaries between Rs. 400 and Rs. 500 was announced in the Rajya Sabha on May 7.

Higher rates of dearness allowance for those drawing salaries less than Rs. 400 were also announced, the increase varying from Rs. 3.50 on salaries up to Rs. 109 a month to Rs. 20 on Rs. 400.

Nearly 2.3 million employees are expected to benefit by the increase, which is expected to cost the exchequer nearly Rs. 14 crores annually.

The new rates were announced in terms of the recommendations of the Second Pay Commission, the average of the Working Class Consumer Price Index for 12 months having reached 135 in January, 1964.

The new rates of dearness allowance are as follows:

Rs. 20.50 for pay up to Rs. 109; Rs. 25.50 for pay in the slab Rs. 110 to Rs. 149; Rs. 42 for the slab Rs. 150 to Rs. 209; Rs. 50 for the slab Rs. 210 to Rs. 299; Rs. 35 for the slab Rs. 316 to Rs. 384; and Rs. 20 for the slab Rs. 400 to Rs. 580 (with marginal adjustments for pay slabs Rs. 300 to Rs. 315, Rs. 385 to Rs. 399 and Rs. 581 to Rs. 600).

The new rates will take retrospective effect from February 1.

Another major concession announced on May 7 was the further liberalization of the educational allowance scheme for Central employees.

For Central Government employees drawing salaries up to Rs. 600 a month it was decided that "the tuition fees payable and actually paid in middle and higher secondary schools should be reimbursed at rates not exceeding those approved by the State Government of the area for Government and aided schools".

The new concession, which in effect makes education of children of Central Government employees earning up to Rs. 600 a month free up to the higher secondary stage, is expected to cost Rs. 4.3 crores a year.

M. Anti-Corruption Drive: A non-official drive to root out corruption was launched in New Delhi on May 5 by the Central Home Minister, Mr. G. L. Nanda.

The Sanyukta Sadachar Samiti, which has assigned to itself the task of receiving and screening public grievances of delays and denial of justice before passing on suitable cases to the authorities for necessary action, will also take suitable measures for improving the social climate by laying emphasis on ethical standards and spiritual aims.

Mr. Nanda said the Samiti had been brought into being as an answer to a challenge. There was extreme annoyance and resentment among the people that through corrupt practices large sections of businessmen created for themselves numerous opportunities for profiteering and that their incomes thus swelled at the expense of the common man. The people had also come to look upon certain classes of officials as symbols of Governmental authority which was often being exercised to fleece and harass them. Quite a few of those who wielded political power and functioned in high places came in for adverse criticism. Prevalence of corruption was being accepted as an obvious reality.

Everywhere there were lamentations that failure to maintain standards of integrity was affecting the vitality of the nation. The worst feature of the situation, however, was that people were developing a sense of despair and despondency.

Very often the picture of corruption was overdrawn. In fact corruption was not more prevalent in India than in other countries. "There are many Government servants whose career is free from any taint of corruption. It is not true that every businessman has recourse to dishonest ways. And it is demoralising for the nation, that because of the lapses of a few, sweeping statements should be made about persons in political life generally."

Still the fact remained that a climate of lack of confidence existed. People had come to believe that corruption had made inroads into many walks of life. The report of the committee on prevention of corruption headed by Mr. K. Santhanam had disclosed a disturbing situation (see page 5790).

"It is a disquieting picture which spells out the enormous waste of public funds and gives us a measure of the nation's loss in terms of public welfare and economic advance. Of much greater consequence, however, is the loss of faith in our institutions and the growing discontent which these conditions are giving rise to. If the confidence of the people in a social system is undermined, their enthusiasm will dry up and any call for hard work and sacrifice will not be heeded. Their full co-operation in the nation's programmes will not be forthcoming. This is what we are facing now."

The Samiti was intended to be a purely non-official and non-political body. It had been registered under the Societies Registration Act XXI of 1860 (Punjab Amendment) Act 1957 as extended to the Union Territory of Delhi and its central office has started functioning at Central Secretariat, New Delhi. It will have branches in the States and the Union Territories.

Members of the Samiti would be confined to those who under proper guidance took the following pledge: "I hereby take the pledge that I will not give or take a bribe and I will not be a party to the giving or taking of bribe in any form. I will render all assistance in the eradication of corruption."

The aims of the Sanyukta Sadachar Samiti had been set out in the following terms:

(1) To create a social and moral climate which will foster moral values and ethical living and discourage anti-social attitudes and corrupt practices.

(2) To develop the will and capacity of the people to fight and eradicate corruption in all forms.

(3) To mobilize the strength and resources of social and religious organizations in the country for this purpose.

(4) To launch an intensive and widespread campaign in the country for moral awakening and social enlightenment.

(5) To apply moral and social sanctions for counteracting corrupt tendencies and dishonest dealings.

(6) To assist in redressing people's grievances relating to corruption and set up a suitable machinery for this purpose.

(7) To make arrangements for study and research on the problems connected with corruption.

(8) To publish suitable literature and carry on propaganda for eliminating corruption; and

(9) To enlist and train a large force of active workers.

N. Industrial Development Bank Set Up: The Lok Sabha adopted on April 30 a Bill to establish a bank for providing credit and other facilities for the development of industry in the public and private sectors.

The Central Finance Minister, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari, who piloted the measure, explained that arrangements for financing industrial enterprises were quite inadequate in relation to the prospective growth of the economy or the demand for capital for new enterprises or for the modernization or expansion of existing undertakings.

The specialized agencies like the Industrial Finance Corporation, ICICI, the Refinance Corporation for Industry and the National Industrial Development Corporation had disbursed less than Rs. 200 crores which was by no means sufficient for realising the targets of industrial production or growth in the current and succeeding Plans.

Illustrating the gap between the demand for and supply of industrial credit, he said the investment on industrial and mineral development in the Third Plan was expected to be about Rs. 1,800 crores in the public sector and Rs. 1,335 crores in the private sector, including about Rs. 150 crores for modernization of plant, particularly in the jute and cotton textile industries.

In view of the increased costs and prices, these estimates had already turned out to be incorrect. The outlay in the public sector would now have to be about Rs. 500 crores more if the physical targets were to be achieved. There might be a proportionate or even greater increase in the capital outlays in the private sector.

Apart from the fact that the estimates indicated the existence of a real gap, it was common knowledge now that in certain vital and strategic sectors, industrial development had been stagnant and unsatisfactory.

The existing institutions were clearly not well equipped and perhaps not intended to carry the additional burden of financing industrial expansion or growth in these or in several other directions.

The industrial development bank was envisaged as a central co-ordinating agency, which ultimately would be concerned, directly or indirectly, with all problems or questions relating to the long and medium-term financing of industry and would be in a position, if necessary, to adopt and enforce a system of priorities in promoting future industrial growth.

The new institution would have an authorised capital of Rs. 50 crores, which might, if necessary, be increased to Rs. 100 crores. It would have much greater freedom in regard to its policies or day-to-day operations than the existing industrial financial agencies. It would be in a position to supplement the capital or other resources of the existing agencies, to refinance their loans, to grant direct loans to specified projects and to finance the export of capital goods by the new engineering or other industries.

The industrial development bank, apart from discharging any or all these functions, as circumstances might require, would be in a position to undertake special investigations for proving the commercial feasibility of any important proposals. It would be able to help in providing technical assistance to various authorities or undertakings interested in industrial development.

It was proposed to establish, by amending the Reserve Bank of India Act suitably for this purpose, an industrial credit (long-term operations) fund. This new fund, like the national agricultural credit (long-term operations) fund, which the House authorised and accepted in 1955, would be created on the books of the Reserve Bank of India and fed by allocations from out of the annual profits of the Reserve Bank. The fund was intended to be used for supplementing the resources which the industrial development bank might be able to raise in the normal course, for financing the activities of the established agencies which were concerned with the provision of industrial credit, and, to the extent necessary, for financing the development bank's own programmes.

In addition, a development assistance fund was also proposed to be created. This fund would be credited from time to time with amounts which might be allocated for this purpose by the Central Government. But it would be placed at the disposal of the industrial development bank, and would be used by that bank for financing certain essential industries, which, on purely commercial considerations or in the light of the standards or criteria which were normally adopted by credit institutions, might not be able to obtain any financial assistance. "We are hoping, through the creation of the development assistance fund, to bring into existence over a period of years a number of enterprises which may be of vital or strategic importance to the country, but which an ordinary banker or a commercial institution, interested only in increasing or maximising profits, may not be willing, or may not be able, to finance."

O. IAC And Air-India Budgets For 1964-65: According to their Budget estimates, Indian Airlines Corporation (IAC) expects to make a profit of Rs. 65,10,000 in 1964-65 and Air-India Rs. 3.75 crores.

The Budget estimates of the two Corporations were placed on the table of the Rajya Sabha on May 7.

According to the revised estimates for 1963-64, IAC will make a profit of Rs. 33,50,000 against the originally estimated loss of Rs. 74,46,000.

Air-India's profit for 1963-64 is now estimated at Rs. 3.45 crores against the earlier Budget estimate of Rs. 2.78 crores.

During 1964-65 both Corporations expect to increase their traffic revenue by about Rs. 3 crores each.

During question hour the Deputy Minister for Transport, Mr. Ahmed Mohiuddin, disagreed with Mr. A. M. Tariq that Boeing aircraft gave IAC more profit than Caravelles.

He said both were showing profits and there could be no comparison between the two as they operated different services on different routes. Their capacity also differed.

He said that Caravelle operation showed a profit of Rs. 13,16,000 in February and Rs. 15,30,000 in March against Rs. 7,16,000 and Rs. 6,75,000 for Boeing operation during the same period.

The Minister of Transport, Mr. Raj Bahadur, said that the estimated operation cost per hour was Rs. 5,438.31 for a Caravelle and Rs. 10,616.98 for a Boeing.

Mr. Mohiuddin said that a total of 43 civil aircraft and eight gliders were involved in major accidents in 1961-63. Nine aircraft were destroyed in the accidents.

He said that 45 members of the crew and 42 passengers were killed in the accidents. The total loss to IAC was Rs. 7,58,000.

Investigation reports of air accidents in India and abroad were studied and the recommendations of the investigating officers examined and implemented as far as practicable.

P. Bhakra Right Bank Hydro-power Station To Be Expanded: The Bhakra right bank hydro-power station, which is being erected with Russian economic and technical assistance, is being further expanded by one unit of 120 mw.

A contract was signed in New Delhi on April 29 between the Punjab State Electricity Board and Technopromexport, a Russian organization, for the supply of the fifth unit of 120 mw capacity for this power station.

It will be financed out of the rouble credit given by Russia to India under the Agreement of February, 1961.

The contract also provides for Russian technical assistance in erecting the new unit and putting it into operation.

The installation of this unit will raise the installed capacity of the power station to 600 mw and will make it one of the biggest hydro-power stations in the country.

Q. General Insurance Business During 1962: The net premium income in India in all classes of general insurance business of Indian insurers increased to Rs. 26.54 crores in 1962 from Rs. 23.50 crores in 1961.

These figures were given in the Indian Insurance Year Book, 1963 recently published by the Controller of Insurance, Government of India.

In 1962, Rs. 8.51 crores were earned from fire insurance, Rs. 4.52 crores from marine insurance and Rs. 13.51 crores from miscellaneous insurance business. In the case of non-Indian insurers, the net premium income in India in all classes of general insurance business increased to Rs. 9.06 crores in 1962 from Rs. 8.44 crores in 1961. The non-Indian insurers earned in 1962, Rs. 3.74 crores from fire insurance, Rs. 2.15 crores from marine insurance and Rs. 3.17 crores from miscellaneous insurance business.

The net premium income outside India of Indian insurers, which was also higher in 1962 than in 1961, amounted to Rs. 17.47 crores in 1962 of which Rs. 8.14 crores related to fire, Rs. 3.11 crores to marine and Rs. 6.22 crores to miscellaneous insurance business.

The index number of general insurance business in India (base year 1956) recorded a rise of 11.2 in 1962 as against a rise of 15.3 in 1961.

The Year Book showed that on December 31, 1963, there were 142 insurers registered under the Insurance Act, 1938, for transacting one or more classes of general insurance business. Of these, 76 were Indian and 66 non-Indian.

Forty-five of the Indian and 40 of the non-Indian insurers were registered for all the three classes of general insurance business; nine Indian and 10 non-Indian insurers were registered for two of the three classes and the remaining, that is, 22 Indian and 16 non-Indian insurers were registered for only one class.

This excluded the Life Insurance Corporation of India which was registered for life, fire, marine and miscellaneous insurance business.

Of the Indian insurers, 23 having their registered office in Maharashtra State accounted for about 73 per cent of the total net premium income. About 70 per cent of the net premium income in India of non-Indian insurers went to 54 insurers constituted in Britain.

The net premium income in India of the five Indian non-tariff insurers transacting miscellaneous insurance business was 3.8 per cent of the net premium income in India of all Indian (tariff and non-tariff) insurers. The proportion for the one non-Indian non-tariff insurer was 0.1 per cent in fire insurance and 5.5 per cent in miscellaneous insurance business of all non-Indian insurers.

R. Cotton Production: According to the Indian Central Cotton Committee's annual report for 1963, India ranks fourth among the nations of the world in cotton production, although it has the largest acreage under cotton.

The United States, USSR and China produce more cotton than India with less acreage under the crop, according to the report, which was laid on the table of the Lok Sabha on May 5.

The reason for lower production in India was the lower yield per acre in the country.

In 1962-63, the area under cotton in India was 19,074.00 acres and the total production was 53,12,000 bales. The yield was 115 lbs. per acre in India, compared to 249 in China, 457 in USA, 543 in USSR, 555 in Mexico and 586 in Egypt.

The yield per acre in India increased by 22 per cent during the Second Five-Year Plan period. Attempts were being made to further improve yields through intensive cultivation measures.

After conserving supplies to meet internal demand, 330,000 bales of cotton were allowed to be exported during the year. Japan remained the largest single buyer of Indian cotton.

India, however, imported during the year long staple cotton totalling 861,000 bales—mainly from USA and Africa.

S. Kathara Coal Washery Opened: The Bihar Chief Minister, Mr. K. B. Sahay, on May 9 laid the foundation stone of the Kathara coal washery of the National Coal Development Corporation (NCDC) at Kathara, near Hazaribagh. It is the biggest coal washery in India.

Mr. P. C. Sethi, Central Deputy Minister for Steel, Mines and Heavy Engineering, presided. Mr. Siloulanev, Economic Counsellor to the Embassy of USSR, also attended the ceremony.

The washery is being set up with Soviet collaboration at a cost of Rs. 8.05 crores. It will have a capacity of three million tonnes of coal annually and is expected to be commissioned by the end of the Third Five-Year Plan.

The project will be financed out of the 112.5 million roubles Soviet credit under an Agreement signed in February, 1961.

The annual output of the washery will be about 1.5 million tonnes of clean coal, which will be used in Bokaro, Bhilai and Rourkela Steel Plants. It will also produce about 1.5 million tonnes of middlings per year with an ash and moisture content of about 50 per cent to be used by Patratu and Chandrapura power stations.

The washery is the second of three new washeries to be opened by NCDC during the Third Plan. The first is being set up with Polish collaboration. The second is at Kathara and the third is being set up at Sawang, Hazaribagh district. NCDC has at present only one washery in production at Kargali in this area, which is undergoing expansion.

T. United Socialist Party In UP Legislature Dissolved: The United Socialist Party in the UP Legislature on May 7 went out of existence with the Speaker's announcement in the Assembly that its three members, Mr. Shibban Lal Saksena, Mr. Narsingh Narain Pande and Mr. Duryodhan Prasad, had joined the Congress.

The induction of Mr. Pande into the Congress—he was the author of the charge of a Minister and some Socialists being involved in a ganja smuggling racket in Gorakhpur district—led to protests by Socialist members later in the day.

Mr. Ugra Sen, Mr. Radhey Shyam and Mr. K. N. Misra raised the question how the Minister and Mr. Pande could sit together on the same benches while the House was discussing other matters. They said the Congress should keep either Mr. Pande or the Minister, but not both together. In any case, the House should be told what had happened to the ganja racket inquiry.

The Deputy Speaker closed the matter by saying that the Chief Minister, who was concerned with the inquiry, was not present in the House.

U. Tourist Traffic During 1963: Tourist traffic to India registered an all-round increase during 1963.

With the exception of Latin America, Africa and Asia all parts of the world sent a large number of tourists to India.

Americans came in larger numbers than before and constituted the single largest group in the tourist traffic, accounting for 27.6 per cent of the total arrivals against 24.7 per cent in the previous year.

Canada too registered a big increase and together the two North American countries accounted for 29.2 per cent of the tourist traffic in 1963.

Western Europe contributed a little over this figure, namely, 29.9 per cent. The total of 42,121 for this region in 1963 represents an 11.6 per cent increase over the previous year's figure. Fifty-five per cent of the West European tourists came from Britain.

Europe generally improved its performance, the following being the percentage increases: France 31, West Germany 49, Italy 12.6, Austria 35, Belgium 10.2, Denmark 11.5, Netherlands 12.9, and Switzerland 16.6.

Eastern Europe too did better than in 1962, the total for the region being 6.6 per cent higher.

Though the number of tourists from Africa and West and East Asia has generally been declining, Japan, Korea and Hong Kong have sent larger numbers, as also Australia, New Zealand and Fiji.

A. Dr. R. Subandrio On Inflation Effects: The Foreign Minister, Dr. R. Subandrio, told Parliament on April 27 that the country was suffering from extraordinary inflation following the West Irian dispute with Holland.

He said that money in circulation at the end of March totalled 288,000 million rupiahs (about £2,290 million at official exchange rate) compared with 136,000 million rupiahs (about £1,080 million) in December, 1963.

He also said that gold and foreign reserves had dropped, foreign debts were rising, exports had fallen, and the country faced production, export and transportation difficulties.

He said the reason for inflation was that $400 million in anticipated foreign aid to bolster Indonesia's economy had not arrived.

Despite these ills, he maintained that Indonesia's confrontation with Malaysia was a blessing in disguise because it enabled her to be rid of Singapore's economic domination.

A. Move For Ratification Of ILO Convention: The House of Representatives approved on April 23 establishment of a special inter-party committee intended to accelerate ratification by the Diet of the ILO Convention.

Four related labour laws need revision to satisfy the requirements of the Convention's guarantee to labour of freedom of association.

The issue is highly contentious between the ruling Liberal Democrats, some of whom oppose such freedom, and the Left and the unions.

One factor which it is assumed may speed things up is the expected loss of face if an ILO mission arrives to find the Convention still unratified. Many newspapers fear that the world will consider it as "exposing the immature state" of labour-management relations and likely to harm Japan's foreign trade.

Japan has agreed to receive an ILO fact-finding mission next Autumn.

B. Boom In Shipbuilding Industry: Japan is breaking all records in shipbuilding output with a total of 2,201,000 tons of merchant shipping under construction, according to Lloyd's Register of Shipping.

This is nearly 60,000 tons more than her previous record in September, 1963 and compares with a current British total of 1,606,000 tons.

More telling than the amount of shipping on the stocks, though, is the industry's throughput as measured by new ships started and launched. In the first three months of the year Japan laid down the remarkable total of 202 new ships of 1,194,000 tons. The equivalent British total —itself above the recent average—was 58 ships of 379,000 tons. Tonnage launched in Japan was 840,000 tons: in Britain 186,000 tons. West Germany started 320,000 tons and launched 188,000 tons. Sweden started 238,000 tons and launched 200,000.

Meanwhile, the Government is paying considerable attention to the shipping industry because of the delicate balance of international payments position. Shipping accounts, in particular, have been showing increasing deficits every year.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Hayato Ikeda, himself, is taking considerable interest in this problem and, under his directions, the Government has now raised the shipbuilding goal for fiscal 1964 from the previous 640,000 gross tons to one million gross tons.

Simultaneously, shipping leaders have been asked to expand their fleets and the Government has promised them help in this to the maximum extent possible. Mr. Ikeda is keen that shipbuilding circles should co-operate in expanding Japan's own shipping fleet in addition to constructing ships for exports.

Shipbuilding yards are at present witnessing an unprecedented export boom and have sufficient orders from abroad to keep them busy for three years.

Ninety-seven shipping lines, which carry freight to and fro from foreign countries, were re-organized recently into six groups under the Law for Reconstruction and Adjustment of Shipping. This law lays down that in future only shipping lines operating vessels totalling one million gross tons or more may receive long-term, low-interest loans from the Japan Development Bank, in which the Government is investing.

Japanese shipping enterprises lost virtually all their ocean-going vessels in the last War and received no State compensation for their losses. However, they managed to build new vessels and continue operations with loans from the Japan Development Bank. This has resulted in serious financial difficulties for these lines The companies are hard pressed to repay accumulated interest on loans from the Government and commercial banks.

Japan's fleet totalled 5.6 million gross tons in 1939. In 1962, it had risen to 8.87 million tons.

In the past, the Government had on several occasions taken measures to defer payment of interest on loans. Despite this assistance, the Japanese shipping industry is experiencing depressed business conditions, even 18 years after the end of the War, while other industries have grown at an amazing speed. Interestingly, the volume of international trade has expanded rapidly during these years.

Before the last War, Japan's merchant fleet not only brought in foreign currency, but also helped to a considerable extent in keeping the nation's balance of international payments in the black. The position is now reversed and shipping revenues and expenditures are responsible in no small measure for the deterioration of the balance of international payments position.

Despite the fact that the total trade volume is expanding yearly and keeping pace with the nation's fast rate of economic growth, deficits are accumulating in shipping accounts. This is because the expansion rate of ocean-going ships cannot match the growth of trade.

Imports too are constantly going up because of Japan's growing dependence on foreign raw materials. As a result, payments exceeded receipts by $212 million in freightage and $216 million in port charges in fiscal 1963 resulting in a deficit of $428 million.

It is estimated that these deficits will increase by about $100 million a year so long as the expansion of Japan's fleet maintains the current rate of increase, namely, 800,000 gross tons a year. It is feared that at this rate the nation's shipping account will show a deficit of $650 million in fiscal 1967.

According to a report by the Ministry of Transportation, in order that Japan should eliminate the deficits by 1967, a total of 10.8 million gross tons of ship bottoms must be built during the next four years or at the rate of 2.7 million tons a year.

Such a programme, however, is virtually impossible and so the Transportation Ministry wants to set aside the question of rectifying the imbalance in harbour service receipts and payments for a while, and, instead, concentrate on wiping out the deficits from the international freightage account by fiscal 1967.

Specifically, the Ministry estimates that 5.36 million gross tons of shipping bottoms will have to be built by the middle of 1967 if the freightage account is to be balanced as a whole. Further, the Ministry estimates that a total of 323,500 million yen will have to be invested in the Plan in order to achieve this objective.

In 1962, Japanese freighters shipped 52.4 per cent and 45.6 per cent respectively of the nation's total annual exports and imports. The Ministry expects that the four-year plan for building the Japanese fleet, when completed in 1967, should bring these two percentages to 61 and 72 respectively.

Many believe that this is aiming very high, but there is also the feeling that the objective is not completely beyond the possibility of achievement.

C. Chinese Offer To Sell Rice: China, disregarding her own famine conditions, has made a firm offer of 1,00,000 tons of rice to Japan at the rate of £48 per ton which Japanese traders consider cheaper than California rice.

Chinese-designated "friendly firms" in Japan have welcomed the offer.

Tokyo sources thought that the Chinese move was political and was designed to prevent Japanese efforts to improve relations with Formosa.

The Chinese offer followed reports of Formosan willingness to resume rice supply to Japan.

Japanese Government sources said that any consideration of the Chinese offer would irritate Formosa again. However, a senior Japanese Minister, who visited the Communist Chinese trade fair in Tokyo publicly said he was so impressed by Chinese foodgrain exhibits that he would prefer purchase of maize from China.

Meanwhile, Japan's top banker, Mr. Yoshizane Iwasa, who recently led a mission of Japanese bankers and industrialists to USA, warned that Americans considered trading with China as helping a militant nation. He said that USA was "deadly" opposed to Japan extending China long-term credits and deferred payment supplies.

D. Pacific Road Union Conference: The second Pacific Regional Conference of the International Road Union, an advisory body of United Nations, decided on April 25 to recommend to the Governments concerned to take necessary steps to improve sections of the proposed Asian highway system falling within their respective countries.

The Conference pointed out that in addition to local resources those from United Nations and other international organizations were available for this purpose.

Discussions at the Conference, which ended in Tokyo on April 26, focussed on the economic and social benefits that would accrue to the entire area traversed by the proposed highway.

The resolution adopted at the closing session pointed out that the highway from Tehran to Singapore and Saigon would serve an area of 2½ million square miles with a population of over 600 million. An all-weather highway linking these countries would "substantially contribute to the economic and social development of the localities, the nations and the entire international region."

Of the 7,000 miles of the highway, only 300 miles are still unmotorable and the resolution particularly recommended to the Governments concerned to complete these sections. These sections are for the most part in East Pakistan and Burma.

The Conference also called for drafting a comprehensive road construction programme to be carried out over the next 20 years and urged the adoption of international road signs throughout Asia.

A. Abortive "Coup d'etat" By Rightist Forces: A Right-wing army group seized power in Vientiane on April 19.

The coup, led by Gen. Kouprasith Abhay, proved abortive. No foreign Power supported it and the King denounced its leaders.

It set up a Revolutionary Committee of the National Army, which turned out to be ineffective.

The Right-wing leader in the coalition Government, General Phoumi Nosavan, was not included in the Revolutionary Committee.

Vientiane's radio station, which was occupied by coup members, broadcast a series of communiques on April 19.

The first communique said: "The National Army advises the population that as of 4 a.m. (local time). April 19, the National Army took in hand the powers held up to now by the Government of National Union (headed by Prince Souvanna Phouma). Calm prevails in Vientiane as well as throughout the Laotian territory."

Another communique said: "The Revolutionary Committee rose with success and took over the country. They ask the foreigners to remain calm and to restrict their travel to routine duties."

A further communique said that the breakdown of the "summit" peace talks at the Plain of Jars between Prince Souvanna Phouma and the Pathet Lao leader, Prince Souphanouvong (see page 5841) was one of the causes that prompted the officers to stage the coup ..

[Laos, beset by civil war for more than 10 years, gained independence within the French Union in 1949. In 1954, after a year of internal strife, a nine-nation Conference at Geneva agreed on methods to end hostilities and the country's independence was recognized. But the troubles continued until 1957 when Prince Souvanna Phouma included the Communists in a neutralist government. This government collapsed in 1953 when the premiership was taken over by Phouv Sananikane. In June, 1960, a Right-wing government took office, but two months later this was brought down by a coup and replaced by another neutralist government. By December, this government was driven from the capital, Vientiane, and the civil war went on. In 1962 the Geneva Conference, under the co-Chairmanship of Britain and Russia, agreed to guarantee the neutrality of Laos. An International Truce Supervisory Commission of India, Canada and Poland was set up to supervise a cease-fire. Prince Souvanna Phouma, (63), Prime Minister of Laos since 1962, has held the post four times. Son of the late King Sisavang Vong, he was educated in France and worked as an engineer for some years. He was Premier from 1951 to 1954. He became Premier again in 1956, but a coalition Government of neutralist, Right and Left-wing factions collapsed and he became Ambassador to France. Right-wingers ruled the Government until a coup in 1960 led by paratroop Captain (now General) Kong Lae brought back Prince Souvanna Phouma as Premier of another coalition.]

The latest coup was strongly condemned by the Soviet Union.

The British Government announced on April 19 that it regarded the seizure of power by the Revolutionary Committee in Vientiane as contrary to the spirit of the 1962 Geneva Agreements on Laos.

A British Foreign Office statement said that as co-Chairman of the Geneva Conference, Mr. R. A. Butler, British Foreign Secretary, would consult other Governments principally concerned.

The US State Department said that USA was "categorically opposed" to a seizure of power in Laos.

A statement on the reported coup said: "We are maintaining a close watch on the developments and are in touch with our Embassy there. The US Government has fully supported, and continues fully to support, the Geneva Agreements of 1962 and the Royal Government of National Union.

"We are therefore categorically opposed to any seizure of power and are urging immediate release of the Neutralists as a first step towards restoring the situation."

A French Foreign Office spokesman said the French Government considered it essential to restore the authority of the National Union Government in Laos in the interests of the Laotian people and for the maintenance of peace in that area.

The spokesman said the Government strongly deplored the events which took place in Vientiane and which appeared to have been the work of the Revolutionary Military Committee seeking to take the place of the National Union Government.

He said the arrest of the Premier, Prince Souvanna Phouma, was received with surprise.

Prince Souvanna Phouma's secretariat in Paris issued a statement calling on the major world Powers to secure the Laotian Prince's liberation.

The statement said: "It is necessary that all the great world Powers, like the United States, Great Britain, the Soviet Union and France, should obtain the liberation of Prince Souvanna Phouma who is at present unable to speak freely, and that they should renew confidence in him, backing him against all extremist factions."

The Indian Premier, Mr. J. Nehru sent a message to Prince Souvanna Phouma, expressing the hope "that the present difficulties will disappear and that you will continue to lead the Laotian Government and people to a full realisation of the objectives embodied in the Geneva declarations with the assistance of the International Commission as envisaged in the Geneva Agreement".

In the course of his message, he said "the maintenance of peace and stability in Laos is of paramount importance in the context of peace in Indo-China and indeed in the whole of South-East Asia".

He re-iterated that the neutrality of Laos, which is a product of the Geneva Conference, "offered the best guarantee for peace and preservation of the independence and territorial integrity of Laos."

In the face of mounting domestic and international pressure the coup leaders had to restore the reins of administration to Prince Souvanna Phouma whom they had placed under house arrest.

On April 23 Western Powers and the Soviet Union appealed to King Savang Vatthana to preserve the coalition Government headed by the neutralist Prince Souvanna Phouma.

Envoys of USA, Britain, France, the Soviet Union, India, and Australia flew to Luang Prabang, the royal capital, to lodge an appeal with the King. They insisted on preservation of the 1962 Geneva Agreement which merged the warring Right-wing, neutralist, and Pathet Lao factions into a coalition Government.

It was understood that the envoys were told by the King that he had condemned the coup d'etat and that Prince Souvanna Phouma would remain Prime Minister. Prince Souvanna Phouma indicated to the envoys that he intended to stay in Luang Prabang for several days.

On April 24 Prince Souvanna Phouma announced that he and his Cabinet had accepted the conditions laid down by the Revolutionary Committee for a settlement of the Laos crisis.

However, General Siho Lanphouthakoul of the Revolutionary Committee, told newsmen that Prince Souvanna's Government would not exercise normal power until it fulfilled the conditions of the Revolutionary Committee.

General Kouprasith Abhay said the Revolutionary junta was prepared to return control to neutralist Premier Souvanna Phouma if he met certain conditions:

(1) The Government of National Union continues to exercise its functions.

(2) That Prince Souvanna, "in consideration of foreign policy," will alter and enlarge his Government "in conformity with the present situation."

(3) That the Revolutionary Committee proposes and recommends that "qualified personalities" be taken into the Government and at the same time the Committee will "follow and observe closely the execution of the Governmental tasks until the final goal is attained."

The Pathet Lao leaders demanded a "summit" meeting of the leaders of the three Laotian factions—the Pathet Lao, the neutralists and the Rightists.

At the same time it refused to recognize the Revolutionary Committee, and said it opposed any change in the tripartite coalition Government headed by Prince Souvanna Phouma.

In a communique the Pathet Lao said it considered "that the Coalition Government still exists" and that it "cannot recognize any Government or ministerial changes or acts resulting from the coup d'etat staged by Rightist elements".

The Pathet Lao leader, Prince Souphanouvong, on April 30 warned that he "might unleash generalized military operations as of May 9," if Prince Souvanna Phouma co-operated with the Revolutionary Committee.

Prince Souvanna Phouma accepted an invitation from Prince Souphanouvong to go to the Pathet Lao stronghold of Khangkhay on May 5.

In a communique released to the Press, Prince Souvanna Phouma announced that he had "decided to continue his efforts to restore peace and concord" to Laos and that this decision had the full support of Gen. Phoumi Nosavan, leader of the Right-wing faction.

He appealed to all the eight Laotian Ministers, who had taken refuge abroad, to return to Vientiane immediately. (The four Pathet Lao Ministers in this group and several others had called this return impossible for security reasons.)

Talks With Pathet Lao Leaders:

On May 4, Prince Souvanna Phouma visited Khangkhay and conferred with Pathet Lao leaders.

He was accompanied by the British and Soviet Charge d'Affaires representing the two Chairmen of the Geneva Conference, representatives of the International Truce Supervisory Commission, the French Ambassador, Mr. Pierre Millet, and the First Counsellor, Mr. Michel Cadol, as well as the Australian Ambassador.

Later, the Prince said: "I saw Prince Souphanouvong and Phoumi Vongvichit, President of the Neo Lao Haksat and Secretary of the Central Committee. I explained the changes in the political situation in Vientiane and the solutions I envisaged to solve the crisis.

"I asked them to consider these proposals. They agreed. The proposals will be considered. I shall return to Khangkhay in three or four days.

"The atmosphere was very friendly. I hope the next meeting will yield more concrete results."

General Kong Lae, Commander of Laotian neutralist forces, regards the situation in the Plain of Jars, where fighting flared up between neutralists and Pathet Lao forces after the abortive coup in Vientiane, as "serious."

He told a correspondent at his headquarters in Muong Phanh that he expected increased attack by Pathet Lao forces. He said they would advance because "they want to take Vientiane eventually."

His troops were getting supplies direct from the Americans. Their morale was high and they had arms and ammunition but not enough food. "We have the ideals but not enough support from foreign countries. The Pathet Lao have everything they want from North Viet-Nam and China. We cannot stop the war. The Laotians themselves cannot stop the war. We will be fighting the rest of our lives."

MALAYSIA

A. Alliance Victory In Elections: The Alliance Government headed by Tengku Abdul Rehman won its third General Election in Malaya with a resounding victory on April 25.

It was generally accepted that the verdict confirmed that universal opinion was against Indonesia's confrontation policy and that the confederation of Malaya, Singapore, Sarawak, and Sabah was a strong anti-communist bloc in South-East Asia.

The Tengku said that the victory had been momentous and that "it has given us very much courage to face our enemies with confidence. I pray that Malaysia will continue to flourish and prosper in peace. To hell with Sukarno."

All the 13 Malayan Ministers were returned, all with increased majorities. There were 276 candidates for the 104 parliamentary seats and 765 for the 11 Assemblies in the states in Malaya. The Alliance Party composed of the United Malays National Organization, the Malayan Chinese Association, and the Malayan Indian Congress, won two parliamentary seats and four state seats without opposition on nomination day.

The Tengku in a straight fight with a member of the theocratic Pan-Malayan Islamic Party, polled 17,109 votes and had a majority of 11,647.

The Alliance Party put up candidates for all the 104 Parliamentary seats and won 89 of them (with the two walk-overs). The results, with the number of seats contested by each party in parentheses, were:

Alliance (104)	89
Socialist Front (63)	2
Pan-Malayan Islamic Party (53)	9
United Democratic Party (27)	1
People's Progressive Party (8)	2
People's Action Party (9)	1

Most of the country's 2,700,000 voters went to the polling stations. Booths were erected on the rubber estates to enable the tappers to vote.

With 36 seats already in his possession in Sabah and Sarawak, the Tengku has 125 seats in the 150-member Malaysian Federal Parliament. He told newsmen that the two problems to be dealt with immediately were the presence of terrorists on Malaysian soil and the menace of subversion.

He also said that his first job would be to appoint a new Minister to look after affairs in the Borneo states. The Malayan vote had given him added strength to counter Indonesia.

Before the poll, he said the new Government's first task would be drawing up legislation to deal with Indonesian and Indonesian-supported guerrillas now fighting Malaysian and British troops in Malaysian Borneo.

It is expected that these laws will be along the lines of those in force during the 12-year Communist rebellion in Malaya, which ended in August, 1960.

Apart from the capture of new seats for the Government, a feature of the elections was the vastly-increased majorities for sitting members of the Tengku's coalition.

The Left-wing Socialist Front took the worst beating, its federal representation dropping from eight to two. Both its chairman, Mr. Ahmad Boestamam—a political prisoner for the last one year—and its Secretary-General, Mr. V. David, were defeated.

The Socialist Front and the conservative Pan-Malayan Islamic Party, (PMIP) whose representation dropped from 13 to nine, oppose the idea of Malaysia and the Tengku's Western-inclined defence, foreign and economic policies.

The Singapore People's Action Party (PAP), which has ruled Singapore for the past five years and was making its first appearance in Malaya with a token nine candidates, surprised many observers by getting only one member elected. But since the PAP already has 12 Singapore seats in the Federal Parliament, this still leaves it the biggest single opposition group in the House.

Of an electorate of more than 2,750,000, 2,100,000 went to the polls. Fifty-seven per cent voted for the alliance coalition, an increase of five per cent on the last General Election.

In simultaneous elections for the Assemblies of the 11 States of the Malayan peninsula, the Alliance won control of all except Kelantan, which remained in the hands of the PMIP.

B. Document On Alleged Indonesian Plot: The Government on April 23 accused Indonesia of training saboteurs and supplying them with arms and explosive to try to overthrow the democratically elected Governments of Malaysia—Malaya, Singapore, Sarawak and Sabah.*

An official document said that guerrillas trained in Indonesia planned to assassinate Tengku Abdul Rehman, the Malaysian Prime Minister, and Tun Abdul Razak, his deputy. Mr. Lee Kuan Yew, the Prime Minister of Singapore, was also on the assassination list.

The report said that under a screen of diplomatic privilege Indonesian officials had assisted political parties which were working for the incorporation of Malaysia into a greater Indonesia. It accused Brigadier Djatikusumo, who arrived in Singapore in November, 1958 as the Indonesian Consul-General, of having ordered his staff to collect information about the strength of the armed forces in the Island.

Indonesian agents, it said, had been encouraged by consular officials to find jobs in service establishments. There were plans to use volunteers who had returned from West Irian and those from Malaya who opposed the concept of Malaysia to build up an Indonesian fifth column.

There were also, the document said, plans to:

(1) Organize training for them in sabotage and subversion;

(1) Build up a number of encircling front-line bases in the Riau islands and Sumatra, overlooking Singapore and Malaya on which stores of explosives could be accumulated and from which attacks could be launched;

(3) Organize bogus commercial shipping companies as communications links with Singapore and employment agencies for agents;

(4) Place agents in Singapore and Malaya to penetrate defence secrets, to attack public utilities with explosives and to create alarm by sporadic explosions; and

(5) Prepare for a naval landing in Singapore and Malaya.

The agents were urged to join Army units stationed near the coast to find suitable landing places. The statement asserted that arms were to be supplied to secret groups in Malaya by the Indonesian Consulate-General and were to be stored in fish traps. Other weapons were to be captured from the police and military arsenals. Funds were allotted by the Indonesian Government through the Embassy in Kuala Lumpur.

Indonesia, it was stated, intended to intrude militarily into Sarawak and Sabah and to try to land military groups in Singapore and Malaya to link up with the fifth column. Agents were to try to penetrate local political and other organizations to subvert them to overthrow the Government.

The document said that an important task of the agents was to sabotage and destroy important military installations and public utilities, to disrupt the economic life and administration as well as the defence of the country and to cause chaos and disorder.

British Condemnation:

The British Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations and the Colonies, Mr. Duncan Sandys, told the House of Commons on April 27 that Indonesian-inspired attempts at terrorism and sabotage in Malaya and Singapore, coupled with Indonesian activity in eastern Malaysia, had further strengthened British resolve to support Malaysia.

He had been asked if he would make a statement about fur her developments in the conflict between Indonesia and Malaysia affecting British co-operation in the defence of the Malaysian Federation.

He said that in the past fortnight Indonesian guerrillas had continued to ignore the cease-fire and had carried out hostile acts at more than a dozen places within Malaysian territory. Operations by the security forces to eliminate these intruders were being intensified. "The Malaysian authorities have reported further Indonesian-inspired attempts at terrorism and sabotage in Malaya and Singapore, where there have been 11 bomb explosions in recent weeks. All these developments further strengthen our resolve to support Malaysia in upholding her independence and territorial integrity."

Asked whether any fresh attempt was being made to secure a conciliation of the conflict, he replied: "There is nothing we would like better than to get a peaceful solution.

C. Consular Relations With Philippines: It was officially announced in Kuala Lumpur on May 3 that Malaysia and the Philippines had agreed to exchange consular representatives.

The Ministry of External Affairs said that in accordance with the agreement reached between Tengku Abdul Rehman, Prime Minister of Malaysia, and President D. Macapagal of the Philippines at Pnom Penh in February the Governments of Malaysia and the Philippines had agreed to set up consular establishments at Kuala Lumpur and Manila from May 18.

In Manila, a Philippine Government announcement said the opening of consular ties with Malaysia did not mean diplomatic recognition of the Federation.

It named Mr. Juan C. Dionisio, former Philippine Consul-General in Singapore, Consul in Kuala Lumpur.

PAKISTAN

SUMMARY: US Reaction To Sino-Pakistan Ties; Baluchi Tribesmen Clash With Army; President Ayub Khan's Appraisal Of Economy; PICIC Activities.

A. Growing Sino-Pakistan Ties—US Reaction: A despatch to The Hindustan Times revealed on May 2 that American displeasure at Pakistan's pro-Peking activities had been clearly conveyed to the Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto during his visit to Washington.

According to authoritative sources, Mr. Bhutto was told that Washington would take serious notice of any facility given to Peking that serves to give the impression that its militant policies are acceptable and may be successful.

This coincides with a high-level US policy decision to increasingly distinguish between Soviet and Chinese Communists. The blanket phrase "Communist bloc" will be discouraged; instead, official US spokesmen are to emphasize that they regard Peking's policies as a greater threat to peace than Moscow's.

Despite contrary opinions propagated by France and some sections of domestic opinion the Johnson Administration is making it clear that it has no intention of modifying the US policy of "forceful confrontation of Chinese expansionism."

It was pointed out to Mr. Bhutto that at a time when American soldiers are fighting and dying in Viet-Nam, the US Government cannot be expected to take kindly to an ally actively helping Peking to develop and improve its foreign relations. It was also pointed out that half-a-million American fighting men and the entire Seventh Fleet had been committed to defending the areas adjoining mainland China.

The firmer line being taken by USA with Pakistan was conveyed to Mr. Bhutto in many ways. He was with the US Secretary of State, Mr. Dean Rusk for over an hour the day Pakistan International Airlines inaugurated its service to Shanghai. Subsequently, US sources made it known that they feared that the new outlet would help Peking's campaign to ship propaganda materials abroad.

Although China is not within its area of direct concern, the CENTO Ministerial Council discussed Pakistan's relations with China at American initiative.

A US official contradicted Mr. Bhutto's explanation that Pakistani newsmen could not accept invitations to cover the CENTO meeting and exercises because of foreign exchange difficulties.

State Department officials who normally accompany a visiting dignitary were noticeably absent when Mr. Bhutto addressed the National Press Club. The tone and informed nature of questions put to him by several American newsmen indicated that they had been briefed in advance. He has had the most critical Press coverage that any Pakistani representative has yet had in USA.

The tough US stand with Mr. Bhutto has been influenced by reports that he has pushed Rawalpindi nearer Peking than President Ayub Khan and other moderate Pakistani leaders may have intended, and it is believed that if President Ayub Khan is convinced that Mr. Bhutto's policies involve the real risk of seriously damaging relations with USA, he may be persuaded to take remedial measures.

Pakistan's fund of popular US goodwill is also running low. This was not only indicated by newspaper coverage and comments but also the increasing number of critical speeches in Congress.

The latter has hurt the Johnson Administration because, critics are using the passive attitude by S-EATO's Asian members as a weapon to oppose increasing US involvement in Viet-Nam.

The previous week, Senator Gruening and Senator Morse drew attention to Pakistan's dubious role.

Senator Gruening said: "Details of Pakistan's refusal to play its part (in Viet-Nam) are interesting. Addressing the National Press Club, Mr. Bhutto stated that on the contrary Pakistan would pursue its programme of normalizing relations with Communist China and Russia despite its defensive alliance with USA.

"We may well ask just what value to USA is this defensive alliance. All it has done apparently is to cost Uncle Sam a lot of money and to have created dissatisfaction with the USA in India—another large-scale beneficiary of US aid.

"Pakistan is in Asia. India is in Asia. South Viet-Nam is in Asia. So if Pakistan is at odds with us on our Asia policy just what good is our defensive alliance with Pakistan and what results have come from our ladling out to Pakistan $1.5 billion?"

Next day Senator Morse said, "Few nations in the world have received as much money from the USA as has Pakistan. When the Foreign Aid Bill is reached this year Pakistan will be included in the amendment that I shall offer to bring to an end all foreign aid to alleged allies that are perfectly willing to take our money and then walk out on us.

"We have extended this money to Pakistan on the theory that Pakistan was an ally against Communist expansion in Asia. We could not have been more wrong. After the statements by her Foreign Minister we know that Pakistan is no such thing. Least of all has she any intention of drawing upon herself the disapproval of Communist China by supporting a US war effort in Viet-Nam."

Mr. M. Shoaib's Statement:

The Finance Minister, Mr. Mohammed Shoaib, told a news conference in Rawalpindi on May 2 that US aid to Pakistan had not slowed down during recent months because of what a newsman referred to as strains in the relations between the two countries.

Mr. Shoaib also expressed the hope that US contributions towards the Consortium loan would remain at the same level percentage-wise.

He hoped that commodity assistance from different countries, particularly from countries other than USA, would be much more substantial. It was in the interests of these countries to step up their commodity assistance lest Pakistan's import pattern might have to be directed towards USA.

[During the current year, Pakistan has already signed an Agreement with America for $100 million worth of commodity assistance and hopes to sign another Agreement. Similar assistance from other countries is around $10 million.]

Mr. Shoaib, however, expressed fear that the amount of soft loans that Pakistan might be able to get through the Consortium would decrease. He said West Germany did not have much money for such loans and the International Development Association had not yet received US quota of funds for such soft lending. If soft loans were going to be difficult to secure, Pakistan might have to secure loans at commercial rates from the World Bank.

(The Hindustan Times, New Delhi)

B. US Loan To Finance Commodity Imports: It was made known in Karachi on May 7 that a $100 million US loan to Pakistan to finance imports of commodities—chiefly iron and steel products—from USA had been authorized by the Agency for International Development (AID).

About $90 million of the loan proceeds will be for purchases of iron and steel, principally pig-iron, tinplate, billets and steel strip. All will be bought from United States producers.

The remaining $10 million is intended for imports of other commodities such a lubricants, medicines and pharmaceuticals, dyestuffs, machinery and automobile spare parts and tires. These also will be purchased in USA.

The imports are necessary for Pakistan's economic development under the nation's Second Five-Year Plan.

The new loan partially fulfils a pledge of $212.5 million made by USA for assistance to Pakistan in the current fiscal year. The US pledge is part of $430.2 million in aid committed for this period by nine 'free world' nations, the International Bank and the International Development Association, as members of a World Bank Consortium formed in 1961 to support Pakistan's development.

Under the AID Development Loan procedures, authorization of the loan will be followed by the negotiation of an Agreement setting forth the terms and conditions of the loan. After the loan agreement is signed and required conditions are met, funds from the loan will be made available to Pakistan for the commodity procurement.

About $90 million of the dollar exchange to be provided by the loan is expected to be used by private importers in Pakistan and $20 million by Government agencies.

The loan is repayable in dollars over a period of 40 years, including a 10-year grace period, with interest at 3/4 of one per cent during the grace period and two per cent during the remaining 30 years.

C. Baluchi Tribesmen Clash With Army: The Indian Press quoted the Kabul Times on April 27 that there was unrest in the frontier regions of West Pakistan (on the border with Afghanistan) and clashes had occurred between tribesmen and Pakistani soldiers.

In a report from "Southern Pakhtoonistan" the paper said that clashes between the Baluchi tribe and the Pakistani troops still continued. Pakistan soldiers consisting of regular troops, militia and police led by Col. Iqbal, were controlling these forces against the defenceless Baluchi tribes.

According to the report, Pakistani soldiers had opened fire on villages and mountain dwellings.

The report also referred to the arrests of a number of important tribal leaders for allegedly taking part in the recent armed clashes between Baluchi nationalists and Pakistani troops and for participating in the "freedom movement."

The Kabul Times, in a report from Bajawar said that recently a group of Utmankhail had fired on the Pakistani military camp of Monda, inflicting heavy losses.

A report from Momand said that at a large jirga of Utmanzai, Atokhail and another tribe held recently, tribal leaders had urged Pakistan to refrain from further interference in their affairs and to release all Pathan political prisoners.

Another report said that two contingents of Pakistan Army in civilian clothes and equipped with firearms had been brought to Jala Wan area with a view to surrounding the Baluchi tribesmen. "Pakistani planes zooming over the area bombed men in plainclothes unknowingly and inflicted heavy casualties amongst them."

A report in an earlier issue of Kabul Times said that Mr. Abdul Haq, a member of Opposition in the Pakistan Assembly, had disclosed in the Assembly that Pakistani planes had bombed a village in Kalat Nasser in Southern Baluchistan, resulting in injuries to 40 persons.

Mr. Abdul Haq had stated that although news about the bombing was kept secret by the Pakistani Government, he had evidence to prove that the bombing did take place.

D. Air Service Between Pakistan And Britain Via Moscow: The first through air service between Pakistan and Western Europe via Moscow opened on May 10.

The weekly service connects Karachi, Kabul, Moscow, Frankfurt and London. Other airlines' service from South Asia and from Western Europe terminate in Moscow.

The new service will provide the first direct connexion between the Soviet Union and West Germany.

E. President Ayub Khan's Appraisal Of Economy: In his first-of-the-month broadcast, President Ayub Khan disclosed on May 1 that the size of the Second Plan (Rs. 2,300 crores) would actually be exceeded by nearly Rs. 100 crores.

This was indicated in a preliminary evaluation report for the mid-Plan period prepared by the Planning Commission.

The President said the country would start the Third Plan with a reserve of nearly $1,000,000,000 in the pipeline. This was a tribute to those who saved and reinvested their incomes, to those who quietly paid the increasing taxes and to those who silently worked "with a rare sense of dedication and zeal" in formulating or executing the Plans.

He expressed gratification that the country was achieving this healthy rate of growth "with much more reliance on our own national effort than was ever thought possible." Not only the necessary domestic resources for the Second Plan would have been raised, but the target would be exceeded by Rs. 300 crores.

The economy today, he said, presented a healthy and cheerful contrast to the nearly bankrupt economy which the present Administration had taken over in October, 1958. He cited the following instances:

The national income had risen at a rate which was nearly double the rate of population growth.

During the current year, the national income was expected to rise by a further 6½ to 7 per cent. It was perhaps the highest rate of growth attained by any developing country at any time.

The country's exports were likely to exceed the Plan targets by about Rs. 200 crores, increasing at an annual rate of about 7 per cent as against only 2 per cent forecast in the Plan.

The country was now financing over 30 per cent of its development imports from its own foreign exchange, and would be spending about Rs. 100 crores annually on development from the same source.

He hoped that the proportion of the country's own foreign exchange expenditure would increase steadily "so that we can gradually relieve our friends of the necessity to continue to finance the same proportion of our development effort."

F. PICIC Activities During 1963: Addressing the sixth annual general meeting of the Pakistan Industrial Credit and Investment Corporation (PICIC) in Karachi on April 20, the Chairman of the Corporation, Mr. A. W. Adamjee, said that the Corporation during 1963 had sanctioned loans amounting to Rs. 17.49 crores for the establishment of 38 new industrial ventures and balancing and modernization of 27 existing units.

The total amount of loans sanctioned since the commencement of operations stood at Rs. 55.13 crores at the end of 1963. These loans, he added, covered 361 projects, all in the private sector, of which 158 had been completed by the end of 1963 and were in production.

He said that PICIC was conscious of the situation in East Pakistan and was doing its best to meet it. But, major efforts to stimulate the private sector in East Pakistan should come from the Government.

He said that disinvestment of profitable ventures of EPIDC, a larger association of private sector in new profitable projects of the EPIDC and association of private parties on the Board of Directors of the EPIDC were some of the measures which the Government might consider in this connexion.

He suggested the setting up of a separate local currency fund to provide for minority equity participations in small and medium sized projects in private sector. One of the important handicaps in such projects, particularly in East Pakistan, is that the private entrepreneurs are not able to put up the necessary equity to qualify for a loan from the financing institutions. The establishment of such a fund or agency could fill this gap, he said.

According to a PICIC Press release, the borrowing limit of the Corporation was increased to Rs. 60 crores outstanding at any one time, by adoption of an amendment to the Articles of Association of the Corporation.

Previously, PICIC's borrowing limit was restricted to three times its paid-up capital, reserves and Government loans to it. By the amendment now made, PICIC's borrowing powers are almost doubled. This was considered necessary to enable PICIC to raise more funds from abroad for meeting the country's growing requirements in the industrial sector.

By another amendment, the designation of the General Manager was changed to Managing Director.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. World-wide Assistance In Anti-Communist Operations—US Appeal: President Johnson of USA expressed the hope on April 23 that other nations would associate themselves with the effort to prevent the spread of communism in South Viet-Nam.

He did not specify what sort of assistance he was referring to, but Mr. Dean Rusk, the US Secretary of State, said on his return from Viet-Nam that military advisers from other countries would be welcomed in Saigon.

Mr. Johnson's remark was made at a news conference in the White House. He said activity in South Viet-Nam would be stepped up and he was hoping to gain efficiency and effectiveness from the recommendations made by Mr. Rusk and Mr. Robert McNamara, the Secretary of Defence.

Mr. Johnson said: "I would hope that we would see other flags there, other nations, as a result of the S-EATO meeting, and other conferences we have had and that we could all unite in an attempt to stop the spread of.... communism in that area of the world."

[There are already a number of British, Australian, and Malaysian military advisory groups in South Viet-Nam and other countries, such as Canada, and New Zealand, have given material assistance.]

Mr. Rusk said recently that the Philippines and the KMT Administration (Formosa) had offered fertilizer for use in the Spring planting season. He said he did not expect any South Viet-Nam request for combat troops from other nations.

A. New Exploding Star: A Hungarian astronomer said on March 17 that he had discovered a new supernova or exploding star in the Great Bear constellation.

Mr. Miklos Lovas, of the new North Hungarian Piszkestetoe observatory, told the Hungarian news agency, MTI, that an explosion of this nature occurred once every 300 years in a given galaxy or a cluster of stars.

The explosion, which occurred at a distance of 10 to 15 million light years from the Earth, was so bright that it was emitting more light than several billions of stars in the same galaxy put together.

The discovery of a new "supernova" is always hailed by astronomers, because comparatively little is known about the reason for stars to explode and increase their light output.

B. Fall In World Temperatures—US Scientists' View: A Washington report on March 29 said that the general drop in the world's temperature had been welcomed by a group of American scientists who see it as one hope of saving vast tracts of land from submersion by the sea.

The oceans around USA have been rising steadily, due to the melting of the Antarctic ice-cap, with the increase in the last 14 years being as much as nine inches.

The scientists belong to the US Coast and Geodetic Service, which has recorded the highest increase at Eugene Island, off the Louisiana coast in the Gulf of Mexico.

The heavily populated Atlantic coast of USA is also faced with this danger of inundation, the Coast and Geodetic Service reports. Sea-level increases along this coast since 1940 range from three inches at New York to six inches at Sandy Hook, New Jersey.

Admiral Arnold Karo, Director of the Service, says the rate of increase has diminished somewhat in the past few years but that there is no indication that sea levels will start to fall. "Ice in Antarctica and Greenland is melting. If it all melted, it would increase the sea level by several hundred feet—and of course we do not expected that, at least not for hundreds of years."

He hoped that the drop in world temperatures would slow down the melting process, though he warned that "a warning trend cannot be ruled out, and warmer weather will mean more melting ice and swollen oceans. By the turn of the century we might have a problem on our hands."

Another ray of hope is that nature is already redressing the imbalance in some areas of the country. In these regions, the land mass is rising to such an extent that the sea levels actually appear to be dropping.

This is happening in south-east Alaska, where the apparent sea level has dropped 14 inches since 1940, even though it has risen due to melting glaciers.

C. Dead Man Revived In Russia: The Soviet Press reported on March 15 that a man who had been clinically dead for three hours was revived by surgeons after several hours' efforts.

It was the first time that a man, after remaining for several hours in a state of clinical death, was revived and wholly recovered his creative faculties, the Komsomolskaya Pravda said.

Lost in snowy wastes in subzero weather in Vladivostok, a young tractor driver in a "virgin land" fainted, fell to the ground and died, the paper said. He was found three hours later. When he was placed in a truck, his body made the sound of wood. His heart was beating no longer, his eyes were fixed, his breath had stopped.

The surgeon of a nearby clinic, Paul Abramian, worked on the body for 12 hours according to the methods of famed Professor Vladimir Negovski, and succeeded in reviving the man. For several months, doctors continued efforts to keep him alive. On March 15, he went back to work.

D. Revolutionary Find By Astronomers: It was reported from Pasadena (California) on March 30 that astronomers had found an object in the sky moving so fast and at such a great distance that it had upset current concepts of the age and size of the Universe.

Dr. M. Schmidt of the Mount Wilson and Palomar observatories and Mr. T. A. Matthews, a radio astronomer, discovered the mysterious source of incredibly powerful light and radio waves.

The object, believed to be an exploding galaxy or cluster of galaxies, was the most distant yet seen by man. It was moving faster than anything ever observed in the heavens—approximately half the speed of light.

Until now, astronomers had measured the speed and distance of objects by a technique known as "red shift". The faster an object goes the more its light shifts into the red part of the spectrum.

However, they keep finding objects farther and farther away. The new object, called 3C-147 is 10 to 20 per cent farther away than the most distant previously known object, 3C-295.

"This means", said Dr. Schmidt, "we must begin to be more cautious in announcing estimates of distance. We don't know what scale to use, we only know that some objects are farther away than others."

This reversal of astronomical confidence means revisions in estimates of the size and age of the Universe.

Einstein said that anything going faster than light would cease to exist. Since 3C-295 was six billion light years away and going at half the speed of light, astronomers figured that nothing could exist beyond 12 billion light years.

They also calculated the age of the Universe at 12 billion years, since that is the time it would take light to travel to us from the oldest objects.

ADEN

A. Fighting With Tribal Guerrillas—British Troops Re-inforced: British troops were rushed on May 2 to Aden to re-inforce the hard-pressed forces fighting a mountain battle with tribal guerrillas, who oppose the South Arabian Federation.

The British Ministry of Defence said that 600 men had been sent to Aden. Planes were taking off throughout the night with troops and equipment. They were flown out after an urgent request by the South Arabian Federal Government for more military aid.

This followed a skirmish with guerrillas in the mountainous country around the Aden-Dhala road. Two British soldiers were missing, presumed dead.

The Ministry of Defence said that operations against the "dissidents" had been going on continuously since then and at least 60 had been killed. Reports coming in from Aden said there were "large concentrations of enemy troops." Many were in uniform and were armed with modern weapons, including mortars and machine guns.

The Defence Ministry spokesman said the fighting was taking place well within the boundaries of the Aden Protectorate. He added: "The enemy are well-armed troops organized from Yemen. They are mostly local tribesmen from the Protectorate."

British planes and heavy guns on May 3 pounded at the "Red Wolves" in the Radfan mountains near the borders of the Yemen Republic.

Combined British-Arab forces continued their steady advance towards fortified rebel positions in the mountainous Radfan region, 60 miles north of Aden. Two British soldiers were killed in fighting on May 1, and two more injured.

Unconfirmed reports from Taiz in the Yemen on May 3 said the heads of the two Britons had been displayed in the Capital.

Yemen's Republican Information Minister, Mr. Ahmed Almarwani denied reports that the two British soldiers had been decapitated.

In a statement over Sanaa Radio, he said Britain was still living in the era of the Imam when heads were chopped off and exhibited in public.

A report on May 5 said that in recent clashes between British troops and the tribesmen opposed to the South Arabian Federation Government, about 100 tribesmen had lost their lives. Two British soldiers had been killed.

UK Plan To Send More Troops:

The British Prime Minister, Sir Alec Douglas-Home, announced in the House of Commons on May 4 that he would withdraw troops from West Germany if necessary, to restore peace in the Radfan area of the South Arabian Federation.

But he seemed very anxious to calm down the anger aroused in Britain by the report that heads of two soldiers were displayed in Yemen.

He said the report had neither been confirmed nor refuted and added that Britain had no wish to quarrel with either UAR or Yemen and only wanted a peaceful settlement.

He said that the flare-up was an internal matter, although the hostile tribesmen had undoubtedly received modern arms from Yemen. Their activities menaced the security of the people of Aden and Britain had re-inforced the troops there on a request by the South Arabian Federal Government.

The Labour Party through its spokesman expressed deep revulsion at the report of the beheading, but their questions brought out the admission from Sir Alec that the statement by the British Commander about the incident had been made by him on his own and that the British Government was now seeking confirmation through the American Embassy in Sanaa.

Sir Alec in reply to other questions repeated that he was anxious that the frontier between Yemen and the Federation should be demarcated with the help of United Nations. He had made representations to the UN Secretary-General, U Thant and he would do so again.

More British troops landed in Aden to re-inforce troops fighting rebel tribesmen in the Radfan mountains.

Two Royal Air Force transport planes flew in with headquarters staff from Lisburn, northern Ireland, to join others.

In London, Mr. R. A. Butler, the British Foreign Secretary, said that in their recent Washington talks he and Mr. Dean Rusk, the US Secretary of State, had reached "absolute agreement" about their Middle East policy.

Mr. Butler, who was speaking to newsmen at London airport after official visits to Washington, Tokyo and Manila, said that Britain had not asked USA to impose economic sanctions against the UAR Government. Britain was not seeking a quarrel or fight with President Nasser. "I attempted to get them to understand our point of view on the defence of Aden, which we intend to defend as we intend to defend Malaysia. They were completely in sympathy with our policy."

British Bombing Raid:

An RAF bomber flew over the Radfan mountain area on May 9 dropping leaflets warning the "Red Wolf" tribesmen to clear the area.

At the same time an RAF spokesman revealed that a bombing raid was launched against a concentration of rebels on another mountain peak the previous weekend in which 14,000-lb bombs were dropped and "a number of persons were killed".

Group Captain Alex Blythe, commander of the RAF station at Khormaksar, told newsmen that the bombing raid was carried out with British Defence Ministry permission. A large concentration of tribesmen had been seen there. As well as killing an unknown number of people it caused "considerable damage to rock entrenchments."

British Marines and paratroops swept down the slopes of Vap Budge peak on May 9 to recover bodies of two of their comrades who died in the battle with rebels of Radfan. The two paratroops were killed on May 5 while taking the tiny village of El Nawill. They were buried temporarily in a shallow grave. British troops encountered no resistance and the bodies were flown out by helicopter to Aden.

The British Field Commander said the object of the operation was to remove the threat to the strategic trade and pilgrim road linking Aden with Dhalu, some 90 miles to the north.

Sir Alec Douglas-Home's Statement In House Of Commons:

The British Prime Minister, Sir Alec Douglas-Home, told the House of Commons on May 4 that recent violent acts of subversion along the Aden-Yemen frontier had been "encouraged and sustained on a large scale" from the Yemeni side of the border.

He also referred to the dangers of the "background situation" to the border conflict—the presence of some 40,000 Egyptian troops in Yemen—and said that as long as the Yemeni authorities resisted the placing of United Nations observers on the frontier, it was difficult for the UN Secretary-General to proceed with his mediation efforts.

He said: "These operations are essentially of an internal security nature, taking place wholly within the frontiers of the South Arabian Federation.

"The Federal Government, lacking the military resources to deal with subversion on this scale, asked for British assistance. In view of the strength of the opposition encountered, it has been necessary for them to be re-inforced. This is being done by the despatch of troops already available from the garrison in Aden, and the 1st Battalion of the King's Own Scottish Borderers are being despatched to take their place in Aden State.

"There is no doubt that violent subversion in the Radfan area had been encouraged and sustained from Yemen. The opposition encountered by our troops is further evidence that support from across the frontier has been on a large scale."

UN Special Committee's Appeal To Britain:

The UN Special Committee on Decolonization on May 11 adopted an 11-nation resolution in New York urging Britain to halt military operations in South Arabia.

The vote was 18 to 3 (Britain, USA and Australia), with two abstentions (Italy and Denmark).

Ten African and Asian countries and Yugoslavia sponsored the resolution.

Britain's Mr. Cecil E. King announced beforehand that he would vote against the resolution on the ground that its military action in South Arabia was aimed at meeting the campaign of subversion from the UAR and Yemen, seeking to break up the South Arabian Federation.

For Iraq, Dr. Adnan Pachachi charged that Britain was using bombs against the population of its own territory and that the Special Committee must act to halt a colonial war.

An eight-member delegation representing the Afro-Asian group in United Nations expressed their concern about the Aden situation to U Thant and asked him to use his good offices in finding a solution.

The delegation was headed by the Turkish representative who is chairman of the Afro-Asian group for the month of May. The other representatives were from Indonesia, Ghana, Mali, Kenya, Guinea, Kuwait and UAR.

B. Budget For 1964-65: The Finance Minister of Aden State, Al-Haj Abdel Hamid Ghanem, presented the Budget for the financial year April 1, 1964 to March 31, 1965 to the Legislative Council on April 19.

It provides for a surplus of £25,498, revenue being estimated at £3,970,714 and expenditure at £3,945,216; £150,000 was provided by Britain—the second instalment of a special grant of £500,000 spread over the three years immediately following Aden's merger with the South Arabian Federation in 1963.

Al-Haj Ghanem announced that he did not intend to vary taxation, but proposed to introduce tax concessions for a limited period for bona fide new industrial and economic investment of a permanent nature.

SUMMARY: Sheikh Abdullah's Talks In New Delhi; A-ICC Session; Diplomatic Appointments; Re-organization Of Rehabilitation Ministry; Southern Zonal Council Meeting.

A. Sheikh Abdullah's Talks In New Delhi: Sheikh Mohammed Abdullah, former Prime Minister of Kashmir, arrived in New Delhi from Srinagar on April 29 accompanied by Mirza Afzal Beg. (For his release see page 5796).

On behalf of Mr. J. Nehru, his daughter, Mrs. Indira Gandhi received the Sheikh. The Government was represented by the Deputy Minister for External Affairs, Mr. Dinesh Singh, and the Commonwealth Relations Secretary, Mr. C. S. Jha.

Others present at the airport included Mr. Jaya Prakash Narayan, the Swatantra leader, Mr. Minoo Masani and Miss Mridula Sarabhai.

In the afternoon over tea, Mr. Abdullah and his two principal lieutenants—Mirza Afzal Beg and Maulana Masoodi—talked with Mr. Nehru at the Prime Minister's residence. This was the first meeting between Mr. Nehru and Mr. Abdullah in 12 years.

On April 30, Sheikh Abdullah had talks lasting 90 minutes with Mr. Nehru. Although no indication was available as to the precise nature of the talks, it was learnt that the discussions were of a very general nature covering Indo-Pakistan relations and Pakistan's attitude towards India in the national and international spheres.

A spokesman at the Prime Minister's house stated: "The discussions ranged over the background of the Kashmir situation and the communal problem and its effect on the country as a whole."

News Conference:

Sheikh Abdullah told newsmen in New Delhi on April 30 that accession of Kashmir to India was not "the only fundamental problem for me."

He had been asked what was the use of his talks with Mr. Nehru when it had been categorically stated by the Government of India that the accession of Kashmir was irrevocable and final.

Sheikh Abdullah said: "Do you think accession is the only problem? This is not the only fundamental problem for me. There are other problems".

Asked to comment on the progress of his two-day talks with Mr. Nehru, he replied that the talks were proceeding "very well."

A correspondent asked whether it was true that he had told some persons, who had met him during the day, that he had not changed his stand vis-a-vis Kashmir, following his discussions with Mr. Nehru. He snapped back: "I have not said anything like that."

Asked whether he had plans to visit Pakistan, he replied good-humouredly: "I am getting good meals here". He, however, hastened to add that he could not say anything further at present.

A foreign correspondent asked: "Don't you think it is desirable that you visit Pakistan?"

The Sheikh replied: "Every sane person will say that it is desirable to bring India and Pakistan together".

Asked about Mr. Nehru's attitude in his current talks with him, the Sheikh said that Mr. Nehru had always been sympathetic in his approach to the Kashmir question.

On May 1, Sheikh Abdullah told newsmen that he was not thinking in terms of a confederation of India and Pakistan or any such proposal but he was thinking in terms of "peace and amity".

He was asked whether he was optimistic of carrying "something" to Kashmir as a result of his discussions in New Delhi.

He said he had no doubt that he would carry something. "I will carry the good wishes of India. I have no doubt about it. I know the mind of the Indian people. I know that there is nothing else except love. I have seen it. I do not forget it. I do not and cannot forget the sympathy and assistance which the people of India show to us. One cannot forget this."

He said that wherever he went in New Delhi, he saw a desire to bring peace in the sub-continent. But it was not enough if this feeling prevailed only in one part of the sub-continent. In the other part also "there must be responsive action."

Meeting With Mr. G. L. Nanda:

Sheikh Abdullah had a two-hour meeting with the Central Home Minister, Mr. Gulzari Lal Nanda on May 2.

In a statement afterwards, Mr. Nanda said he had made it clear to Sheikh Abdullah that any alternative in the present position of Kashmir would create "serious difficulties".

He also told the Sheikh that if there was to be peace, stability and progress in the country the best way out was "to stay where we are with regard to Kashmir". "Kashmir is an integral part of India in every sense." The best course that could be followed "is for everybody in Kashmir to settle down" and "to establish complete unity with the rest of the country."

Asked how Sheikh Abdullah reacted to his suggestion, he said: "He did not agree with me. He thinks that this is not a complete solution. According to him, there may be some other better solution."

He said the Sheikh did not suggest any alternative solution but held that something should be done which would be acceptable to India, Kashmir and Pakistan.

He said that his discussions with Sheikh Abdullah also related to the question of communal harmony and the steps taken to improve the living conditions of the people of Kashmir through Five-Year Plans.

He also pointed out to Sheikh Abdullah that the action taken by Pakistan to control communal disturbances was not at all comparable with that of India and in this matter India and Pakistan could not be equated. "I told him that here we want to localise and stamp out communal trouble but there, in Pakistan, it is a different story."

He said that the Sheikh had talked of communal harmony and progress. He reminded the Sheikh of his own share in the shaping of the First Plan. The first Plan for Kashmir was drawn up for Rs. 11 crores when Sheikh Abdullah was the Premier and the outlay of the Third Plan for the State was Rs. 75 crores. Since then the per capita income had gone up considerably.

He also explained to Sheikh Abdullah the progress recorded in food production, electricity, education and medical facilities in the State. "I told Sheikh Abdullah that I am a very simple man who takes a simple view of things. One thing which is more important than the legal and constitutional aspects of the Kashmir question is the good and welfare of the people of the State. Kashmir is a part of India and what is good for them is also naturally good for India". He said the Sheikh had reminded him of his (Mr. Nanda's) ancient family links in Kashmir and he in turn reminded the Sheikh of the work done by him to promote communal harmony. He referred to the communal harmony which prevailed in Kashmir "even in those worst days" of Partition and said he gave full credit to Sheikh Abdullah for building up such traditions in the early days.

He had told the Sheikh that his contribution to communal amity was a great source of inspiration and had strengthened our hands. "I told him these efforts should continue and that in this matter he had a great role to play. If this situation remains and develops, we will be able to discharge our duties and responsibilities here much more effectively."

He also told the Sheikh that "for the sake of protecting the minorities and ensuring their rights and privileges, I am prepared to stake my life."

After his meeeting with Mr. Nanda, Sheikh Abdullah told newsmen: "My friends here have been obsessed with the accession business. It is a very minor point. It is only a means to an end. If accession does not bring about peace to Kashmir and the sub-continent, what value has it got?

"My main aim is to find ways and means of bringing about sanity in the whole sub-continent. Once you achieve this result, all this accession business will disappear."

Talks With Acharya Vinoba Bhave And Mr. C. Rajagopalachari:

Talks between Sheikh Abdullah and Acharya Vinoba Bhave, the Sarvodaya leader, began at Bajajwadi near Wardha on May 4.

a former MP from Kashmir, were present at the talks which lasted two hours.

Sheikh Abdullah, who flew into Nagpur from Delhi early in the morning, first paid a visit to Sevagram. He offered prayers at Gandhiji's hut.

From Sevagram, he proceeded to Bajajwadi where he was received by Mrs. Janakidevi Bajaj.

Sheikh Abdullah told newsmen after his talks with Acharya Vinoba Bhave that any solution of the Kashmir question should not weaken India's secularism, "it should also satisfy the aspirations of Pakistan and also Kashmiris."

On Kashmir's accession to India, he said: "The accession of Kashmir was not achieved as was the case with the other Indian States." Pakistan said that Kashmir belonged to them. That was rejected by the also satisfy the asiprations of akistan and Kashmir requested the Government of India to defend the State against Pakistani attack.

Sheikh Abdullah said in Madras on May 5 that he and the Swatantra leader, Mr. C. Rajagopalachari had agreed upon a solution for the Kashmir problem.

He declined to indicate what it was as he thought it would be unfair for him to do so before meeting Mr. Nehru to whom he was going to present it in his final discussions.

He, however, pointed out that the solution—in his as well as in Mr. Rajagopalachari's opinion—was an honourable one for all parties, on which they could work and was "such as would not give a sense of victory either to India or to Pakistan and will, at the same time, ensure a place of honour for the people of Kashmir."

When newsmen pressed him to reveal the broad outline of the proposal, he counselled patience and said he would not keep the people guessing for long. All that he would say was that it was a "possible and practicable solution."

President Ayub Khan's Letter—Sheikh Abdullah's Reply:

On May 6, Sheikh Abdullah received a letter from the Pakistan President, F-M Mohammed Ayub Khan.

In the course of the letter, the Pakistan President referred to the UN resolutions and Pakistan's vital interests in Kashmir. He added: "You will understand our anxiety that no settlement is reached without due consultation and agreement with us."

Sheikh Abdullah told newsmen that before going to Pakistan he must have a clear idea as to what he wanted to discuss with the Pakistan President.

A New Delhi message said that it struck members of all parties as something extraordinary that the Head of a State of a foreign country should have boldly addressed a letter to Sheikh Abdullah brushing aside all protocol. The fact that the Government of India itself had not raised any objection to it was regarded as significant encouragement given to Sheikh Abdullah by Mr. Nehru to pursue his own approach.

Answering a question in the Lok Sabha Mr. Nehru said that there was nothing extraordinary in the Pakistan High Commissioner extending an invitation to Sheikh Abdullah to visit Pakistan.

The following is the text of Sheikh Abdullah's reply to President Ayub Khan's communication, sent on May 7:

"My present discussions with the Indian leaders mainly centre round the question of exploring ways and means of establishing lasting amity and good neighbourly relations between India and Pakistan.

"This, in my judgment, is the key to a peaceful and honourable solution of the Kashmir dispute that has so far bedevilled the relations between the two countries.

"I also believe that no solution will be lasting until it has the approval of all the parties concerned, namely, India, Pakistan and the people of Kashmir.

"My talks so far have been exploratory, and at present we are working on some proposal which can broadly form the basis of such a solution.

"You may rest assured that when my discussions reach a stage where such a proposal takes a concrete shape, I shall lose no time to inform you and avail myself of your kind invitation for mutual consultations before it (proposal) takes a final shape."

He left New Delhi for Srinagar on May 13.

Soon after his arrival in Srinagar he told newsmen that he would return to New Delhi after a week to resume discussions with Mr. Nehru, after which he would leave for Pakistan in the third week of May.

Mr. J. Nehru's Assurances To Congress And Lok Sabha:

The Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru assured the Executive of the Congress Parliamentary Party on May 6 that whatever might be the nature of the talks between him and Sheikh Abdullah, "there would not be any deviation from the basic stand taken by the Government on the Kashmir issue".

[Sheikh Abdullah had told newsmen that a solution to the Kashmir problem would definitely involve a change in the status quo in the State.]

Mr. Nehru, who was replying to a request from several members in the Lok Sabha for information about the trend of the talks, stated: "The talks are mostly concerned with wider issues rather than the immediate issues that members may have in their mind."

He added that Sheikh Abdullah had told him something about what transpired between him and Mr. C. Rajagopalachari and Acharya Vinoba Bhave.

Also on May 6, Mr. Nehru assured the Lok Sabha that no agreement would be reached with Sheikh Abdullah without reference to Parliament.

His brief statement on the subject in response to a request from Mr. Hiren Mukherjee. Deputy Leader of the Communist group, was cheered by both Congress and Opposition members.

Mr. Mukherjee sought an assurance that no decision would be taken behind the back of Parliament. He wanted Mr. Nehru to give the House some idea of what had happened during the talks in view of "disquieting" reports in the Press. He, however, left it to Mr. Nehru to say whatever he considered proper so that the talks were not in any way hindered.

Mrs. Renu Chakravarty, another Communist member, asked Mr. Nehru to throw some light on Sheikh Abdullah's talks with Mr. C. Rajagopalachari and his subsequent statement that he had discussed with the Swatantra leader a concrete proposal to solve the Kashmir issue.

Mr. Nehru said he could quite understand the desire of the House to be informed of the "so-called" talks. Sheikh Abdullah had gone to Wardha to meet Acharya Vinoba Bhave and to Madras to see Mr. Rajagopalachari. He did not know the details of his talks with Mr. Rajagopalachari and Acharya Bhave. The Sheikh gave him a brief account of what had transpired at these meetings, but it was difficult for him to repeat what he had told him.

B. A-ICC Session: At its opening session in Bombay on May 15, the A-ICC approved by a large majority an amendment to the Congress constitution on the voting rights of its primary members.

The amendment, unanimously adopted by the Working Committee the same morning, gives the primary members the right to elect Block Congress Committees and electoral colleges for District Committees which in turn choose members of Pradesh Committees.

According to Mr. S. K. Patil, who moved the amendment, the bogus membership multiplies 10 times at the time of elections to the Congress committees. The amendment was only an experimental measure which could be withdrawn or altered.

The change in the Congress constitution is a compromise on the original suggestion that the primary members should be totally disenfranchized.

The amendment lays down that only "active" members who enrol a minimum number of members for the Congress and wear khadi will be eligible for election.

Mr. Patil said that a Block Congress Committee would cover the area of a development block with a population of about 60,000. The Block Congress Commitee consists of members elected by the primary members at the rate of one for a population of about 5,000. Every block should have at least 30 active members.

He added that wherever the population of a block was less than the prescribed limit of 60,000 or more, the Working Committee had been given the power to make the necessary adjustment in the rules.

Resolution On Communal Situation:

On May 16, the A-ICC adopted a resolution on the communal situation.

An eloquent reply by Mr. Morarji Desai, mover of the resolution, showing firm determination to put down communal disturbances and deep concern for the welfare of the refugees from Pakistan led to the withdrawal of 23 of the 24 amendments tabled by delegates.

Mr. Desai said the argument that the disturbances in some parts of the country were only the repercussions of what had happened in Pakistan could not stand. There could be no justification on grounds of provocation for the incidents in some parts of the country. Such happenings needed to be ruthlessly put down.

Intervening in the debate on the resolution, the Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru expressed the hope that India and Pakistan would develop closer relations "to the advantage of both"; he assured Pakistan that she had "nothing to fear from India unless she herself attacks India".

He said that if Sheikh Abdullah could help the two countries to improve their relations "he will have done a great service to both countries. We will have to help him in this attempt, but in doing so, we must adhere to our principles as well as to our basic attitude in regard to Kashmir."

He declined to go much into the details of his talks with Sheikh Abdullah "at this stage". But he said Sheikh Abdullah had talked even more about relations between India and Pakistan than about Kashmir. "We did not arrive at any clear solution of this problem, but various suggestions were made. Some of these suggestions appear to be difficult in the present circumstances, even though ultimately they may be found to be acceptable by both countries".

He gave the assurance that no final decision would be taken "without reference to the Congress as well as Parliament. That decision would be based not only on our principles out also on our attitude towards the question of Kashmir."

The following is the text of the resolution:

"For many years our country had to face problems arising out of communal tensions. Time and again the Indian National Congress and the A-ICC have made their determination abundantly clear to stand by the ideal of a secular State. Unfortunately there has been recrudescence of communal tensions and conflicts in some parts of our country.

"The A-ICC deeply deplores these incidents of communal violence. They were no doubt provoked by the wilful persecution of non-Muslims, including Hindus, Christians and Buddhists in Pakistan, the continuing movement of refugees from Pakistan into India and their tales of horror which inflamed the minds of the people here. But wrongs done to members of minority communities in Pakistan can provide no extenuation at all for attacks in India on innocent citizens belonging to the minority community. Such acts are a matter of shame and the A-ICC cannot but condemn strongly those elements which exploit people's sentiments and misguide them into horrible activities completely opposed to the tolerant, kindly and peace-loving temper of our people.

"It has to be appreciated at the same time that the vast bulk of the people in the country are law abiding, and in a number of cases, members of the majority community exposed themselves to risks at the hands of unsocial elements while extending protection to members of the minority community. It is the anti-social elements which pose the most serious problem and should continue to be dealt with ruthlessly, in the interests of peace and security of the community.

"During the freedom struggle, the Congress under the guidance of Gandhiji accepted communal harmony as an essential prerequisite for the achievement of the country's independence. It strove constantly for establishing amity and understanding among different communities in India, and succeeded in a large measure. After independence there have been communal incidents in the country but they were on a small scale and confined to local areas. In all these cases the Government took prompt and strong measures to put down disorders and prevent their recurrence.

"Deep religious feelings were roused at the unfortunate theft of the holy relic in the Hazratbal shrine at Srinagar. Thanks to the Government of India and the Government of Jammu and Kashmir, the holy relic was recovered and duly installed in its place. Throughout this period communal peace was maintained in the State for which the people and the Government of the State deserve congratulations. But meanwhile the Press and leaders of public opinion in Pakistan—even persons in the highest positions of authority—exploited this incident to fan the flames of communal passions leading to the most horrible brutalities perpetrated on members of minority communities specially in Jessore, Khulna and Rajshahi in Pakistan.

"Our President appealed to the President of Pakistan for issuing a joint declaration calling upon the people of both countries to take to the path of communal goodwill and harmony. Pakistan set its face against this appeal and also did not at first respond favourably to the suggestion for a meeting of the Home Ministers of the two countries. Ultimately, on the initiative of our Prime Minister, the Pakistan Government agreed to this meeting. As a result of the conference of the Home Ministers of India and Pakistan, there was some progress in achieving an understanding regarding the problems affecting the minority communities. The A-ICC commands recourse to all possible methods for the establishment of communal peace in India and Pakistan.

"The A-ICC notes that strong and prompt steps were taken by the Government of West Bengal and the Government of India for putting down the communal trouble which took place in Calcutta early in January. The further escalation of persecution of minorities in East Pakistan and the stream of refugees led to an outburst of communal violence in Jamshedpur and Rourkela. The A-ICC appreciates the steps taken by the State Governments and the Government of India to put down these disturbances, to prevent their recurrence anywhere, and to rehabilitate those who were uprooted by these disturbances.

"The A-ICC expresses its deep sympathy for all those who have suffered on account of these disturbances and calls upon the Government and the people to continue to make every effort to ensure that every Indian irrespective of caste and creed can live in absolute safety and on terms of equality, honour and dignity.

"India has always repudiated the two-nation theory, and our Constitution enshrines the principles of equality in rights and opportunities for all citizens in a secular State. It is heart-rending to see that members of minority communities in Pakistan feel compelled to be torn away from their hearths and homes. Since January this year over 3,00,000 refugees have poured into India. Their relief and rehabilitation cast a severe burden on a poor country which ever since independence has been addressing itself to the task of eradicating poverty, ill-health and ignorance.

"The Chinese aggression has cast a further heavy burden on our resources. Pakistan's allegation that India is encouraging members of minority communities to come out of Pakistan is thus a travesty of truth. The A-ICC expresses the hope that the Government of Pakistan will create conditions in which members of minority communities could continue to live in their ancestral homes with a complete sense of security. If, however, finding it impossible to live with safety and honour, they are compelled to leave Pakistan and come to India, the Government and the people of India must treat their relief and rehabilitation as a national responsibility for which massive efforts will have to be made by all concerned.

"The A-ICC appeals to the Government of India, the State Governments and the people at large to ensure firmly that the influx of refugees is not allowed to create any communal tension; at the same time no effort should be spared to give solace and relief to these brethren of ours and to rehabilitate them economically as well as psychologically.

"Repeatedly the Congress Working Committee and the A-ICC have called upon the people to work for the abolition of communlism, casteism, provincialism and linguism which hamper the path of emotional integration, encourage fissiparous tendencies and weaken the social and psychological base for rapid economic progress.

"Secularism is a priceless heritage of our country, and is the foundation on which a progressive modern State can be built for the welfare of the common man. The A-ICC re-iterates its firm resolve to maintain and consolidate national integration based on secularism as a necessary condition for the country's march towards democratic socialism."

Session Ends:

The three-day session of the A-ICC ended on May 17.

The last day of the session was devoted to the consideration of the Dhebar Committee's report on democracy and socialism (see page 5845).

The 'house' devoted over eight hours to the discussion of the report, taking up even the time originally allotted to non-official resolutions.

A feature of the Bombay session was that the Congress President, Mr. Kamaraj, did not rise even once to address the delegates.

As Mr. Nehru himself pointed out, a resolution on the international situation, as was customary, was not there.

The debate on the Dhebar Committee report was marked by a sharp criticism of the Congress approach to socialism and the party's policies to reach that goal. Among those who were highly critical of the party's economic policies were Mr. V. K. Krishna Menon, Mr. A. P. Jain, Dr. Punjabrao Deshmukh and Mr. N. V. Gadgil, all former Ministers of the Central Government.

Mr. U. N. Dhebar, who had placed the report before the "house." In his reply requested the Working Committee to give serious thought to the suggestions made during the debate on the various problems.

While presenting the report, Mr. Dhebar had proposed only its consideration. No formal resolution had been moved for its adoption.

The delegates, however, "generally endorsed" the report through an amendment to Mr. Dhebar's original proposal, moved by Mr. Bibhuti Mishra.

G. Assassination Of Mr. Jigme Dorji—Death Sentences: The Royal Commission of Justice appointed by the Maharaja of Bhutan on May 15 sentenced four army men responsible for the assassination of the State's Prime Minister, Mr. Jigme Dorji, to death on a charge of treason.

They were Brigadier Bahadur Namgyal, former Deputy Chief of the Army, Jambey, the assassin, Lt-Col. Sangyal Dorji and Naik Doley.

The sentence of death being mandatory under the Bhutanese law for treason, the Commission recommended to the Maharaja that Naik Doley's sentence be commuted to life imprisonment. H. Re-organization Of Rehabilitation Ministry: The Central Government has decided to set up a Directorate-General of Relief in the Ministry of Rehabilitation for expediting the work of refugee resettlement in different States.

A number of camp-commanders will also be appointed in different camps where the migrants from East Pakistan stay in transit before they are dispatched to the States.

The expansion and the re-organization of the Ministry of Rehabilitation followed the visit of the Central Minister, Mr. Mahavir Tyagi, to several refugee camps in Madhya Pradesh and Orissa.

After a personal study of the conditions in these camps and also their administration, Mr. Tyagi was said to have come to the conclusion that to meet the grave situation created by the continuous influx of migrants, it was necessary to strengthen the present camps and to organize new ones in different States. (At present there are 41 refugee camps in the country.)

The new Directorate will also help in co-ordinating the activities of various camps and provide a more uniform standard of administration and discipline.

Directive To States:

The Central Government has directed all States to re-organize and strengthen their intelligence machinery so that the authorities receive advance warning of any communal conflict which may be developing.

This advice has been given because it is realized that in the recent riots in Bihar and Orissa inadequacy of intelligence hampered and delayed the measures to control rioting.

The Home Ministry was believed to have suggested that besides the intelligence staff and CID, revenue officials, village headmen and agencies engaged in field work of various types be asked to "keep their eyes and ears open" and immediately report to the authorities any signs of communal tension that they might notice.

Such an arrangement, it was pointed out, should avert situations like the one a few weeks ago in which the authorities were taken by surprise by the volume and virulence of communal rioting.

The move to improve the intelligence is a corollary to the elaborate instructions which were issued recently to all State Governments on how to deal with a mob.

Contrary to the earlier practice of opening fire only as the last resort, it has now been decided that should an ugly situation appear to be developing the police must open fire early and the "firing should be effective and purposeful."

The extent to which the authorities' attitude to the use of force has changed following the recent disturbances is evident from the directive that any hesitation on the part of the police and magistracy to employ effective force "would be regarded as a grave dereliction of duty."

The States have been asked to use their powers under the Preventive Detention Act and the Defence of India Rules to detain individuals who might be inciting communalism and creating tension. If necessary, the powers to detain under the DIR be delegated to district magistrates.

The Centre has also urged stern action against those who indulge in looting during disturbances. Those from whose houses looted property is recovered should be arrested and prosecuted. If any of the recovered articles carry blood stains, the prosecution, the Centre feels, should be on charge of murder.

I. Doctors And Engineers To Serve In Armed Forces: Doctors and engineers recruited in future to the Central and State Services and by public undertakings will be required to serve in the armed forces for a minimum term of four years during the first 10 years of their service.

Orders issued by the Central Government to this effect say that the entrants will be posted either as commissioned officers or as civilian officers engaged in work relating to the defence effort in India or abroad.

Some time ago this scheme was discussed by the Emergency Committee of Secretaries after obtaining the views of the Central Ministries concerned.

This compulsory military service has been necessitated by the shortage of personnel in the technical branches of the armed forces.

The Central and State Governments have already liberalized the terms for the release of civilian officers with engineering and medical qualifications to join military service. The Central Home Ministry has issued orders protecting their interests and offering them certain other concessions.

The Central Government has also issued orders that 50 per cent of the Central Class I and Class II Engineering and Medical Services, which are to be filled by direct recruitment, should be reserved for temporary commission graduate engineers and doctors.

The Army is also granting short-service commission to engineers, initially tenable for five years. In March, 1963 a university entry scheme was introduced under which short-service commission on probation is granted to suitable engineering students studying in the final and pre-final year of the degree course.

A scheme for the grant of direct junior commission in the Corps of Engineers to selected civilian personnel who possess the required technical qualifications was also sanctioned in October, 1963.

K. Studies On Fourth Plan—Planning Body's Recommendations: The Perspective Planning Division's paper, which has been accepted as the basis for future studies on the Fourth Five-Year Plan, envisages an integrated programme of development for the decade 1966-76.

It recommends a total outlay of Rs. 66,000 crores during the period—Rs. 22,000 crores for the Fourth Plan and twice that for the Fifth Plan.

This, in its view, is essential for achieving the social and economic objectives set by the nation, and the effort is not beyond the country's capacity.

The main social aims of the scheme are a minimum level of consumption of Rs. 20 per month per head by 1976; substantial improvement in the standard of amenities in rural areas; and the attainment of a social order which, besides providing equality of opportunity to all, will prevent excessive disparity in income and wealth.

To attain this, the study says, an acceleration of the national income from the anticipated figure of Rs. 18,000 crores annually by the end of the Third Plan to Rs. 26,000 crores in 1970-71 and Rs. 37,300 crores in 1976 is necessary. This assumes an annual compound rate of increase of seven per cent.

The foreign exchange needs of the Fourth and Fifth Plans are sought to be rapidly curtailed to make the economy more or less independent of foreign help by 1976. This, combined with a high rate of investment, would lead to a self-reliant and self-generating economy.

The rate of investment under the scheme will be stepped up from 11 per cent of the national income in 1961 to 21 per cent in 1971, after which it will maintain itself at that level.

The total consumption under the scheme will in 1975-76 be 2.27 times that in 1960-61. In per capita terms this would work out to a rise of 60 per cent, or an average annual increase of 3.2 per cent after allowing for a population growth of 2.2 per cent per annum.

This would compare very favourably with the situation during the Second and Third Plans when the actual per capita increase has been less than one per cent per annum.

Enrolment in elementary education institutions is sought to be trebled over the period 1961-76; the number of secondary school students will go up four times and the expansion of facilities at university or corresponding levels 3.5 times. All children between the ages of five and 11 and half of those in the age-group 11-14 will be in school by the end of the Fourth Plan. The Fifth Plan goal is to have 90 per cent of the age-group 6-14 attending school.

Scholarship facilities will be greatly expanded to put education within the reach of most deserving candidates irrespective of means.

The total outlay on education is to be stepped up from about two per cent in 1961 to nearly four per cent by the end of the Fourth Plan and 4.7 per cent by the end of the Fifth Plan.

Family planning is to be accorded high priority: the goal is to cover the country by the end of the Fifth Plan with a network of family planning clinics, which would provide free advice and assistance.

The basic amenities available in the villages are to be augmented in a dramatic fashion. Under the programme for rural electrification, for example, the number of villages with power will go up from 40,000 in 1966 to 100,000 in 1971 and 200,000 in 1976. Since most of these villages will be large-sized, in effect the bulk of the countryside will enjoy the advantages of electricity.

Of the 70 million likely to be added to the labour force during 1961-76, nearly 50 million will be absorbed in non-agricultural pursuits, the balance finding employment in the agricultural and related sectors.

A sizable increase in the share of the public sector is planned during the next two Plans. It is hoped that by 1976, about half of the total stock in the country will be owned by the Government. This will have two effects. First, it will help reduce the present wide disparities in wealth and secondly, it will facilitate mobilization of surpluses of productive enterprises.

The study assumes a step-up of about 4.7 per cent per annum in income from agriculture but a much higher rate of increase in industry and other sectors. Mining, manufacturing industries and construction, for example, will go up by 11.4 per cent a year, during the decade 1966-76. The increase in the latter category during the first half will be 12.5 per cent. The figure for transport will be 10 per cent. Small-scale industries will double their growth rate—from four per cent annually to eight per cent.

Because of the much larger increase in industry, the share of agriculture in the total national income will decline from 43 per cent in 1966 to less than 33 per cent in 1976. Mining and manufactures, on the other hand, will improve their share from 19 per cent to 27 per cent.

The critical sectors of development are metals, machinery, fertilizers, coal, oil, power, transport, major irrigation works, higher technical education, scientific research and survey of natural resources. These are important not only because they support the basic programme of development but also because if they fail to come up to expectations the assumptions with regard to the balance of payments would be upset, throwing the economy back into the lap of the aiding nations.

The step-up in the heavy and intermediate industries would change the production picture in a dramatic fashion. In 1961, nearly half the total national output was derived from small-scale and household industries, engaged in processing agricultural produce and manufacture of consumer goods. Capital goods and intermediate industries accounted for less than one-fourth of the total industrial output.

During the 15-year period 1961-76, the outturn of the latter will multiply 10 times, boosting its share in the total from 23 per cent, to about 43 per cent in 1971 and 51 per cent in 1976.

It is in these critical sectors that gestation lags are long and advance action is, therefore, necessary. The existing lack of technical organizations for planning, design engineering and constructing complex enterprises, needs to be rapidly corrected.

The study declares that financial resources for a plan of this kind are not the determining factor but flow from its shape and size. This is because revenues depend also on the scope of the production planned.

The total annual investment planned at the end of the Third, Fourth and Fifth Plans is respectively Rs. 2,900 crores, Rs. 5,400 crores and Rs. 7,800 crores. The share of the private sector gradually falls over the years. The figures for the public and private sectors in 1966, 1971 and 1976 being Rs. 1,800 crores and Rs. 1,100 crores, Rs. 3,450 crores and Rs. 1,950 crores, and Rs. 5,200 crores and Rs. 2,600 crores.

The return from the private sector is assumed at 13 per cent of the capital and from the public sector at 10 per cent two to four years after investment. Surpluses from public enterprises are expected to go up from Rs. 355 crores in 1966 to Rs. 750 crores in 1971 and Rs. 1,630 crores in 1976.

Market borrowings are taken at Rs. 270 crores, Rs. 445 crores and Rs. 725 crores respectively.

Additional taxation will provide Rs. 600 crores in the Third Plan and Rs. 790 crores during the Fifth Plan, considering that the figure for the Third Plan, when the income growth has been disappointing, is expected to be Rs. 750 crores, this is not impracticable.

The study assumes a decline in foreign aid from Rs. 500 crores in 1966 to Rs. 300 crores in 1971 and nil in 1976. This is based on the expectation of a sizable increase in the output of indigenous capital goods and in the country's export effort.

Export earnings under the schemes are to go up from an anticipated Rs. 890 crores in 1966 to Rs. 1,220 crores in 1971 and Rs. 1,620 crores in 1976.

The export plan envisages a notable reduction in the share of agricultural produce in the total. Against 76 per cent in 1961, this figure is likely to go down to 59 per cent in 1971 and less than half in 1976.

The category includes items like jute fabrics, tea, fruit, vegetables, oil cakes, fish and fish preparations, cotton textiles, vegetable oils and sugar.

The principal category which will take up some of these percentages is mineral ores, particularly iron-ore. Their proportion in the total export earnings will go up from six per cent in 1961 to 14 per cent in 1971 and 1976, the absolute figures being Rs. 50 crores, Rs. 171 crores and Rs. 230 crores respectively.

The export of manufactured goods like electric machinery, including electronic equipment, engineering items, iron and steel castings, metals and metal manufactures, aluminium, chemicals, rubber manufactures, drugs and medicines, will also go up steeply. From Rs. 60 crores in 1961, earnings from this list are likely to increase to Rs. 276 crores in 1971 and Rs. 484 crores in 1976.

L. Coal Deposits In Bihar: Rich reserves of super-grade coal estimated at several million tonnes have been discovered near Bermo in Hazaribagh district of Bihar.

National Coal Development Corporation (NCDC) sources have said buildings in the coal-bearing areas will have to be demolished for working the mines. A diversion road has already been constructed on which light traffic has started moving. The main road, however, is still being used for heavy vehicles.

According to the sources, coal from the new reserves will be conveniently utilized at the new washery which is being set up with Soviet collaboration in the district.

M. Progress Of Banking During 1963: The Reserve Bank report on "trend and progress of banking in India" during 1963 showed that the banks' resources and credit and investment portfolios increased during the year as a whole and led to the banks increasing their earnings and profits.

The report, released in Bombay on May 16, noted that the Emergency and its aftermath "did not have an unfavourable impact" on the operations of banks during the year.

By and large, it stated, the economy was also able to absorb the immediate impact of increased defence outlays and the subsequent heavy step-up in taxation without serious disturbance of its internal balance.

The report noted that the pace of branch expansion by banks in the private sector was at an accelerated pace during the year with the number of new offices opened by commercial banks rising to 365 in 1963.

Since 1954, when the organized programme of branch expansion started, commercial banks have opened a total of 2,373 new offices or an average of 237 per annum. At the end of 1963 the total number of offices of scheduled and non-scheduled banks stood at 5,032 and 510, respectively.

The report stated that although the pace of branch expansion had quickened in 1962, there were as many as 1,017 towns in India out of a total of 2,690 towns, which did not have any office of a scheduled, non-scheduled or co-operative bank. There was therefore continuous and urgent need for extension of banking facilities in areas not served by any commercial bank.

The reports stated that most of the banks had responded to the Reserve Bank's request in 1963 to formulate and submit their branch expansion programmes for three years. The programmes submitted included a fair number of centres devoid of banking facilities.

During 1963, banking companies were granted permission to open new offices at 166 unbanked centres as compared with 82 in the previous year.

Turning to overall trends, the report noted that deposit mobilization (excluding PL 480 and 686 Funds) was higher in 1963 (Rs. 283 crores) than in 1962 (Rs. 233 crores). Credit expansion (Rs. 159 crores) was also larger than in 1962 (Rs. 145 crores). Unlike in 1962, scheduled banks reduced their borrowings from the Reserve Bank in 1963 by Rs. 13 crores. Cash reserves also rose (Rs. 9 crores) as against a decline in 1962 (Rs. 23 crores).

N. Oil Exploration Plans: The Oil and Natural Gas Commission, which met in Dehra Dun on May 16, finalized plans for accelerating the oil exploration and development programme in various areas, particularly measures for speedier execution of the drilling programme in Gujerat and Assam.

It also discussed financial and technical matters, including indigenous manufacture of equipments needed for oil exploration.

The Commission, which has to its credit many new discoveries of oilfields since its inception in 1955, is making intensive efforts to raise indigenous production of oil from one million tons at the end of the Second Plan to 6½ million tons by the end of the Third Plan.

The refining capacity target at the end of the Third Plan has been fixed at 17½ million tons, while the Fourth Plan aims at refining 28 to 30 million tons, thus bringing self-sufficiency in this respect.

A spokesman of the Commission told newsmen that drilling for oil in the Siwalik Hills at Mohand near Dehra Dun would start early in July. Most of the equipment needed for it was in transit, while rig from Raxaul which was still working on final tests there would be sent by the end of May.

In the Mehsana area of Gujarat too search for oil has been accelerated with promising possibilities.

The spokesman said negotiations were still in progress between the Ministry of Petroleum and the Governments of Iran and Kuwait for contract for drilling in these West Asian countries and it would take some time to finalize the arrangements.

The Commission's Fourth Plan involving an outlay of Rs. 225 crores has been submitted for inclusion in the Plan estimates.

O. Oil Refinery In Madras: The oil refinery near Madras city will be located on the coastline between Tiruvottiyur and Ennore.

The Rs. 20-crore refinery will be the focal point for the development of a full-fledged petro-chemical complex with a maximum outlay of Rs. 100 to Rs. 150 crores.

The idea of laying a submarine pipeline for supplying crude direct from the ships to the refinery has been given up because of the fluctuating weather conditions along the coastline. Also, the initial expenses and maintenance costs for such a pipeline would be prohibitive.

It is now felt that a special dock for berthing ships near the refinery site, so that the crude could be pumped to a shore-side pipeline linked with the refinery tanks, would serve the purpose.

The Centre is stepping up its efforts for exploring oil in the Cauvery basin and is said to be on the look-out for high-powered drills for the purpose. Only intensive drilling in the area would prove if oil could be exploited on a commercial scale. Present indications are that oil in the Cauvery delta stretches under the sea-bed near the coast.

P. Power Station For Assam: Work has begun on Assam's most inaccessible power station, located at Nangalbibra, within 30 miles of Balpakram, the remotest of all Garo habitations.

A Forest Department dirt track from Dudhnai on National Highway No. 37 has been improved to enable the State Electricity Board to start installation of the 5-mw coal-based thermal power house.

The Board will soon take up further improvement of the road so that heavy machinery can be transported. There is a proposal for additional installations at Nangalbibra which would increase power generation.

Nangalbibra is in the Garo Hills coalfield, which contains Assam's biggest and best coal deposits. Owing to lack of transport facilities, there has so far been no extraction of the coal and raisings for the thermal plant will be the first ever. Conversion of the coal into electricity for distribution all over lower Assam is considered the most economical way of exploiting the deposits till better transport facilities are available.

The raisings for the power house are also expected to initiate processes which will lead to the development of the coalfield. The Siliguri-Jogighopa broad-gauge railway will in 1965 reach within 90 miles of the coalfield and is likely to create a demand for coal. It is also hoped that road-borne coal may be used for bunkering of river steamers at Dalgoma, about 70 miles from Nangalbibra.

Some of the coal riverborne from Dalgoma may find an export market in Pakistan, but a shorter route would be by road to Jaria Jhanjail, the Pakistani railhead less than 25 miles away.

Full development of the coalfield, towards which the power house is considered a lever, could lead to industrialization of lower Assam (sillimanite, kaolin, limestone and gypsum are found close by) but will depend on a railway line being built to it from the south bank of the Brahmaputra.

The terrain is hilly but only about 2,000 feet above sea level and access to the Someshvari valley, in which the coal lies, is available through the Dudhnai valley with only a narrow belt of intervening hills forming the watershed. There are no insuperable difficulties in the building of a railway line, except the smallness of the traffic, which factor can be radically changed by coal mining.

Q. Cement Corporation Set Up: Since cement shortage has been impeding economic development, the Government has decided to establish a Cement Corporation of India to expand the production of cement in the country in the public sector.

It is estimated that during the Fourth Plan period cement production capacity will have to be increased by at least four million tons—a task which is considered beyond the private sector.

The proposed Corporation will not only build and run cement plants but also plan the production in India of cement machinery for at least 40 new plants needed during the Fourth Plan period.

The Corporation may also be asked to arrange for the manufacture of cement machinery for export to Asian and African countries on long-term credit.

R. Southern Zonal Council Meeting: The Southern Zonal Council met for a two-day session in Trivandrum on May 11.

It discussed, among other things, the question of enforcement of special legislation to regulate the service conditions of beedi and cigar workers, upgrading of certain railway lines, prevention of smuggling of red sanders timber from Andhra, resumption of fishing rights in Periyar lake (on the Madras-Kerala border) by the Kerala Government and power shortage in Kerala.

Mr. G. L. Nanda, the Central Home Minister, presided.

Dr. K. L. Rao, Central Minister for Irrigation and Power, Mr. H. C. Dasappa, Minister for Railways, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, Chief Minister of Mysore, Mr. M. Bhaktavatsalam, Chief Minister of Madras, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy, Chief Minister of Andhra Pradesh, Mr. R. Sankar, Chief Minister of Kerala, and Mr. S. L. Silam, Lt.-Governor of Pondicherry, attended.

The Council also examined the implementation of decisions regarding safeguards for linguistic minorities and national integration.

It also discussed an amendment to the Central Sales-Tax Act, reservation of seats in medical colleges, extension of time for passing language tests by employees of the States of the Zone and eradication of corruption.

Addressing the Council, Mr. Nanda said that the States in the Southern Zone had made more progress in the fields of education, food production, transport and medical facilities than the rest of the country and complimented them for the lead they had given.

He made particular mention of the commendable advance made by these States in providing safeguards to linguistic minorities.

Decisions:

The Southern Zonal Council decided on May 12 that the State Governments in this Zone, like their counterparts in other Zones, would make rules that future entrants to medical and engineering cadres should serve for at least four years in the armed forces or works relating to defence efforts anywhere in India or abroad, if so required.

Public undertakings under the State Governments would also be asked to make similar rules for their employees.

Another decision was to make arrangements for providing man-power training on priority basis so as to meet fully the man-power requirements of the Fourth and subsequent Plans.

For meeting the power shortage in Kerala during the next Summer, the Madras Chief Minister agreed to consider making available to Kerala 25 mw of power from Neyveli thermal plant.

The Council also discussed at some length the question of eradicating corruption and improving the efficiency of public services. The Mysore Chief Minister informed the Council that a vigilance commission was being set up in his State. Other Chief Ministers also agreed to set up similar commissions in addition to the existing anti-corruption machinery.

Some of the Chief Ministers expressed the view that more drastic steps than those recommended by the Santhanam Committee (page 5790) were necessary to meet the evils of corruption effectively.

It was decided that the Zonal Councils should henceforth devote more attention to developmental activities in their respective Zones because the National Development Council, being a larger body, could devote its attention only to policy matters.

The Council decided to set up a committee consisting of the Chief Ministers of Madras, Mysore and Kerala under the chairmanship of the Central Minister for Irrigation and Power, Dr. K. L. Rao, to go into the question of utilizing waters of the west-flowing rivers in the Southern Zone.

In regard to the hydro-electric scheme known as Hogenekkal on the boundary of Mysore and Madras, Dr. Rao pointed out that mutual agreement had already been reached between the Governments of Mysore and Madras under which the cost of the project as well as the benefits will be shared by them equally.

As regards implementation of the decision of the National Integration Council on the removal of domicile restriction on admissions to technical institutions, it was decided that a percentage of seats in medical and engineering colleges should be reserved for candidates from outside the States. These admissions should be on merit and not by nomination. Reservation for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes candidates would continue and selection would be made on the basis of merit.

The Council reviewed the implementation of decisions regarding safeguards for linguistic minorities and noted that language was no longer a bar in recruitment to services.

At the instance of the Government of Pondicherry, the Government of Madras agreed to undertake in the very near future construction of a 110-kv transmission line from Panrutti to Villanur.

The Chief Ministers of Kerala and Madras agreed to issue special red sanders timber transit rules for preventing its smuggling from Andhra Pradesh and its unauthorised export from Cochin and Madras. The object is to restrict the quantity of this timber that can be kept by any one without a valid licence or permit. This is sought to be achieved by suitable amendments to the Forest Acts in the States.

S. P-SP National Conference: Addressing the seventh National Conference of the Praja-Socialist Party (P-SP) in Ramgarh on May 16, Mr. S. M. Joshi, Chairman of the Party, urged his party men to work for the unity of all genuine forces of socialism in the country to end "Congress misrule."

He said: "Ours is not a negative objective of pulling down the Congress from power, but a positive one of providing a better alternative.

"It is my conviction, that if we are to do our duty to the country and the people of India, our place is not within the Congress.

"We must not spare efforts to build a rival focus of political and moral authority to carry on our struggle against lethargy and stagnation and to prosecute a war on poverty and social inequalities.

"If we stick to our principles and stand firmly on our faith, the chances of success are good."

He said that during the past 10 years his party had neglected the "ideological training of our cadres." "Like the Congress we have also started feeling that our main job is to fight the elections and we intend to become imitators of the Congress in the matter of social values."

The rank and file of the P-SP, he said, were now convinced that the dice was so heavily loaded against them that they could not depend on elections alone to become a strong opposition, let alone a majority.

"The first and foremost task before us today is to forge mass sanctions against Congress misrule. A surging tide of an extra-parliamentary democratic socialist movement, wedded to secular nationalism, socialism and democracy, can alone release new forces for social change and provide an effective lever to dislodge the Congress from power.

"Only such a movement with its accent on mass activization can create political assets and moral resources to build a new social order in which individuals and groups would be activated to work more by a sense of social obligation than by an inherent tendency of acquisitiveness or passion for power."

Suspension Of Members:

On May 16, the P-SP National Executive suspended four members of the UP Legislature Party, all supporters of Mr. Asoke Mehta, for "anti-party activities."

The Executive confirmed the suspension of two members in Bihar, two in Madhya Pradesh and one in Maharashtra after rejecting their explanations. These five members were said to have defied the party mandate in the recent biennial elections to the Rajya Sabha and Legislative Councils.

The Executive did not take any decision on the question of the Bihar rebels, who are in a majority in the State legislature party, but left it to be handled by Mr. S. M. Joshi and Mr. Prem Bhasin.

On May 1, the Executive decided to suspend four more leaders of the Party in UP. This was announced by Mr. Prem Bhasin, General Secretary of the party, at a news conference in Patna.

The four leaders were Mr. Udit Narain Sharma, Chairman of the Parliamentary Committee, Mr. Chandrasekar Singh, M.P., Mr. Gauri Shankar Rai, Joint Secretary of the UP unit, and Mr. Om Prakash, member of the State Executive.

Mr. Bhasin said that the Executive had also decided to remove Mr. K. N. Pradhan from secretaryship of the Madhya Pradesh unit. Mr. Jamuna Prasad Singh, MLA, would take over as acting secretary.

Procedure For Merger With Socialist Party—Resolution Adopted:

On May 18, the National Conference adopted a resolution laying down the procedure for a merger with the Socialist Party "without preconditions."

Only two delegates voted against the official resolution which was adopted amidst shouts of "socialist unity zindabad." The resolution was put to the vote by the Chairman, Mr. S. M. Joshi.

Mr. H. V. Kamath's amendments were rejected by an overwhelming majority. None of his amendments was supported by more than seven delegates.

The resolution envisages the formation of a joint ad hoc committee within 15 days of the ratification of a similar resolution by the Socialist Party.

The name, the flag and the election symbol of the new party will be finally chosen by the ad hoc committee.

A committee will be set up later to draft a policy statement and draw up a constitution for the united party. The first national conference of the united party will be held by October.

The resolution authorizes the joint ad hoc committee to take the necessary steps to "secure the association of like-minded parties to further broadbase the new party and consolidate all forces of socialism and democracy in the country."

Moving the resolution, Mr. N. G. Goray, former General Secretary, said the proposed merger would symbolise the beginning of a "new era of consolidation of democratic and socialist forces which had been unfortunately divided for some years."

He hoped that other like-minded parties and individuals would strengthen socialist forces. Mr. Goray said the presence of Mr. Raj Narain, former Chairman of the Socialist Party, on the dais was indicative of socialist unity.

Election Of Office-Bearers:

On May 18, Mr. S. M. Joshi and Mr. Prem Bhasin were unanimously re-elected Chairman and General Secretary of the P-SP.

Earlier the delegates adopted a resolution amending the party's constitution reducing the number of National Executive members from 15 to 12. These 12 members, the Chairman and the General Secretary of the P-SP will be the party's representatives on the national ad hoc committee of the new party to be formed with the merger of the P-SP and Socialist Party.

Mr. H. V. Kamath was among the 12 P-SP leaders who were elected to the National Executive.

The others were Mr. S. N. Dwivedi, Mr. Hem Barua and Mr. Mukut Bihari Lal (all M.P.s), Mr. N. G. Goray (Maharashtra), Mr. Tribik Singh (UP), Mr. Basawan Singh (Bihar), Mr. Debu Bose (West Bengal), Mr. Harbhajan Singh (the Punjab), Mr. Brij Mohan Toofan (Delhi).

T. Hindu Mahasabha Session: At its annual meeting in Sholapur on May 17, the Hindu Mahasabha gave an ultimatum to the Government that if it did not take "effective steps" before August 15, 1964 to bring about an exchange of population between India and Pakistan, the party would give a call to the country to bring pressure upon the Government to do so.

Meanwhile, a resolution adopted by the session said that the Mahasabha would mobilize public opinion in favour of exchange of population as it did not regard the fate of the minorities in Pakistan as a party issue but "as a national calamity."

The Mahasabha decided to form an "Exchange of Population Front" and invited all patriotic elements in the country, irrespective of party affiliation, to join it.

The resolution said that up to August 15 the Mahasabha would launch a countrywide "vigorous campaign" for collecting signatures on the demand for the exchange of population and arouse public opinion through meetings, processions and literature. A campaign for enrolling volunteers for the action to be taken after the period of ultimatum was over, would also be carried on during this period.

The Mahasabha also demanded the re-arrest of Sheikh Abdullah and said that his release without getting his written views on Kashmir was "a political blunder."

A resolution embodying the demand said his speeches and actions after his release merely indicated that he wanted to make an effort for revoking the accession of Kashmir with India.

It said the Government itself should have no further talks with Sheikh Abdullah on the Kashmir issue inasmuch as he was not even prepared to admit himself as an Indian citizen.

It demanded that the Government should not permit Sheikh Abdullah to go to Pakistan as his visit at this juncture was "fraught with greatest danger to the integrity and security of India."

U. Rural Electrification Plan: The Central Ministry of Irrigation and Power has drawn up a Rs. 300-crore plan for extending rural electrification during the Fourth Five-Year Plan.

The programme envisages electrification of an additional 60,000 villages, bringing the number of villages electrified by 1970-71 to 1,00,000.

A recent survey made by the Ministry has estimated that for electrifying the entire rural region, an investment of the order of Rs. 2,600 crores—about Rs. 100 crores for every 20,000 villages—would be called for.

According to the survey, though rural electrification may not be justified purely on commercial considerations, it can be "the one major factor" in bringing about a revolutionary technological approach to many problems of development in rural areas.

It was estimated that by the end of the Third Plan, 31 per cent of India's population will be within electrified towns and villages.

By 1966, all towns and villages with a population exceeding 5,000 are expected to be covered.

IRAQ

A. "Provisional" Constitution Proclaimed: A "provisional" Constitution was proclaimed on May 3.

It said that Iraq was a socialist democratic State and pledged the Government to work for the creation of an Egypt-Iraqi union as a first step towards pan-Arab unity.

A 105-article Charter announced by President Abdel Salam Arif and the Premier, Mr. Taher Yahya, over Baghdad Radio proclaimed Iraq a sovereign Republic, with Islam as its religion, Arabic its official language and Baghdad its capital.

It vested all its executive power in President Arif, giving him virtually all authority to define and superintend the country's political, military and economic affairs.

He will be assisted by the National Revolutionary Council Cabinet and Supreme Defence Council.

Field-Marshal Arif was also named Supreme Commander of the armed forces, which were banned from politics or joining political parties.

The "provisional" Constitution is valid for a transitional period of three years, after which legislative powers will be transferred to a National Assembly elected by secret ballot.

During the interim period, legislative powers will be assumed by the Council of Ministers.

A special article confirmed Field-Marshal Arif as Head of State. He will retain his powers until a new President is elected under the Constitution.

The Constitution affirms that "the Iraqi people forming part of the Arab nation, has for its first goal the achievement of Arab unity with the United Arab Republic of President Nasser."

ISRAEL

A. EEC Tariff Concessions: Israel and the European Economic Community (EEC) initialled in Brussels on May 6 a three-year Trade Agreement facilitating exports from Israel to the "Six".

According to Israeli officials in Brussels, exports to the Common Market amount to $100,000,000.

The Agreement provides for tariff suspensions ranging from 20 to 40 per cent in favour of Israel.

Syrian View:

Syria on May 5 threatened that the Arab States might take measures affecting the interests of European Common Market countries "to remove the damage to which the Arab countries may be subjected as a result of Israel's association with the Market."

The threat was contained in an official statement issued by the Foreign Ministry after Mr. Rafik Asha, Secretary-General of the Ministry, had summoned the Ministers of West Germany, Italy and Holland in Damascus and the French and Belgian Charges d'Affaires and conferred with each of them for about half-an-hour.

The statement said that Mr. Asha told the five envoys the Syrian Government's point of view on the Agreement reached between the Common Market's executive commission and Israel on a trade pact to facilitate Israeli exports.

It added that Syria considered that she and the Arab States were in a state of war with Israel. "Consequently, the Syrian Foreign Ministry regards this Agreement as free aid to Israel which will enable her to consolidate her aggressive potential directed against the Arab States."

B. Historic Finds At Massada: The greatest archaeological expedition ever undertaken in Israel has come to an end with yet another scroll discovery.

Fragments of Joshua Ben-Sirah's apocryphal Book of Ecclesiasticus, written in Hebrew in a style which dates it to the first century BC, were found in the Zealot living quarters on the eastern casement wall of Massada, the site of Herod's palace and Jewish Zealots' suicidal last stand against the Romans in 73 AD.

Speaking to the Press on May 1, Professor Yigael Yadin, leader of the expedition, showed a photograph of a fragment containing about 400 words. The scroll that has been found at Massada is the earliest copy of Ecclesiasticus ever discovered, and proves that the work was originally written in Hebrew, and not in Greek as some scholars had thought. The newly discovered fragments are identical in style with one of the Hebrew manuscripts of Ecclesiasticus found in the last century in the Cairo Genizah (depository of ancient texts).

This discovery came after earlier finds of fragments of Psalms, Leviticus, Genesis and Qumran-type liturgical scrolls on Massada. The Qumran scroll was of particular interest, as it proved that the Dead Sea Scrolls had been written before the fall of Massada in 73 CE.

Prof. Yadin stated that the 6½-month season was the longest ever undertaken in Israel. A thousand volunteers spent at least two weeks at the site, two thirds of them from 32 countries abroad. Gadna Youth Corps boys and girls, over 1,000 soldiers and kibbutz youth were also employed. Altogether, the volunteers put in some 35,000 work-days, and after the first month paid workers, except for certain experts, were found to be unnecessary.

The expedition had cost I£600,000 to date and would cost a total of I£1,000,000 before it was finished during next season's excavations. A further I£1,000,000, he estimated, would be needed for the preservation of Massada, which would be carried out by the Society for the Preservation of Historic Sites.

Another notable recent find, he said, was a classical Roman bath-house with the usual four rooms—dressing-room and the tepid, cold and hot rooms. The hot room is particularly beautiful, with a raised floor supported on pillars, and square clay pipes through which the hot air escaped after it had passed under the floor.

Two coins found in the bath-house, dated about 100 CE—one of Tiberius and one inscribed Judaea Capta (Captured Judaea)—indicate that Massada was used for at least 30 years by the Romans after the Zealot stronghold fell.

Some light has been shed on the water situation at Massada with the discovery of the northern gate, named by the expedition "the water gate," which led out to several water reservoirs below. It is via this gate that water must have been carried up manually from the lower cisterns. Every building on the site has a water reservoir hewn out of the rock and well plastered. In addition, there are three public reservoirs, including a deep pool, with steps on one side, which might have been a swimming pool.

Summing up the season, Prof. Yadin said that the excavations had revealed the pattern of the casement wall. It was spaced with towers every 60 to 70 metres, as it was described by Josephus.

Prof. Yadin revealed that some 5,000 sacks of pottery fragments had been sent to Jerusalem for reconstruction. The diggers found 2,200 coins, including 20 rare silver shekels, the only ones ever found on an archaeological site. Nearly 200 ostrakons (ink inscriptions on pottery) have been found.

The general history of Massada from Chalcolithic to Byzantine times was now clear. In particular, considerable light had been shed on the Zealots' way of life, as revealed by their pottery fragments, baths, coins, habitations, equipment and even food remains.

Until November, 1964, the Society for the Preservation of Historic Sites, which has set up a Massada sub-committee, will work on preservation. The site should be open to the public by May, 1965.

C. Biblical City Excavated In Negev: The American archaeologist, Mr. Richard Mitchell, told a news conference in Berkeley (California) on May 1 that a city built about 1,500 BC had been excavated on the northern edge of the Negev desert across hillsides where men of the time of Abraham and Isaac grazed their flocks.

He said pottery, tombs, homes, animal bones and grain had been dug. In the ruins the Arabs of the Middle Ages had left a caravan station while Jews from the Iron Age, from the 10th to the 7th centuries BC had left a village. An Indo-European people called Hyksos left a wealthy, fortified city there in the 18th and 17th centuries BC.

B. Kuwait Oil Company's Report For 1963: The 1963 report of the Kuwait Oil Company (KOC), the first to be printed in Kuwait, was released early in May.

In his introduction, the Managing Director, Mr. D.E.C. Steel, reported that crude oil production at 95.7 million tons was 5.4 per cent higher than in the previous year, and that oil exports at 90.3 million tons (85.7 million tons in 1962) were also a record.

Refinery capacity has been expanded to 250,000 barrels a day. An agreement was concluded between KOC and Kuwait for the supply of surplus gas and during the year there were successful negotiations for the two KOC holding companies—BP and Gulf Oil Corporation —to become partners in the Kuwait Petrochemicals Industries Co. in a new petrochemicals project, the Kuwait Chemical Fertilizers Co. BP has also entered into partnership with a Kuwaiti company in a new enterprise, Kuwait Aviation Fuelling Co.

Mr. Steel reported that in his view, however, the most significant aspect of the work was the drilling programme with an intensified exploration effort, involving the completion of 23 exploratory or appraisal wells, and the completion of 28 development wells in the Burgan, Magwa and Ahmadi area. KOC is determined to improve the position of the company in the highly competitive condition of the world oil industry.

Two members of the expedition, Dr. Urmeyer and Mr. Huber, died of exhaustion.

The expedition was led by Rudi Rott.

This was the third expedition to reach the summit of Cho Oyu in the past 10 years, the first being an Australian in 1958 and the second an all-Indian expedition in 1958, led by the late Major Jayal.

The earliest known attempt on the peak was made by an unsuccessful British expedition in 1952. Two other unsuccessful attempts were made, one by the Swiss in 1954 and the other by an international all-women's team in 1959 led by a French mountaineer, Mme Cogan. She and three others were killed during the assault on the summit.

PAKISTAN

A. New Port On West Coast: It was officially learnt in Karachi on May 11 that a new seaport was proposed to be set up on the west coast to cope with the increasing traffic and reduce the volume of cargo at Karachi Port.

An extensive feasibility study on the entire coast from Gwadur and Pasni down to Keti Bunder in the Thatta District would soon be conducted by the authorities. Consultants were expected to be appointed within two months.

After the Monsoon season is over, a joint consultants team of local and foreign firms will start the feasibility study. Later, an economic study will be carried out to determine the total cost, the foreign exchange component and size of the project. Foreign aid is likely to be secured for the project, which according to indications will be implemented during the Third Five-Year Plan period.

According to official sources, the Central Government has been thinking on this line for a long time. The traffic and the volume of cargo at the Karachi Port has increased to an extent that in spite of the tremendous development work at the port, the problem of clearing the cargo in time and avoiding demurrage charges has not been solved altogether.

Besides, with the implementation of the Third Five-Year Plan the economic activities in the country will further gain momentum and the only port at Karachi may not be able to handle all the cargo and traffic. There is apprehension in official circles in Karachi that if timely steps are not taken for the establishment of another port on the west coast, further difficulties may have to be faced on account of the limited capacity of handling cargo and traffic at Karachi Port.

B. New Pay-Scales For Civil And Military Officials: The Central Government announced in Rawalpindi on April 21 revision of pay-scales of civil and military officials, effecting substantial increases in the salaries of the incumbents of various posts.

The new scales will have retrospective effect from December 1, 1962, but arrears will be payable with effect from July 1, 1963.

The following is the text of the announcement:

"As announced by the President in his broadcast last evening (April 21) the Government have revised the scales of pay of civilian Gazetted employees.

"The new scales will be given effect to from December 1, 1962, but arrears will be payable with effect from the beginning of the current financial year, that is July 1, 1963.

"In determining the new scales of pay Government have kept in view: (a) the objective of gradually reducing disparity between the highest and the lowest pay scales; (b) the need to attract a fair proportion of talent to Government service by offering reasonable rates of remuneration in the context of the present cost of living and availability of alternative careers in industry and commerce; and (c) the Government's limited resources and the heavy demands on those resources for economic development.

"The new scales of pay, which have been formulated after merging the cost of living allowance, where admissible, are as follows:

This will, however, not apply in the case of promotees from Class II to senior scale of Class I.

"(ii) Pay of Gazetted officers other than those covered by (i) above, drawing pay up to Rs. 600 p.m., including cost of living allowance, will be fixed in the new scale at the stage equal to, or if there is no such stage, at the next stage above, the amount arrived at by allowing an increase of 7½ per cent over the aggregate of their pre-revision pay plus C.L.A.

"In view of the rising cost of living, representations have been made to Government, on behalf of retired Government servants, for an increase in their pension. The Pay and Services Commission had also recommended certain increase in the existing pensions. After a careful consideration, the Government have decided that, up to a certain level, existing pensioners, that is, those who retired before 1.12.1962 should be given suitable relief by increasing their pensions. Such increases will be approximately to the following extent, related to pension before communication, if any:

"(i) Pensions up to Rs. 10: An increase of 100 per cent.

"(iv) Pensions from Rs. 250—500: An increase of 20 per cent down to 15 per cent subject to marginal adjustment up to Rs. 575.

"Detailed orders are being issued.

"The other recommendations of the Pay and Services Commission regarding pension rules and rates, leave rules, etc., are under consideration and decisions will be announced in due course."

These scales will not apply to the Armed Forces Nursing Service and the Medical Corps Licentiates without general service liability for whom separate new scales have been approved by the Government.

All officers in the Army, Navy and the Air Force will be fixed in the revised scales in the following manner:

(a) The pay of officers up to and including the rank of Lt-Col. and equivalent, will be fixed in the new scale at the stage appropriate to their years of service as commissioned officer. The pay of commissioned officers of the branch and ex-branch lists in the Pakistan Navy will be fixed in the new scales according to a formula, which has been devised for them.

(b) The pay of officers of the rank of Colonel, or equivalent and above, will be fixed in the new scales at the stage equal to or if there is no such stage, at the stage next above, the aggregate of their pre-revision pay, plus dearness allowance where admissible.

Mr. M. Shoaib's Statement:

The Finance Minister, Mr. Mohammed Shoaib, said in Rawalpindi on April 22 that increase in pay-scales would cost the Central Exchequer to the tune of Rs. 15 crores to Rs. 17 crores annually.

He expressed the hope that the revised pay structures would attract reasonably intelligent and hardworking young men to the Services. "Government do need some brilliant people for services and we do hope as a result of the revised scales intelligent stuff would be available in abundance."

He said that as a result of few scales ratio between the lowest and the highest paid would be reduced to one to 40. He said in pre-1963 scales the gap was to the extent of one to 286. Following implementation of the first Pay Commission recommendations in 1951 the gap was reduced to one to 45 between the lowest and the highest paid service men.

He pointed out that even in highly developed countries like Britain, the gap was one to 35.

He said the Government already had with her the "bulk" of the money needed to give effect to the increase in salaries. This money was provided in the current Budget and additional money would be provided for in the next Budget.

C. Steps For Preservation Of Antiquities: A Karachi report on May 5 said that the Archaeology Department was considering taking some stringent measures for the preservation of antiquities, including those acquired recently.

The Department is working at plans to expand its present laboratories in Lahore to a full-fledged research centre, where experiments could be made on a still larger scale on inventing new methods of preserving specimens of antiquities which react sharply to weathering and denuding agents of nature.

For the purpose, more equipment and special chemical re-agents are likely to be imported by the Department soon.

Informed sources said that the Government may soon enact legislation in the country for the preservation of antiquited and old objects.

The Department acquired some rare specimens in 1963. Some of them are a large collection of old porcelain plates, bowls, vases etc. of the Moghul period, 21 specimens of calligraphy, 35 letters of different eminent personalities, a beautiful copy of the Holy Quran transcribed in 934 AH, a private report about Delhi of the late Moghul period, two volumes of the Masnavi Maulana Rum, and 254 gold coins of the Muslim period.

Two hundred and fifty gold and 16 silver coins have been acquired from the Deputy Commissioner of Montgomery. A good number of valuable specimens have also been added in the Army Museum during the last three months.

The main donors were the British Imperial War Museum, the Canadian National Defence College, Turkey's Defence Headquarters, Libya, CENTO, Indonesia and the Sultans of the Malayan states of Kelantan and Trenggano. Some other donations were also received from the Royal United Services Institutions Museum, (UK).

Efforts are also being made to complete the Rs. 17,00,000 new building of the national museum. It is expected to be ready by December.

Meanwhile, the Karachi Museum has added yet another attraction to its already rich valuables. It is a specially prepared large iron case for a diorama depicting the arrival of Mohammad Bin Qasim who conquered Sind in the early 8th century.

PHILIPPINES

A. Israeli Assistance: The Philippines and Israel have signed a Technical Co-operation Agreement providing for Israeli assistance in community planning and development of a selected region in the Philippines.

The Agreement was signed on March 16 by the Foreign Secretary, Mr. Salvador P. Lopez and the Israeli Ambassador, Dr. Shmeul Shelef.

According to a Foreign Office announcement, the Agreement was the subject of consultations between the two Governments for almost two years.

It said: "The Agreement refers to the development of a selected region in the Philippines where experts from Israel would extend their assistance with regard to planning and settlement in which Israel has had successful experience.

"The Agreement also provides for exchange of expert teams under the principle of reciprocity, which means that the Government concerned obligates itself to shoulder the expenses of its experts, such as international travel, cost of maintenance, clothing allowance and salary.

"It is expected that the Agreement will bring the two countries closer to one another and would enable the experts of each country to get better acquainted with the people of grassroots level."

SAUDI ARABIA

A. Plan To Raise Farm Output: A Jedda message on April 27 said that about 12,000 acres of virgin, uninhabited desert land would be brought under cultivation through an agricultural development project to be started in 1964 in the Wadi Sahba area.

The 10-year project is to be carried out in two five-year stages. The total cost of the first stage, including the establishment of a 100-acre research, demonstration and training centre, will be $13 million of which the Arabian American Oil Company will provide up to $1,000,000. The Saudi Arabian Government will direct the project, originally proposed by ARAMCO, through the Ministry of Agriculture offices in Hofuf.

The production of vegetables, crops and poultry products has proved highly successful in the Qatif and Hofuf areas of the eastern province in recent years.

As a result of rapidly improving health standards in the area, the infant mortality rate is decreasing and life expectancy increasing.

B. Jet Plane Crash: A Middle East Airlines Caravelle crashed in the sea 10 miles from Dhahran airport on April 17 with 49 persons aboard.

A Royal Air Force spokesman said that there was "little hope" of finding any survivors.

An RAF rescue launch was on the scene and searching for possible survivors, who may have escaped, but the spokesman said there was no possibility of survivors in the hull, which was lying in about 18 feet of water.

The Caravelle with 42 passengers and a crew of seven was on a routine flight from Beirut to Dhahran.

In Beirut, an airline spokesman said the Caravelle's passengers comprised 23 Americans, four Lebanese, 11 Saudis, one Bahraini, one Syrian, one Jordanian and one Palestinian.

The search for the plane was hampered by a duststorm which limited visibility to 100 yards at times, and the wreckage was not located until several hours later.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Security Council Debate On Kashmir; Mr. J. Nehru On Relations With China And Pakistan; President Abboud's Visit; Foreign Debt; Economic Review.

A. Security Council Debate On Kashmir Issue: The UN Security Council met again on May 5 for a further debate on the Kashmir question.

Opening the debate, the Pakistan Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, proposed that Sheikh Mohammed Abdullah be invited to appear before the Council.

He said that the Sheikh would be able to give it information which would be of assistance in examining the question.

Mr. Bhutto was the only speaker when the Council resumed its debate on the Kashmir situation after a six-week recess.

He said: "The Sheikh's voice, silenced for more than a decade, speaks again. It echoes the demand of the people of the State (of Jammu and Kashmir) for self-determination, for plebiscite, for negotiations between India, Pakistan and the Kashmiri leaders to restore communal harmony, peace and amity between the people of the sub-continent by settling this dispute." Kashmir continued to be in a state of "ferment." The situation could not be left by United Nations to take care of itself.

He said Sheikh Abdullah was free because of the "universal and uncontrollable" will of the people and not because of any "magnanimity" shown by India. The Sheikh's release did not show any "change of heart" by India.

He said he was obliged to state that "if the Indian authorities again resort to suppression of the people of Kashmir by force, the people of Pakistan may find it extremely difficult to stand aside and may demand of their Government whatever measures are necessary for the amelioration of the situation in Indian-occupied Kashmir."

He said the "urgency of the situation" could not be appreciated unless it was remembered that there was at present not even a truce agreement between India and Pakistan over Kashmir. All that existed was the agreement embodied in the UNCIP resolutions of August 13, 1948, and January 5, 1949. The cease-fire arrangement was only a partial implementation of these resolutions.

"It has been authoritatively established by the (UN) Commission that the cease-fire order was meant to be linked (this was the exact expression used by the Commission) with a truce and with the establishment of the proper conditions for a plebiscite." If the UNCIP resolutions were regarded as obsolete by one party, then the cease-fire order also became obsolete.

Mr. M. C. Chagla's Speech:

Replying to Mr. Bhutto's speech, the leader of the Indian delegation, Mr. M. C. Chagla, told the Security Council on May 7 that it should realize that the basic question before the Council on the Kashmir issue was the Indian complaint of Pakistan's aggression and so long as it was not answered, "the Security Council will be unable to grapple with the basic elements of the Kashmir situation".

He emphasized that the Indo-Pakistani differences could only be solved by direct negotiations and without any outside intervention. "No superimposed solution will do any good."

He rejected as "totally unacceptable" Mr. Bhutto's suggestion for Sheikh Abdullah's participation in the Council proceedings and said only India and Pakistan had the right to appear before the Council. Sheikh Abdullah's statements were contemporaneous to the issues like accession, self-determination and Pakistani aggression of evidentiary value, but not his views now.

He reminded the Council that Pakistan's aggression was still the central question before them and said the Government and people of India had a grievance over the years that "most members (of the Council) have turned a blind eye to the patent fact of Pakistan's aggression."

Without mentioning Britain and USA and their allies by name, but in obvious reference to them, he said: "Members have made this suggestion and that, but the vital question brought to the Security Council has remained unanswered."

Kashmir, he said, was vital to India. "The defence of Ladakh which is north-east of Kashmir against the continuing menace of China is impossible except through Kashmir."

He indicted Pakistan for her current "greatest tight rope act in international affairs" in being a member of S-EATO and CENTO and also in the Chinese camp. He also pointed out Pakistan's role in Djakarta when she, China, and a few other countries "ganged up" to deny the Soviet Union a place in the Asian world and "refused Malaysia admittance to the (proposed) Afro-Asian conference as an Asian country" to which she had an undoubted right.

He also ridiculed Pakistan for her pretensions as an anti-colonial State and a member of the Afro-Asian family and reminded her of her "continuing warm friendship and maintenance of diplomatic, commercial and other relations with Portugal," her trade relations with the South African and Portuguese Governments and her "pro-imperialist role in the Suez crisis."

He also charged Pakistan with practising "religious apartheid" which was serious and in no way different from "racial apartheid which the Council would soon be discussing.

He said he differed from Mr. Bhutto that if the Kashmir problem was solved, the relations between India and Pakistan would become friendly. "Kashmir is not a disease, it is only the symptom of a disease and a disease much more deep-rooted. The disease has a fundamental difference in the outlook of India and Pakistan.

"India is a modern, secular, multi-communal, multi-linguistic society—Pakistan believes in a religious State in which the people would only practise one religion and in which the members of the other religions should have no place whatsoever.

"So long as Pakistan continues to remain what she is, she must keep up her religious frenzy and religious fanaticism."

He reminded Mr. Bhutto of the absence of freedom within Pakistan and the denial of the right of self-determination to the peoples of Baluchistan and Pakhtoonistan and asked him to practise at home first what he wanted to preach abroad.

He quoted from Sheikh Abdullah's contemporaneous statements on the questions of accession and self-determination in Kashmir as also some of his current utterances to rebut Mr. Bhutto's thesis.

Sheikh Abdullah's remarks or those of Mr. Jayaprakash Narayan and others had showed the extent of freedom in India, but had no other significance in democracy. "In a large country like India, the Foreign Minister will always find some people with misconceived ideas who will accept the thesis propounded by him. But has he taken the trouble to enquire what is the following these people have and whether there is the remotest possibility of their view being accepted by Parliament or by the interested section of the people?"

"A burglar who breaks into a house and takes possession of the anteroom cannot ask the owner of the house to prove his title to the remaining portion of his property while he coolly squats in that part which he has unlawfully occupied.

"Let first things come first. It will be time enough to talk of the status of Kashmir and the legality of accession after Pakistan has conformed to the elementary international ethics by withdrawing herself from a part of the country which does not belong to her."

Mr. Z. A. Bhutto's Speech:

The Security Council resumed its debate on Kashmir on May 11.

Mr. Z. A. Bhutto was the first speaker, exercising his right of reply.

He said there was a good deal of invective and vituperation in the statement of Mr. M. C. Chagla. "But my position is different. His (Chagla's) concern is to avoid a solution of the problem. My duty is to urge that a just solution be arrived at speedily."

Considering the human poignancy of the problem and the sufferings of the people of Kashmir, he could not be diverted from his path. The Indian representative enjoyed abundant freedom to vilify Pakistan and to try to confuse the Security Council, but it was "mandatory" for Pakistan to set the record straight.

"Beneath a rather transparent mask of indignation, there was a note of desperation in the speech of the Indian representative. That is understandable. It is caused by the fact that the overwhelming force of public opinion in Kashmir has removed every moral and political prop from under India's occupation of the state."

Mr. Chagla, he said, had dwelt on Pakistan's relations with China, with S-EATO and CENTO, with recent events in Djakarta, with the culture and cosmology of Pakistan. The design was obvious. It was to make a debate on Kashmir in the Security Council "so utterly confused as to choke off every constructive proposal."

Mr. Bhutto said that in his initial statement the previous week he had deliberately refrained from referring to the communal situation. The Home Ministers of India and Pakistan had met on the expulsion of Indian Muslims and he did not wish to prejudice their efforts or to inflame communal passions. The Indian representative, however, had recklessly tried to inflame these passions.

The world was aware that there had been mass killings of Muslim men, women and children in various parts of India, especially in Eastern India. "The single-mindedness with which the Indian representative set about maligning my country led him to make a charge that Pakistan was founded on the principle of religious apartheid. This attempt at guilt by association is not only a calumny but an insult to the struggle of the South African people for equality."

He said he deplored that Mr. Chagla considered the ideology of Islam to be medieval and reactionary. The caste system had as its very basis the negation of the equality of man. "If religious apartheid was involved in the creation of Pakistan, then the Muslims of the subcontinent were its victims and not its perpetrators."

He denied that there was any persecution of Christians in Pakistan. He quoted at length from newspaper reports of atrocities committed during communal disturbances in India. These reports included allegations of the murder of pregnant women and the rape of young women.

"It is a noteworthy fact of Indian political life that organized political parties exist in India with their own para-military organizations or private armies which are allowed to develop and flourish and which are dedicated to the mass expulsion of the 50-million strong Muslim minority, or to the annihilation of the Muslim minority by force and by violence."

Further Debate:

On May 12, six members of the Security Council supported India's view and emphasized the need for bilateral negotiations to settle the Kashmir dispute.

The proposal for the Secretary-General's good offices to settle the dispute was also mentioned by them, five of them supporting it in varying degrees and one, Czechoslovakia, rejecting it.

Morocco's Mr. Benhima, Ivory Coast's Mr. Arsene Assouan Usher, Norway's Mr. Sivert Nielsen, Brazil's Mr. Bernardes, Formosa's Mr. Yu-chi Hsueh and Czechoslovakia's Mr. Milos Yejvoda, addressed the Council after Mr. M. C. Chagla, India's Education Minister had replied to Pakistan's Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto.

Mr. Chagla told the Council that the Kashmir question, as indeed all other outstanding differences between the two countries, could be solved only by bilateral talks between India and Pakistan and by creation of an atmosphere conducive to such a settlement. If the Council was interested in the maintenance of peace and international relations, it should avoid any super-imposed solution upon Pakistan and India or any intervention in any talks or discussions they might have with each other.

He said: "The Kashmir question will not be solved by interminable discussions and debate in this Council. It will be solved only when Pakistan realises that Kashmir is not a political shuttle-cock in the game of anti-Indian politics which she has adopted.

"The Kashmir question will be solved when Pakistan realises that India wishes her well, has no designs on her independence and that in the prosperity of the two countries lies the prosperity of the whole sub-continent. In this prosperity the people of Kashmir must have a share as an integral part of India."

He denied that India had given up the policy of non-alignment because of China's "treacherous attack."

It was to the credit of Western Powers, he said, that they gave India military assistance because they realised India's cause was just and "we are victims of a naked aggression."

"In obtaining this assistance from them we entered into no military pact with them. And we did not receive the assistance merely from the Western Powers. The Soviet Union, making it clear that the border dispute between India and China should have been settled by peaceful means and not by war which China had unjustifiably waged on India, also gave us assistance. It was only Pakistan, our dear neighbour, who not only did not come to our assistance but did her utmost to prevent the Western countries from coming to our rescue. She did more. She carried on a violent propaganda in the chancelleries of the world against India and justified the Chinese attack on our country.

"I feel more and more that these debates on Kashmir are only exercises in futility. They lead nowhere and come to no conclusions.

"We have taken up the stand from the beginning that this meeting is both unnecessary and extremely untimely. When the two Home Ministers of India and Pakistan are busy carrying on talks for the restoration of communal harmony, I have no doubt the debate here, far from helping them, will only make their task more difficult and aggravate the situation prevailing in the two countries.

He said that Mr. Bhutto had made the charge that it was India who made it impossible to create such an atmosphere. "The facts speak differently. Our President made an appeal to the President of Pakistan and our Prime Minister from his sick bed made a similar appeal. Both the appeals were turned down with scant courtesy and even the talks now going on between the two Home Ministers were at the initiative of our Prime Minister.

"The representative of Pakistan insisted on coming to this Council on flimsy charges to re-open the Kashmir question and, even after full and complete statements had been made by both sides, insisted on resuming the debate which is now going on.

"Lest the memories be short, let me remind the members of the Council that it was our Prime Minister who appealed to President Ayub Khan to enter into a 'no war' declaration which would emphasize peaceful intentions of both countries. The offer was rejected."

He denied that he had attacked Islam in his description of Pakistan's policies. "Our objection is not that the people of Pakistan are Muslims. Our objection is that the policy of the Government of Pakistan is entirely un-Islamic.... Hatred of India, persecution of her minorities, the perpetual cry of a holy war against my country are not precepts which Islam proclaims.

"In our own country 50 millions practise Islam freely and without any hindrance. I am conscious of the great principles for which that religion stands—social equality, human dignity, tolerance and the value that every individual soul has in the eye of God.

"There are many Muslim countries in the world which have non-Muslims living in them. The non-Muslims look upon themselves as citizens with loyalty to that country just as much as the Muslims do. There is complete harmony in those countries and the non-Muslim religions are respected and receive complete toleration.

"Pakistan of late has been sending many delegations to different countries in the world. It would be worth while to send a delegation to these Muslim countries to find out the principles of Islam applied in governance of these countries.

"The Pakistan representative had made an appeal to my people to transform the climate of our two countries. I have no doubt in my own mind that the peoples of Pakistan and India have no quarrels and that they want to live in peace and amity.

"After all, only 17 years ago the people of Pakistan were also the people of India. Ethnically and culturally they are the same. Millions in my country speak a language which is the official language of Pakistan.

"The history of Pakistan does not commence from 1947. It goes back to thousands of years as does the history of India. The people of Pakistan have as much right as the people of India to take pride in the great civilization that India has developed. When Mr. Habibullah, the Home Minister of Pakistan, came to India he often talked of the old days when he had fought under Mahatma Gandhi and Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, another great fighter for independence in the old days. The trouble with the Foreign Minister of Pakistan is that he is too young either to have participated in the freedom struggle or even remembered it."

He rejected charges that India intended to "annihilate or expel" the 50 million Muslims in the country.

On the communal policies of the Indian and Pakistani Governments, he drew an analogy between USA and South Africa. There was racial discrimination, but it was not the official policy as in South Africa.

"We have communal troubles and disturbances, but our official policy, which we pursue with unflinching tenacity, is secularism and communal harmony.

"Pakistan's official policy, on the other hand, as witnessed by statements made by her responsible leaders and her Press to which I made references in my previous statements, is open hostility to the minorities residing within her territories."

On the proposed invitation to Sheikh Abdullah he said: "Sheikh Abdullah occupies no official position in Kashmir and it would be a most dangerous precedent for this Council to lay down that any citizen in a country who holds dissident opinion or belongs to an Opposition party should have the right of audience here.

"In Kashmir itself there are various parties. If Sheikh Abdullah is to be called then representatives of all these parties should also be called and why not the representative of 50 million Indian Muslims who have a vital stake in the future of Kashmir. The representative of Pakistan says that the whole of Kashmir is behind Sheikh Abdullah.

"Where does he get this fact? Is this his inference from the demonstrations held in favour of Sheikh Abdullah? Has he obtained the figures of the number of people who took part in these demonstrations? Is he satisfied that the only demonstrations that take place in Kashmir are in favour of Sheikh Abdullah?"

The Indian Government was "emphatically opposed to an invitation being extended to Sheikh Abdullah to appear before this Council."

Mr. Ahmed Benhima (Morocco) suggested that the Council make an appeal to the two parties to resume negotiations on a commonly agreed basis, with the good offices of the UN Secretary-General, U Thant. If the Council was willing, Morocco would be ready to examine the manner in which such a mission would be carried out and its scope.

Mr. Arsene Assouan Usher (Ivory Coast) urged India and Pakistan to resume direct negotiations on the Kashmir issue and said that the Secretary-General should help ensure their success. "Fresh facts" including the release of Sheikh Abdullah made it necessary to seek a solution along these lines.

Mr. Sivert Nielsen (Norway) also endorsed bilateral negotiations with the assistance of the Secretary-General. Both parties had repeated their confidence in him. He said there had been some recent developments which led him to believe the situation had "improved."

Mr. Yu-chi Hsueh (KMT) supported the proposal for U Thant to use his good offices to help settle the dispute.

Senhor Carlos Alfredo Bernardes (Brazil) expressed the belief that a final and lasting solution "can only be found by the parties concerned, taking into account the wishes of the people of the area. The present situation required friendly pressure on the two member-States" by United Nations so that they might put aside the "emotional attitudes" that had marked the dispute.

Mr. Milos Vejvoda (Czechoslovakia) said direct discussions between India and Pakistan were the only "useful and beneficial" way to approach the problem.

He supported India's stand that it would not help to have a "third element" in the bilateral talks. The two parties involved knew the problem best and should seek a solution themselves.

He declared that it would be "inappropriate" for an individual such as Sheikh Abdullah to be invited to appear before the Council, as was suggested by Pakistan.

The United States endorsed the idea of a "good offices" role for the Secretary-General, U Thant in the Kashmir dispute.

Mr. Francis Plimpton, deputy US delegate told the Security Council: "My Government fully shares the view expressed by other delegations as to the role of the Secretary-General, and we join in the belief that the Security Council should call upon him to assist the parties in ways that they may deem appropriate. It is now for the parties to the dispute to come to grips with the substance of the issue and to reach a solution reasonably satisfactory to all, with such assistance from the Secretary-General as may be useful."

Dr. Renkn Castrillo Justiniano (Bolivia) said the Security Council must not impose a decision which might lead to a rejection by either party. Experience had shown that any resolution was impractical and could not be implemented if the parties concerned were not willing to accept it.

Mr. Roger Seydoux, speaking for France, suggested, however, that the parties should keep the Secretary-General informed who, in turn, should inform the Council so that, if necessary, the Council could give advice about the negotiations. India has already made it clear that such an approach would be difficult as it would impede the negotiations and would amount to intervention.

Sir Patrick Dean (Britain) called upon the Council to encourage the parties to continue consultations now in train in order to reach an "honourable solution satisfactory to the people of India and Pakistan including, of course, the people of Kashmir themselves".

He urged the two countries to seek U Thant's assistance "if at any stage they believe a degree of outside influence would be helpful. The Kashmir dispute remains of concern to the UN as a whole, but if the parties most directly concerned, including the people of Kashmir, reach a mutually acceptable conclusion, it will have the whole-hearted endorsement of my Government and, I would expect, of the Security Council".

The Soviet delegate, Mr. Nikolai Fedorenko said the dispute should be solved by India and Pakistan themselves by means of discussions between them, particularly when a normal and tranquil situation had been created towards that end.

Pointing out that the question of Kashmir "joining one side or the other has already been solved by the people of Kashmir themselves", he said: "Of course, if we are realistic we must not close our eyes to the fact that there are differences between India and Pakistan and serious friction, particularly in connexion with the Kashmir question.

"It seems to us, therefore, particularly important that in such questions which are in dispute between two interested parties nothing should be done which might worsen relations between them and which might entail disruption of their efforts."

He said the Council should do everything in its power to create a favourable atmosphere for bilateral talks. This was not only the duty of the Council but, as events showed, the only way of solving the problem.

No Decision Reached—Council Adjourns:

The Security Council adjourned its debate on Kashmir sine die on May 18 without coming to any conclusions after hearing a summing-up by the President, Mr. Roger Seydoux (France).

Mr. Chagla said India was not bound by the President's summing-up and called for bilateral talks. He also objected to outside interference, saying that U Thant, the UN Secretary-General, would be welcome to his country as an honoured guest and not as a third party to evolve a solution. Kashmir, he declared, was part of India.

Mr. Z. A. Bhutto said the debate had only ended "for the time being" and indicated that Pakistan may again come up before the Council. He also criticised India's opposition to inviting Sheikh Abdullah to UN.

The Council wound up its consideration of the question with a statement by the President which avoided making any conclusion.

In summing up, Mr. Seydoux said the Council members had expressed concern that the two countries should establish good relations between them and that the dispute should be amicably settled.

"At the end of the meeting of May 14, the Council saw fit to follow the proposal of the representative of Brazil, supported by the representative of Norway, to entrust me with the duties of trying to draw conclusions. In my mind, and I believe in the minds of my colleagues, this was a question of considering the possibility of drawing common conclusions to which all members of the Council could agree. I tried to carry out this task in consultation with all members and today we were forced to realise that despite the efforts made, we were unable to arrive at a complete agreement.

"On one of the important points in the discussion, unity was not possible. The President of the Council is unable to draw an overall conclusion and, therefore, must limit himself in the first part of his report to referring to the points where no differences of opinion have been noted in the position of the members of the Council and, in the second part of the report, the different trends that were expressed on other points.

"(1) (a) The members of the Council noted that the debate held this past week followed the discussions of February and March of this year on the question of Jammu and Kashmir. They recalled that, particularly in the course of the month of February, they had expressed the views of their Governments on the basic facts pertaining to the problem, including the pertinent resolutions of the United Nations, the question of the juridical status of Jammu and Kashmir and the principles of the Charter applicable to the case. They re-affirmed that the statements they made at that time still remained valid.

"(b) Members of the Council expressed their concern regarding two great countries who, should establish good relations between themselves, and that the dispute between them at present, particularly with regard to that aspect dealing with Jammu and Kashmir, should be amicably settled in the interests of world peace.

"(c) Members of the Council expressed the feelings that recent developments might lead to a softening of the positions adopted, better mutual understanding and, therefore, to a situation wherein conversations among the parties concerned would have a better chance of leading to a settlement.

"(d) Members of the Council expressed their conviction that everything should be done to consolidate these favourable elements and also to avoid jeopardizing these advantages. This will require from the parties concerned an attitude of conciliation and moderation, and on the part of the United Nations an attitude of prudence and also of careful and vigilant attention.

"(e) Members of the Council expressed the hope that the two parties will abstain from any act which might aggravate the situation and that they will take such measures as to re-establish an atmosphere of moderation between the countries and also peace and harmony among the peoples.

"(f) Members of the Council expressed the hope that in the light of the recent debates held the two countries concerned will resume contact as soon as possible in order, by negotiation, to solve their differences and particularly that touching on Jammu and Kashmir.

"(2) (a) Several of the members of the Council expressed the view that the Secretary-General of the United Nations could, if possible, give useful assistance to the parties, to facilitate the resumption of negotiations on the problem of Jammu and Kashmir or to assist them in carrying out these negotiations if the negotiations met with any difficulties.

"(b) Other members of the Council, on the other hand, expressed the feeling that the negotiations between India and Pakistan might be complicated by the intervention of any outside elements and that the matter should be left to the parties to come to an agreement on the very principle of appealing to or turning to the Secretary-General.

"(c) The Indo-Pakistan question would remain on the agenda of the Security Council".

Mr. M. C. Chagla's News Conference:

Mr. M. C. Chagla, who returned to Bombay on May 20, told newsmen that nothing had come out of the Kashmir debate as anticipated by Mr. Z. A. Bhutto.

The Security Council meeting, he added, was "unnecessary, untimely, unrealistic, and an exercise in futility."

"Of course there has been a further shift in our favour. Last time an attempt was made at a resolution or consensus. This time it was neither a resolution nor a consensus, but only a summing-up. And summing-up meant that the President of the Security Council made a statement on the facts of the debate."

He said that Mr. Bhutto had failed to establish the ground on which he sought the Council meeting, namely, (1) Kashmir was in open revolt, and (2) India was trying to integrate Kashmir. "Kashmir is already integrated and there is no question of any further integration." There was also no trace of evidence that Kashmir was in open revolt.

Another important feature of the debate in India's favour, he said, was that hardly anybody spoke of the old resolutions or of self-determination. The emphasis was on the better situation prevailing in India and the fact that the Home Ministers of India and Pakistan were going to continue their talks and that Sheikh Abdullah was released and was having talks with the Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru.

He said that some members wanted the Secretary-General to be injected into the Kashmir affair, but the majority was of the view that it should be done only with the consent of the parties. India's view was that it would be wrong in principle for the Secretary-General to intervene unless his assistance was sought by the parties.

He pointed out that Mr. Bhutto's suggestion to invite Sheikh Abdullah to the Council was not even referred to by the Council President. No member attached any importance to it.

B. Relations With China And Pakistan—Mr. J. Nehru's TV Interview: In a television interview filmed and recorded in New Delhi and shown in New York on May 18 on the national educational television programme, the Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru said that he frankly did not like the trade contacts of some of the Western countries with China. "I do not want the Chinese to die of hunger... But I do not want any war material to go to them from other places."

The one-hour feature was entitled "The Essential Nehru", and the interviewer was Mr. Arnold Michaelis.

About the Chinese threat, he said that having regard to the distance of China's frontiers with India—from central China and through Tibet—the Chinese had a logistic problem. India too had a difficult terrain but had not far to go. "So we can defend ourselves. We do not intend to invade China. That is entirely opposed to our thinking. But we can stop them from coming into India."

India would have to deal with the Chinese problem "by strengthening ourselves to avoid a collision and to meet it when it comes."

On Kashmir, he said the result of expression of opinion there on the basis of religion would be "disastrous, in Kashmir itself, and in the rest of India." He felt war between India and Pakistan was unthinkable, and in the long run the political tension between the two countries would go down and they would be able to reach a settlement.

He denied there was any element of personal enmity between President Ayub Khan and himself. "I have none, but he has recently said many times that I am coming in the way of India and Pakistan being together, co-operating."

If the people of Kashmir vote on the basis of religion "then the people of the other religion will be pushed out, or will be afraid of continuing there. There will be migrations, as there originally were between India and Pakistan. And that would create trouble in both countries.

"If the division were to take place—Hindu and Muslim—then the Muslims in the numerous villages in India, towns and villages, will feel rather unhappy. They won't feel full citizens of India."

Asked about India's relations with Pakistan, he re-iterated India's 'no-war declaration' offer, and said while this would not solve problems, it would produce a better atmosphere.

On "other grave difficulties" India faced, "Pakistan has allied itself more or less with China, Pakistan has close associations with China, and in the frontier Treaty that they have made with China they have agreed to a portion of Kashmir, west of Ladakh, being handed over to China which they had no business to do. If, according to them, Kashmir is still unsettled they have no business to do that."

Armed conflict between India and Pakistan would have "very grave repercussions" and he hoped it would not happen. President Ayub Khan had also said this sometimes, but Pakistan's whole mentality was based on "fear and hatred of India." "... I think President Ayub said some place he is sorry he did not take advantage of the moment of the Chinese invasion of India to attack India. Yet Pakistan being what it is, India and Pakistan have to be friends, have to co-operate as independent countries because, remember, throughout history the area that is Pakistan, much of it, was not a separate country. South India was, but north India, geographically, historically, linguistically—they have the same language as we have here. There are so many common things. And it is just foolish for this tension to continue between the two of us."

Asked about China's "superiority complex" and its increasing strength, and whether the Prime Minister thought USA and the Soviet Union, along with India, would be able to "contain" China, he said: "I can't say or look far into the future, but they are dangerous from that point of view. And I suppose the immediate problem is one of food for their people—to get food from Australia, Canada and other places, and their population is increasing at a rapid rate—more rapid than ours. That is a problem for us, but much more so for them. And possibly these difficulties will make them more peaceful."

India, he said, still favoured China's admission to UN, in spite of all this "because I think their isolation.... first of all you can't have disarmament or any agreement on disarmament or any other major issue with China out of it. And I suppose they will tone down somewhat in the future, especially if they are in UN."

In the field of nuclear technology and power India was perhaps more advanced than China, but India had decided against going in for nuclear arms. We are determined not to use nuclear weapons for war purposes. We do not make atomic bombs. I do not think we will."

It would be "anybody's guess" as to what would happen if China acquired nuclear weapons. "Anyhow, that will take a long time, even if it got one originally to begin with. It would have to have them in sufficient quantities and that would take many, many years."

C. President Ibrahim Abboud's Visit: President Ibrahim Abboud of Sudan was accorded a warm welcome on his arrival in New Delhi on May 20 on a State visit.

Welcoming him at the airport, the President, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan praised President Abboud for his efforts at UN to achieve peace. Under his wise guidance and administration, Sudan was moving towards a stable, progressive and prosperous State.

Significantly, Dr. Radhakrishnan also referred to the visiting President's efforts to "integrate" the two major communities in his country—the Africans and Arabs. The confluence of the two rivers—the Blue Nile and the White Nile—in Sudan was indicative of the meeting of the two peoples of the land.

President Abboud said in his reply that he was happy to be back in India—which he had visited 10 years ago—to see for himself the rapid progress made in the country during this period.

Sudan and India were bound by historic ties as well as by common objectives and mutual co-operation at "all levels". He hoped that his present visit would "open a new page" in the relations between the two countries.

He was given a 21-gun salute and a combined guard of honour by units drawn from the three Services. He and his party of 21 travelled in a Sudan Airways plane from China where they had gone on a similar visit.

His party included Maj-Gen. Mohammed Talaat Farid, Minister of Education and Instruction; Maj-Gen. Hassan Bechir Nasar, Deputy C-in-C and Minister of State for Cabinet Affairs; Maj-Gen. el Magbul el Amin al Hag, Minister of Commerce, Industry and Supply; and Syed Ahmed Kheir, Minister of Foreign Affairs.

State Banquet:

Speaking at a State banquet given by him in honour of President Abboud the same night (May 20), Dr. Radhakrishnan praised Sudan's efforts to create a climate of peace and understanding in the world.

He said: "Humanity binds us all together and the differences which divide nations today must be regarded as more or less contingent and arbitrary."

He referred to Sudan's efforts in this direction at the Bandung and Belgrade Conferences and at Accra where, he said, Sudan attempted to achieve African unity, "unity of Africa, of States and of the Arab States too, the whole Africa to be welded together into a common whole."

In his reply, President Abboud expressed his Government's firm belief in the policy of non-alignment and said that it had served and "still serves" as a principle of unity in a divided world.

Civic Reception:

On May 21, President Abboud was given a warm reception by the citizens of Delhi.

He was presented with an ivory elephant bridge by the Mayor, Bawa Bachitter Singh.

In his welcome address, the Mayor said President Abboud's visit to India would strengthen and cement the friendly relations between the two countries.

He said President Abboud's contribution to the consolidation of Sudan's freedom and the promotion of Arab unity was significant.

President Abboud said in reply that he and his party were touched by the warmth of the welcome on his arrival at Palam airport and at the Red Fort.

Delhi, he said, was a source of inspiration because of its rich heritage, its remarkable architecture, towering minarets and gigantic forts.

Banquet Given By President Abboud:

At a banquet he gave in honour of Dr. S. Radhakrishnan on May 21, President Abboud said that his visit would open new avenues of mutual co-operation between Sudan and India.

He said: "The complete understanding in the exchange of views in all matters that concern our two countries has strengthened my conviction that this visit will open new avenues of mutual co-operation and thereby promote traditional and friendly relations at all levels."

He added that India deserved praise for her development plans and stated: "We are sure that India will soon take her prominent position among the highly developed countries."

Dr. Radhakrishnan said that India noted with special gratification the support Sudan gave in her conflict with China in 1962. "You spoke in very unambiguous terms of your moral sympathy and support for us. We appreciate that very much."

Joint Communique:

A joint communique issued on May 24 at the end of the four-day State visit of President Abboud clearly upheld India's stand on the border dispute with China and its secular approach to the Kashmir question.

President Abboud and the Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru, re-affirmed the principle of respect for the territorial integrity and sovereignty of States and declared that "the historic and well-defined boundaries of States were firm and inviolable."

Condemning the use of force in settling territorial disputes, they stressed that if aggression was committed in pursuit of territorial aims, its fruits must be denied to the aggressor.

They also deplored the misuse of religion for political ends and noted with gratification that both India and Sudan followed a policy of secularism, guaranteeing freedom of worship and equality of status under the law to all their citizens.

This emphasis on secularism in the joint communique was all the more significant in the context of Pakistan's President Ayub Khan's failure to persuade the Sudanese leader to subscribe to a similar declaration at the end of his Pakistan visit suggesting a Kashmir settlement on the basis of the UN resolutions on the subject which meant a plebiscite.

The communique also highlighted the identity of views between India and Sudan on issues like the Moscow test ban Treaty, disarmament, non-alignment and colonialism. The discussions between President Abboud and Mr. Nehru on the current international situation had confirmed, the communique pointed out, a wide community of interests and similarity of approach between the two countries towards world problems.

President Abboud paid a glowing tribute to India's role as the torch-bearer of liberation movements in all parts of the world under Mahatma Gandhi's inspiration and her contribution to world peace and the concept of non-alignment. Mr. Nehru, in turn, expressed India's high appreciation of Sudan's special position as a bridge between the Arab countries and the countries of Africa and paid a special tribute to President Abboud's positive role in the promotion of understanding and amity between the African States.

He re-iterated India's support for the just claims of the Arab countries to the waters of the Jordan River and for the rights of the Palestinian refugees wishing to return to their former homes. He also welcomed the dynamic and progressive developments on the African continent and the enunciation of the concept of African unity at the summit conference of African Heads of State and Government held in 1963. He described the conference as a momentous and historic development signifying the emergence of Africa as a powerful new factor in promoting peace and international co-operation.

President Abboud and Mr. Nehru condemned the continuance of colonialism and racial discrimination in Africa and declared that the denial of freedom and fundamental rights to the people of Angola and Mozambique and to the African people in South Africa was wholly contrary to the UN Charter and the repeated resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Security Council. They also expressed their full support to the freedom movements in Southern Rhodesia and in Aden and South Arabia.

They noted with satisfaction the development of closer economic ties between the two countries in recent years. The joint communique announced that India had offered a credit of Rs. 5 crores to Sudan for the purchase of Indian machinery, chemicals, pharmaceuticals and other products. India had also undertaken to import additional quantities of Sudan cotton.

Mr. Nehru informed the Sudanese President that India would be very happy to extend scientific and technical co-operation in starting new industries in Sudan.

Farewell Message:

He was seen off at the airport by the President, Dr. Radhakrishnan, and the Vice-President, Dr. Zakir Hussain.

In a message of thanks sent from his aircraft to President Radhakrishnan, President Abboud said: "Upon leaving Delhi airport after a most enjoyable visit to your country it gives me pleasure to express to Your Excellency, His Excellency the Vice-President of India, His Excellency the Prime Minister on my own behalf and that of my companions our gratitude and appreciation for the warm welcome accorded us and hospitality shown to us wherever we went inside and outside Delhi. We wish you all the best of health and the people of India prosperity and progress under your wise guidance.

"Nine years ago I visited this country, I am very pleased to notice that the Government and people of India are marching towards progress with a good plan for the benefit of the people.

"I talked about so many issues with leaders and officials of the Government of India and I am happy that there is good understanding of these issues.

"I visited various centres in India and was pleased to see various projects. I am also pleased to notice that the work on various projects is going on very well.

"I wish all progress for this country and to India-Sudan friendship and success to the people of India as a whole."

I. Economic Review: In a half-yearly review of the economic situation submitted to the Government, the Planning Commission said on May 23 that "the signs of imbalance in the economy" visible in the first quarter of 1963 "continued to persist" between July and December.

The dominant contributory factors were decline in availability of certain agricultural commodities and "the developing pressure from the demand side resulting from the stepping up of development and defence outlay."

The review said that the rise in prices, especially in vital sectors like foodgrains and industrial raw materials, gathered momentum in December, 1963. This was contrary to the usual seasonal trend. The impact was also felt on the consumer price index, which moved from 132 in June, 1963 to 140 in December, 1963.

Agricultural production declined by 3.3 per cent from the previous year. The output of rice was down from 34 million tons to 31.5 million tons. Wheat came down by 7.5 per cent and barley by 21.5 per cent.

Compared to farm production, industrial output showed recovery. The average monthly index for the first 10 months of 1963 was higher by 8.7 per cent as compared with the same period in 1962. The growth in 1962 over 1961 was 6.7 per cent. But this was substantially below the rate of 11 per cent, envisaged in the Third Plan.

The review also gave some account of the borrowings from the Reserve Bank of India. It said that despite the liberalization of the Reserve Bank's lending policy, borrowings were lower at Rs. 6 crores during the quarter October-December, 1963 than Rs. 16 crores during the corresponding quarter of the previous year.

As regards financial resources, it said certain States were experiencing difficulties in raising resources on the scale postulated in the Plan. The conference of State Finance Ministers in November, 1963 discussed problems relating to sales-tax collections, market borrowings, provision for debt redemption, property tax, returns on investments in irrigation projects and electricity rates.

Small savings collections had increased. As against Rs. 31.45 crores collected up to December, 1963, the total collections in the corresponding period in 1963 amounted to Rs. 70.04 crores. As against the Budget estimate of Rs. 105 crores the present estimate is Rs. 120 crores.

Foreign exchange resources stood at Rs. 209.13 crores as against Rs. 202.23 crores in July, 1963.

During the period July to November, 1963, 368 licences for the establishment of new industrial undertakings, substantial expansion, manufacture of new items and change of location of units were issued. Of these 107 were for the establishment of new undertakings.

The total value of applications approved by the Capital Goods Committee during the quarter October-December, 1963 for the import of capital goods amounted to about Rs. 146 crores.

J. Industrial Growth During 1963: Industrial growth, which had slowed down during the first two years of the Third Five-Year Plan, picked up some pace in 1963, particularly in the latter half of the year.

The index of industrial production with 1956 as the base year appreciated by 10 per cent to 164.8 in 1963 compared to 149.8 of 1962 and 139.3 of 1961. The percentage increases in the industrial growth in 1961 and 1962 worked out to 6.99 and 7.54 respectively.

However, it should be noted that the pace of industrial expansion still lags behind the growth rate of 14 per cent on an average or 11 per cent compound rate envisaged in the Third Plan. At the present rate of growth, by the end of the Plan period the index will reach the level of 200 against the targeted level of 221.

Consumer goods industries continued to display sluggish growth and there were even declines in many cases. On the other hand, capital and producer goods industries have been showing signs of a rapid growth. The automobile and sugar machinery industries are notable exceptions to this trend.

The percentage rise in the index of mining and quarrying dropped from 9.59 in 1962 to 9.05 in 1963. The index stood at 175.9 in 1963 against 161.3 in 1962 and 147.3 in 1961. The growth rate for the Third Plan works out to 9.40 per cent per annum against 6.40 per cent during the previous ten years of planning.

The manufacturing index improved from 145.8 in 1962 to 160.1 in 1963, showing an increase of 9.81 per cent. The rise was of the order of 7.13 per cent in 1962 and of 6.41 per cent in 1961. The annual average growth rate for the last three years works out to 8.30 per cent, which is still slightly less than that of 8.50 per cent in the first two Plan periods.

Against a decline in the percentage increase in 1962 compared with that in 1961, the index of electricity generated showed a rise at 14.91 in 1963. It was 12.37 per cent in 1962 and 16.26 per cent in 1961. The index moved up from 198.8 in 1961 to 223.4 in the following year and to 256.7 in 1963.

K. Sugar Prices Revised: The Central Government on May 22 revised ex-factory prices of sugar with immediate effect. Except in the case of factories in Lucknow Division of UP, Gujerat and Orissa, where the prices were reduced, the revision is upwards.

A Press Note explained that when ex-factory prices for the current year were fixed in November, 1963, it was decided to review them about the close of the crushing operations in the light of the actual duration of the season and the recovery of sugar.

The extent of the revision is as follows:

(a) Increase by Re. 1 per quintal in the case of factories in Maharashtra, Andhra Pradesh, Madras, Mysore, Pondicherry and Kerala.

(b) Decrease in the case of factories in Lucknow Division and in Gujerat by Rs. 2 per quintal and in Orissa by Rs. 2.50 per quintal;

(c) In other areas generally the increase varies between Rs. 2 and Rs. 14.50 per quintal.

The prices to be paid by consumers will go up or come down at least in proportion to the revision of ex-factory prices.

The maximum increase in ex-factory prices was done in the case of sugar produced in Rajasthan. The revised price is Rs. 138 per quintal as against the previous price of Rs. 116. It was, however, stated that there would not be any corresponding increase in the retail price in Rajasthan as the State relies mostly on sugar imported from other States at relatively cheaper rates. The local price would be pooled with the price of imported sugar in fixing the retail price.

N. Prehistoric Site Excavated In UP: It was reported on May 20 that a prehistoric site had been excavated by a team of history students at Atranji, in Khera village of Etah district in UP.

The excavations have revealed shreds of ochre pottery dating back to 2,000 BC. Considerable evidence has also been found of the Mauryan, Shung-Kushana, Gupta and Mediaeval periods.

The excavations have revealed a large number of animal and human figurines. One of the figurines shows the head of an Iranian noble with two ram-horns on the forehead. Another depicts a human head with long drooping ears.

A number of iron implements and arms have also been excavated which shows that the Aryan settlers made extensive use of iron.

Atranji Khera finds reference in the works of the Chinese traveller, Hieun-Tsang. The Ain-i-Akbari describes it as Sikhandarpur-Atranji. In certain accounts it is referred to as Vranji and Vranja.

ISRAEL

A. Zionists' Offer To King Ibn Saud—Secret Documents Revealed: According to hitherto secret documents published in Washington on May 17, Dr. Chaim Weizmann, the Zionist leader offered King Ibn Saud of Saudi Arabia £20,000,000 in 1940 in connexion with his hopes of establishing a Jewish State in Palestine.

King Ibn Saud had said that the intermediary was Mr. H. St. John Philby, the British orientalist, and that he had been told that President Roosevelt would guarantee the payment.

President Roosevelt, who learned about the affair when he tried to arrange a meeting between Dr. Weizmann and King Ibn Saud in 1943, angrily denied having anything to do with such a transaction. Mr. Roosevelt's emissary to the King was Lieutenant-Colonel Harold B. Hoskins, whose instructions to sound out the possibility of a meeting had been cleared with Mr. Winston Churchill and Mr. Anthony Eden, the British Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary at the time.

The documents now published, Foreign Relations of the United States, 1943, Volume 4, The Near East and Africa, contained Colonel Hoskin's memorandum on his conversation with King Ibn Saud. He quotes the King as saying that he was so incensed at the offer made him and at the inclusion of President Roosevelt's name in such a shameful matter that he had never mentioned it again until then.

Colonel Hoskins went on to say in his memorandum: "The conclusion, it seems quite clear from my visit to Riyadh is that His Majesty's silence in regard to Dr. Weizmann's proposal, put to him by Philby, has been completely misinterpreted by certain British officials as implying a possible willingness on the part of the King to consider the proposal."

Upon returning to Washington, Colonel Hoskins saw the President, who expressed understanding of the King's refusal to meet Dr. Weizmann under the circumstances and said there was no basis in fact for having brought his name into the proposal.

"The only suggestion that the President had ever made that even bordered on this subject was, he said, in a talk that he had had with Dr. Wise (the American Zionist) several years ago in which he had suggested that if the Jews wished to get more land in Palestine they might well think of buying arable land outside of Palestine and assisting Arabs, financially, to move from Palestine to such places."

At this time, in September, 1943, President Roosevelt had hopes of turning Palestine into a real Holy Land for all three religions, with a Jew, a Christian, and a Muslim as the three responsible trustees. He told Colonel Hoskins that he realized it might be difficult to get Jewish agreement to such a plan, but that if the other two religions were agreed he hoped the Jews might accept it.

In response to this idea the State Department prepared a plan under which Britain would continue to operate the mandate, the conception of preparation for independence would be abandoned until a more propitious time, and basic responsibility for the country would be removed from the League of Nations. A body consisting of three Christians, two Muslims, and one Jew (reflecting the numbers of each faith in the world) would take over this responsibility and Britain would report to it. Colonel Hoskins later went to London to report in full to the British Government, noting on his return that Britain inclined towards partition as a solution.

The documents also dealt with Anglo-American friction over policy towards India, Iran, and Greece, underlying which was the American suspicion that Britain intended to preserve her empire after the War. In 1943, for example, when Mahatma Gandhi was conducting a "fast unto capacity" in a British prison in Poona, President Roosevelt intervened strongly on his behalf. He said that the Indian leader must not be allowed to die in gaol. The message was relayed to Lord Linlithgow, the Viceroy, by Mr. William Phillips, the President's special representative who gloomily reported the Viceroy's reply.

"All of his Governors, members of the British Indian Civil Service, and his police were unanimous in feeling that they had the situation in hand. They faced with equanimity the possibility of Gandhi's death although, personally, he believed that Gandhi would survive the 21 days. Should he die, however, the Viceroy recognizes that there will be a certain amount of trouble to cope with, but at the end of six months he believes this would pass and the atmosphere would become cleared and progress made easier. Gandhi, he said, had always sabotaged all efforts made by the British Government."

The State Department had prepared a statement for issue in the event of Gandhi's death which would emphasize that American troops were not in India for any reason except to protect the country against Japan. Mr. Phillips believed at the time that Mr. Churchill was firmly opposed to transferring any power to an Indian Government either before or after the War and he felt that the Viceroy was a "chip off the old block" that Americans had come to know in 1772.

"He does not feel, I fear, the pathos in the appeal of these millions for freedom for their own country. He is certainly a man of determination, for he has shown no weakening in his policy to let Gandhi bear the consequences of his fast and die in the process if necessary, no matter what the results may be."

The President's representative was perpetually concerned lest USA should become identified with British policy in India. He tried to see Gandhi in prison but was denied permission by the Viceroy. In an attempt to break the deadlock which had arisen between the British and the Congress Party, several thousands of whom were in prison, he proposed that Mr. Roosevelt, with British approval, should invite the leaders of all Indian parties to meet to discuss the future. King George VI should then give an assurance that power would be transferred at a certain date.

The President's reaction was not recorded, but a few days later Mr. Phillips summarized his own views again. He feared that China, India, and Burma, all of whom desired freedom from foreign domination, might unite in growing distrust of the Occidental Powers. The remedy was for USA to make clear its support for India and, if possible, to encourage a generous gesture from Britain, whose difficult position he said he understood.

He took, however, a gloomy view of the situation. India was in a state of inertia, prostration, divided counsels, and helplessness. "The British are sitting pretty. They have been completely successful in their policy of 'keeping the lid on' and in suppressing any movement among the Indians which might be interpreted as a move towards independence....

"There is to be no change, no effort to open the door to negotiation among the leaders, no preparation for the future until after the War, and that date is so uncertain that I believe the Indians generally feel there will be no material changes in their favour even after the War. For it will always be no material in this vast country, plenty of justifications, if one is looking for excuses, to preserve the status quo now and in the years to come."

[Mr. H. St. John Philby was a friend and confidante of King Ibn Saud. He lived in Arabia for some 25 years and became a Muslim. His 1,800-mile camel ride through the central desert of the Arabian Peninsula 30 years ago was described by him in three long articles in The Times He twice sought unsuccessfully to become a Member of Parliament in the Labour interest. PAKISTAN

SUMMARY: President Abboud's Visit; US Loan; Trade Agreement With Rumania; Foreign Exchange Earnings.

A. President Ibrahim Abboud's Visit: President Ibrahim Abboud of Sudan arrived in Karachi on May 13 on a State visit to Pakistan.

He was accompanied by four Cabinet Ministers and four members of the Central Council of Sudan.

Replying to a civic address in Karachi, President Abboud said that the question of Kashmir ever since it arose had been "a matter of concern" to the people of Sudan. He added: "We hope that the Kashmir question will be settled in a way that will ensure justice, equity and peace."

He paid tribute to the "inspired leadership" of President Ayub Khan, and the "support and dedication" of the people of Pakistan, which, put together, had enabled the country to make remarkable progress in such a short time.

Referring to Pakistan-Sudanese relations, he said that they were ever-lasting, based as they were on spiritual bonds which had been fostered in the hearts of the peoples of the two countries through 14 centuries.

State Banquet:

A State banquet was given on May 13 in honour of President Abboud by President Ayub Khan.

Replying to a toast proposed by President Ayub Khan, President Abboud said that the people of Sudan had always stood by the people of Pakistan in their support for the freedom struggle of the peoples of Africa and Asia.

He offered high praise for Pakistan, which, he said, had "achieved independence under the banner of spiritual ideology, and continues to struggle in today's world exploring ways and means for finding solutions to its problems, with a clear conscience, and exemplary straightforwardness".

Offering a "very warm welcome" to the Sudanese President at the banquet, President Ayub Khan pointed out that "the peoples of Sudan and Pakistan derive inspiration from one and the same source —Islam." They were linked by the future as by their past, he said and added that the road leading to their goal was strewn with hazards and demanded sacrifices.

Exchange Of National Honours:

President Abboud on May 13 presented President Ayub Khan with the Insignia of Honour, the highest civil award of Sudan.

He made the presentation at a ceremony at which President Ayub Khan had conferred on him the Nishan-i-Pakistan at the President's House.

Later, the two Presidents exchanged presents as a token of goodwill between their respective countries.

President Ayub Khan presented to the Sudanese President a number of Pakistani carpets, and a signed photograph of himself.

President Abboud presented to him a signed photograph and a beautifully inscribed verse of the Quran.

Civic Reception In Lahore:

At a civic reception in Lahore on May 15 President Abboud expressed the hope that the understanding between Pakistan and Sudan would be strengthened and the area of co-operation between the two countries in different fields enlarged.

He declared that his talks with President Ayub Khan and other Pakistan leaders had confirmed his belief regarding development of better relations between the two States.

He said that he was looking forward to the day when he would see Pakistani students studying in the Sudanese University and other educational institutions as he saw today Sudanese students studying at Lahore.

Chaudhri Mohammad Hussain, Vice-Chairman of the Lahore Municipal Corporation, in an address of welcome referred to the ties of friendship which bound the two countries.

He said: "We both belong to the East Africa and Asia which constitute what we call the Eastern world. Pakistan had great faith in unity and co-operation among the Afro-Asian countries and considers it of great importance for the progress and prestige of all Eastern nations."

A Pakistan Foreign Office spokesman said in Karachi on May 15 that President Abboud and President Ayub Khan had informal and extremely cordial talks on May 13. They considered a number of matters of mutual interest.

The spokesman said that they decided that there was no need for a formal communique.

President Abboud left for China on May 16.

B. US Loan For East Wing: The US AID Director, Mr. Donald G. MacDonald, announced in Karachi on

May 18 that the Agency for International Development (AID) was making a loan totalling $8,500,000 to finance the foreign exchange costs of goods and services required for the construction of a 44-megawatt gas-fired steam generator at the Siddhiganj thermal plant in East Pakistan.

The new generator will increase the base load power in the eastern grid of East Pakistan. The plant is located about 10 miles south-east of Dacca.

The total cost of the new plant is $11.5 million equivalent, $3 million of which is in local currency and will be provided from the resources of the East Pakistan Water and Power Development Authority.

The $8.5 million loan is repayable in US dollars in 40 years, including a 10-year grace period during which no repayment is required. Interest on the loan is at a rate of three-quarters per cent per year during the first ten years and two per cent per annum thereafter.

The new generator is being financed at the request of the Government of Pakistan as a part of the US commitment for assistance for the Second Five-Year Plan.

The location of the new unit places it near the load centre of the Dacca-Karnafuli power grid system. The plant site is the terminal of the transmission tie line to Karnafuli and will also be the terminal of the proposed transmission line extending on to the Sylhet area.

C. First "Untied" Loan From Netherlands: It was announced at The Hague on May 15 that the Dutch Government's 40,000,000 guilder (£4,000,000) loan was the first "untied" foreign aid for economic development in Pakistan.

The negotiations for the loan, which began two years ago in The Hague, were completed recently by the Dutch officials and the Pakistan Ambassador, Mr. Qudratullah Shahab.

Letters confirming the loan for the remaining period of Pakistan's Second Five-Year Plan were exchanged earlier in the week between Mr. Osman Ali, Finance Secretary, and Baron Tiexeira D. Mattos, the Dutch Ambassador.

Unlike credits from USA, Britain, West Germany and other countries, the non-Dutch suppliers would be allowed to tender for orders under this loan.

The terms of the loan, spread over 20 years and with no repayment in the first seven years, are also more generous than those governing most foreign loans received by Pakistan so far.

Pakistan is to receive under this loan two sugar mills, ships, a medium-range Fokker Friendship aircraft, components for the manufacture of transistor radios, raw materials for plastic industry and other commodities.

Though the non-Dutch suppliers would be entitled to tender for the sugar mills and ships, the manufacturers in Holland would be hard to beat, as their terms and prices are said to be extremely competitive.

Pakistan was chosen by the Netherlands Government as the first country to receive economic aid from that country on a bilateral basis. Hitherto all Dutch foreign aid has been channelled through United Nations, the European Economic Community and other international bodies. Brazil, India, Iran, Nigeria and Tunisia are also getting Dutch credits for economic development.

India is to receive a loan of 100 million guilders for economic development.

The Netherlands is thus maintaining a ratio of about two to one in her credit policy towards India and Pakistan, comparable to that of USA and more satisfactory than that of the British ratio of about five to one concerning sterling loans to the two countries.

D. Colonel G. L. Bhattacharya's Appeal Fails: A Rawalpindi message on May 21 said that the Supreme Court had rejected an appeal filed on behalf of Colonel G. L. Bhattacharya, an Indian Army officer undergoing imprisonment for "spying", for immediate release.

He had appealed on the ground that the President's order reducing his sentence of eight years by four years and the later order by the East Pakistan Government under Section 401 Criminal Procedure Code sanctioning similar reduction were independent of each other, giving him total remission of eight years.

The East Pakistan High Court had rejected his petition, holding that the Provincial Government's notification was only implementation of the President's decision and they were not independent of each other.

The Supreme Court rejected the appeal on May 19.

E. Trade Agreement With Rumania: Pakistan and Rumania signed on May 20 a Trade Agreement covering a wide range of commodities to be exchanged between the two countries through normal commercial channels.

The Agreement will be for one year, automatically extendable for additional periods of one year, subject to the notice of 90 days by either country in case it was decided to be terminated.

The Agreement, which was signed by Dr. Sebastian Simionescu, leader of the Rumanian trade delegation, and by Mr. Ejaz Ahmad Naik, Joint Secretary, Ministry of Commerce, provides for the grant of most-favoured-nation treatment by one country to another in matters of trade, commerce and shipping, excluding coastal shipping.

All payments under the Agreement will be made in convertible pound sterling.

Provision has been made in the Agreement for the organization of permanent or temporary fairs or exhibitions by one country in the other and for consultations on measures for expanding mutual trade.

This is the first Trade Agreement with Rumania and the first international Agreement to be signed in Islamabad.

Explaining the broad outlines of the Agreement later to newsmen, the leaders of the two delegations said that while Rumania would import from Pakistan jute, jute goods, textile, sports goods, woollen goods, musical instruments, canned and tinned fish, Rumania will export to Pakistan complete plants for chemical industry, oil refinery, cement, oil field equipment, refrigeration machinery, tractors and agricultural implements, electrical goods and rolling stock.

Pakistan is interested in importing cement from Rumania in exchange for jute and other primary commodities. Rumania had asked permission to open a trade agency at Karachi to which Pakistan had agreed.

F. Foreign Exchange Earnings: According to official statistics available in Karachi on May 20, foreign exchange earnings during the Second Plan (1960-65) are expected to be increased by Rs. 187 crores.

As against the Plan target of Rs. 1,125 crores, Pakistan will earn Rs. 1,312 crores in foreign exchange at the end of the Second Plan period (June, 1965).

The mid-Plan review, made public by the Planning Commission, indicates that export performance for the first three years of the Plan had been so good that overshooting of the target was a foregone conclusion.

The rates of increase in foreign exchange earnings over the three-year period, according to the review, had been very impressive. The total foreign exchange earnings which had increased from Rs. 229 crores in 1960-61 to Rs. 238 crores in 1961-62, jumped to Rs. 275 crores in 1962-63.

The main foreign exchange earners, according to the review, have been raw cotton, raw jute, jute manufactures, hides and skins, wool and rice. The most phenomenal increase was registered through the export of raw cotton and rice. The former earned Rs. 19.5 crores in 1960-61, but the figure jumped to Rs. 40 crores in 1962-63. Foreign exchange earned by rice in 1962-63 was Rs. 7.1 crores more than what it had earned in 1960-61.

The composition of imports has been undergoing a significant shift in favour of capital goods and raw material for capital goods. Consumer goods imports (including PL 480) declined from Rs. 100 crores in 1960-61 to Rs. 93 crores in the third year of the Plan. But development imports increased from Rs. 172 crores in the first year of the Plan to Rs. 233 crores in 1962-63 and may exceed Rs. 300 crores in the fourth year of the Plan.

G. Progress Of Indus Projects: The Chief Engineer of the Indus projects, Mr. S. S. Kirmani, said in Lahore on May 19 that all projects involved in the first phase of the Rs. 900-crore Indus Basin programme would be completed several months ahead of schedule.

He said in an interview that the railway and road bridges on River Ravi near Sidhnai might perhaps be delayed. But the system of Trimmu-Sidhnai, Sidhnai-Mailsi and Mailsi-Bahawal link canals, Sidhnai barrage and Mailsi-Syphon would in operation by March, 1965.

He said the system of link canals in the Sutlej River Valley would enable the valley to have its kharif irrigational supplies from early April which it was getting under the present arrangements through India from June to September. This, he hoped, would go a long way in improving crop intensity and would result in increased yield.

The construction rate for the first phase, he claimed, was unparalleled in the whole of Asia. Only some of the advanced nations in the West could claim an equal rate of construction. The actual construction work, he added, had only started in October, 1962 and the major work would end by October, 1964.

He said another project included in the first phase, namely, the Mangla Dam, was also ahead of schedule and the contractors hoped to complete it by October 16 making the Mangla water supplies available for use in October-November, 1967.

About the second phase he said the commencement of work was delayed by a year because of financial difficulties due to overall estimated increase in the cost of projects. But the WAPDA hoped to make up this time as already a number of preliminary works had been taken in hand and were being made available soon after the contract. This had caused considerable saving of time and money from Pakistan's point of view. The preliminary works included construction of base camps and roads and railway lines.

He expressed the hope that all the projects in the second phase would be completed by July, 1968 or earlier.

Replying to a question, he said so far Rs. 170 crores had been spent on the Indus Basin projects of which the foreign exchange component was Rs. 94 crores.

SYRIA

A. Charge Against UAR And Iraq: The Government charged on April 26 that most of the agitators behind the recent disturbances in Hama and other Syrian towns (see below) were Iraqi and UAR agents.

Gen. Amin El-Hafez, Chairman of the National Council of the Revolution told a news conference that the agents behind the recent disturbances had received arms and money from Iraq and Egypt.

He accused the UAR Embassy in a neighbouring Arab country of being behind recent political troubles in Hama.

He also accused President Abdel Salam Arif of Iraq of being behind these troubles.

He disclosed that a Ministerial Committee had been formed to find answers to Syria's economic problems.

The Government would shortly be reshuffled and unionist elements backing the March 8 revolution would be admitted to the Government.

He said about 20 members of the security forces and about 50 civilians were killed or wounded during the Hama events earlier in April.

He said Syria had lived up to her undertakings towards the Arab "summit" meeting in Cairo in January, "although she was aware of things being plotted against her secretly."

B. Nationalization Of Factories: Three weaving and spinning factories in the northern industrial town of Aleppo were nationalized on April 17 by Decree and put under self-management.

The Decree interprets this as meaning collective ownership by the workers.

Two factories were merged in one and a board of seven directors was formed for running it. On the board were four workers' representatives and a representative of the Government, the ruling Baath Party, and the trade union concerned. Another board on the same lines was appointed for a third factory. The original owners, who were accused of smuggling their funds and receiving Government loans larger than their capital, are to be indemnified with 10-year Government transferable bonds drawing 4 per cent interest.

C. Hama Disturbances—Sentences Commuted: The National Revolutionary Council on May 3 commuted the death sentences passed on 21 men convicted of complicity in the recent troubles at Hama in Central Syria, where it was officially admitted that about 70 military and civilians were killed or injured.

Nineteen other defendants had been given terms ranging between hard labour for life and six years, while five were acquitted. The Council promised to consider "with sympathy" these sentences.

This decision followed a request from 40 representatives of popular organizations and religious leaders.

Nine men, including five soldiers, had been given death sentences a few days earlier for alleged complicity in attempts to occupy police posts in Aleppo in North Syria. All these sentences were subject to confirmation by the National Revolutionary Council.

D. Military Union With Iraq—Agreement Denounced: The Government announced on April 28 that it had decided to denounce the Agreement concluded in October, 1963 for a military union with Iraq.

An official source said that the decision had been taken at a meeting of the National Revolutionary Council.

The Council decided to cancel the Agreement because a Syrian request to appoint the Commander-in-Chief had not been satisfied. Another reason was the creation of a unified Arab command in accordance with the resolutions of the Arab "Summit" Conference.

E. Anti-Government Plot Foiled: The Information Minister, Mr. Dham Sami El Jundi, disclosed in Damascus on March 3 that the Government had smashed a plot aimed at the security of the State.

He said some 50 persons had been arrested. Many of them had given full written confessions.

He would not disclose the names or the political affiliations of the detainees, but said the defendants would stand trial shortly.

TURKEY

A. Industrial Development Bank's Annual Review: Details of the Industrial Development Bank's annual report for 1963 were available on May 15.

The review showed an increase in the Bank's capital from £T125,000,000 to £T150,000,000; £17,500,000 of this sum was subscribed by the International Finance Corporation, an affiliate of the World Bank.

During 1963, a further sum of £T125,000,000 was put at the disposal of the Bank from the local currency account derived from the sale of US surplus commodities supplied to Turkey. This increase in capital resulted in an increase in the Bank's operating resources from £T284,409,000 in 1962 to £T353,991,000 in 1963.

The Bank's main activity is the granting of long-term loans and participation in the capital of private industrial enterprises. During 1963, 335 credit applications were received for a total amount of £T396,173,000 compared with 231 applications for loans worth £T228,900,000 the year before. Out of a total of £T58,820,000 requested by industrial enterprises exporting their products, £T47,600,000 was granted from the special export credit fund, resulting in exports of manufactured goods worth £23,600,000.

YEMEN

A. New Constitution: Sanaa Radio announced on April 28 a new Constitution under which Yemen was declared an Arab State, independent and sovereign.

According to the Constitution, broadcast in full by the Radio, the Yemen people are part of the Arab nation, Islam is the State religion and Arabic the official language.

Islamic laws would be the basis of all legislation.

The Constitution gives the President executive power for a five-year period, and lays down that he shall be a Yemeni aged more than 35 years.

Legislative power is invested in a Consultative Council which will serve for three years.

The Constitution provides for the creation of a National Defence Council, to be headed by the President.

It fixed Sanaa as the capital.

The broadcast did not state when the new Constitution would come into effect.

A Shoura (Council) will be set up to undertake legislative functions.

The term of the Council will be for three years; the State Budget must be placed before the Council for approval before the fiscal year begins. A Council member cannot be dismissed except by a decision taken by two-thirds of the members.

The President of the Republic will be nominated and elected by the Council. The President's term in office will be five years. The President will also be the Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces.

He will ratify treaties and will notify the Council of them and these become law after their ratification and confirmation. However, peace treaties, alliances, trade and all treaties affecting Yemeni territorial sovereignty will not be valid unless approved by the Shoura.

The Cabinet will be the higher executive and administrative organization of the State and will be composed of the Prime Minister, his deputies and the Ministers. The Government will execute the State policy in accordance with the laws and Presidential decrees in effect.

with defence matters and with means of ensuring the country's security in accordance with the law. The State alone can establish armed forces. No other organization or group shall create military or quasi-military formation. Military service is obligatory.

Formation of trade unions is guaranteed under the law. Education is the right of all Yemenis guaranteed by the State.

C. UN Presence Prolonged: The UN Secretary-General, U Thant, announced on May 5 that he had prolonged the UN Observers' action in Yemen by another two months until July 4.

He made the announcement in a report submitted to the Security Council.

In his report he said he had had consultations with Security Council members in this regard.

During the past two months, he said, no progress had been made towards implementation of the disengagement agreement concluded between Saudi Arabia, UAR and Yemen in June, 1963.

As for the number of UAR troops stationed in Yemen, 4,000 UAR men including anti-aircraft units had arrived by sea in March. These soldiers "appeared" to have returned from home leave. About 2,000 UAR soldiers had meanwhile left Yemen.

He opined that the numerical strength of UAR troops in Yemen had slightly increased rather than decreased.

At the same time, he stated that Saudi Arabia had stopped granting assistance to the Yemeni Royalists.

D. New Commerce Law: A decree issued in Sanaa on May 3 established a Supreme Committee for imports and exports.

Under the decree, no person may export goods unless his name is registered on the Merchants Register and he is a Yemeni or a subject of an Arab country.

Goods of agricultural products may be exported only under personal permits issued in the name of the exporter and he may not transfer them to others. Goods for which permits are issued should be exported within the time set in the permit.

The Committee will fix the various duties to be paid by exporters and importers.

Under the new Yemeni Customs Law, five per cent of the value of exported goods is collected in addition to a defence tax. The law came into force on May 1.

A law covering Yemeni imports has also been drawn up.

(The Egyptian Gazette, Cairo)

E. Education Plans: The Minister of Education, Mr. Ahmed Hussein El Marawany, stated in Sanaa on April 25 that compulsory education in Yemen would be enforced within the next 10 years in accordance with the Government's new education policy.

He said that the budget of the Ministry of Education after the Revolution amounted to 3,000,000 Yemeni rials as compared to 300,000 Yemeni rials before the Revolution.

As from 1965, Yemeni women would help girls in the field of education.

He said the Ministry had prepared a comprehensive programme for spreading education all over Yemen.

There would be 67 new primary schools in 1965 distributed in Sanaa, Hoppa, Saada, Taez, Hodaida, Ab and Radda districts. Pupils in these schools would total 7,500. UAR experts were now training 300 Yemenis to serve as teachers in primary schools and that 1,000 other Yemenis would be trained within the next three years.

Nine preparatory schools were being built in Sanaa, Taez, Hodaida, Hojja and Ab. Two secondary schools were being constructed, one at Sanaa and the other at Taez, and a programme had been prepared for the establishment of industrial, commercial and agricultural schools in different parts of the Republic.

He said that four primary schools for girls would be founded in 1965 in addition to those established after the Revolution and that the total number of girl pupils next year would reach 1,200.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. World Rice Production—FAO Forecast: The UN Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) announced on May 11 that world rice production would reach a record level this year.

It said that trade in rice was likely to remain well above average.

FAO's consultative sub-committee on the economic aspects of price said it was too early to judge if the stronger international market in rice was a temporary phase or pointed to a more lasting improvement in the export picture. "It is clear that after some years of material progress several of the major Asian importers are having serious difficulties in reaching the cereal-production targets set in their development."

It added that the long-term rising trend in production resumed in 1963-64 despite bad weather in several regions. Reserve stocks were still inadequate, Government-to-Government contract prices for cheaper grain had risen moderately, prices in private trade were expected to average the previous year's levels, and those for round-grain rice had risen.

The committee estimated that paddy production in 1964 in the world (excluding China) would reach a record level of 158 million tons—nine million more than in the 1962-63 season. This was despite lower output in parts of the Far East, in Latin America and in southern Europe. Among the importing countries, there had been good crops in India and Pakistan, but declines in Indonesia and Cuba. As for exporters, crops were heavier in USA, the United Arab Republic, Thailand, Viet-Nam, Madagascar and Korea, while production fell in Burma, Formosa, Brazil, Italy and Spain.

The report said that since the carry-over supplies in some countries had been offset by reduced production "world supplies available for export this year are probably more or less the same" as in 1963.

B. William Shakespeare's 400th Birthday Celebrations: The Duke of Edinburgh flew to Stratford-on-Avon on April 23 to head the international celebration of William Shakespeare's 400th birthday.

The little town was bedecked with flags and packed with world visitors.

Before the Duke arrived the first of the formal ceremonies began with the unfurling of the flags of 115 nations by their representatives. Among them was also the flag of St. George, patron Saint of England, whose festival for once had been overshadowed.

The small army of Ambassadors and diplomatic representatives—from every country accredited to, the British Court—were formally received at the Royal Shakespeare Theatre, on the banks of the River Avon, by the Mayor of Stratford.

Following the flag ceremony, the guests set out on the traditional birthday procession through beflagged streets to the poet's birthplace, and then to his tomb to lay wreaths and flowers. The procession was headed by a British army band and the town beadle in his striking official uniform.

Outside the post office, queues three or four deep stretched down the road to buy some of the new commemorative issue of five Shakespeare stamps and rail souvenir cards with the birthday date from Stratford itself.

Mr. Eugene Black, chairman of the American 1964 Shakespeare Committee and former President of the World Bank, opened the new Shakespeare Centre in the garden of the poet's birthplace.

Diplomatic representatives of many countries, including Dr. Jivraj Mehta, the Indian High Commissioner, were among the distinguished audience who watched Mr. Black open the Centre.

The birth anniversary was widely celebrated throughout Russia, according to Tass.

A large Shakespeare exhibition which had opened at Orel, birthplace of the Russian writer, Ivan Turgenev, included rare editions of Shakespeare's plays from private libraries of 19th century Russian writers.

The Soviet Communications Ministry issued a stamp to commemorate the occasion.

The Leningrad mint cast a Shakespeare jubilee medal designed by Igor Daragan, a young Moscow sculptor.

C. New York World Fair: President Lyndon B. Johnson of USA opened in New York on April 22 the World Fair.

In a speech on the occasion, he said that peace was not only possible and predicted that "it is coming nearer". Unless the theme of the Fair—"peace through understanding"—could be achieved and unless men used their skill and wisdom to conquer conflict as they had conquered sciences then the hopes of today would "go under in the devastation of tomorrow."

"If I am right, then at the next World's Fair, people will see an America as different from today, as we are different from 1939."

He said they would see an America in which no man must be poor, in which no man was handicapped by the colour of his skin, his beliefs, his religion or his ancestry.

Speaking on behalf of the foreign participants in the Fair, Mrs. Indira Gandhi of India said that inter-dependence of nations was a pre-requisite of peace—"peace not in the passive sense, not the mere absence of war, though that in itself is an important first step, but dynamic, meaningful and living peace that brings liberty, and prosperity to all".

Interdependence, she emphasised, was the fabric of modern economy. "No country is entirely self-sufficient. No single economy can survive in isolation or keep its balance without taking and giving. It is only through interdependence that we can tread the path of peace."

She said that the Fair was a salute to the world's emergence into the space age and projection of man's prodigious advance in the field of science and technology.

The opening of the Fair was marred by racial demonstrations leading to the arrest of 300 Negro and white members of the Congress of Racial Equality.

At one point during the official ceremonies, President Johnson's speech was drown out by shouts of "freedom now". He made no reference to the demonstrators but alluded to America's racial problems indirectly.

Details:

The Fair will remain open for a total of 12 months, split into two periods.

It will be open from April to October, 1964, and for the same months in 1965.

The Fair covers 2.6 kilometres, and took four years to plan. Several foreign nations are represented, though Britain and most Commonwealth countries, France and several other countries are not taking part. They are affiliated to the International Exhibitions Organization which refused to approve the World Fair because USA is not a member of the Organization.

The Fair organizers were hoping that it will be visited by from 80 to 100 million visitors while New York traders hope to benefit from the $6,000 to $10,000 million the visitors are expected to spend.

The Fair is divided into an international section, a Federal and American States section, an industrial section, a transport section, and an attraction section.

The international section groups 43 and stands in a semi-circle round the "unisphere"—an immense steel globe which is the Fair's symbol.

India, South Korea, Denmark, Hong Kong, Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, Pakistan, the Philippines, Sweden, Thailand, Formosa and the Vatican are among the exhibitors in this section.

Mrs. Indira Gandhi, who personally conducted a Press tour of India's pavilion at the World Fair stated that this was India's biggest attempt to project the image of modern India abroad.

Costing about $2.5 million in New York and about Rs. 3 million in India, the pavilion is expected to pay many times its cost in the form of increased trade with USA and other countries.

It is also an attempt to show what India, a democratic country, has done and intends to do.

The pavilion is a fine piece of architecture, blending the traditional and the modern. This is true not only of the exterior but also of the story which the exhibits unfold.

The Indian motif, employed in the architecture, is much more in evidence today than a few days ago.

Makrana marble jalis judiciously surround the pavilion and the Indian restaurant which nestles beside it. This is the white marble of which the Taj is made. The jalis, made in India, were flown to New York like the rest of the pavilion. Each jalis, took three months to carve and gives the pavilion the touch of an Indian palace.

Three colours predominate—the sandy white, gold, and the deep blue of the lake surrounding the pavilion.

The facade of the pavilion is textured —a concept borrowed from the old ornate temples. The geometrical forms of the texture help to break the monotony of the light. Below the facade, there is a gold projection over which water flows down like a curtain which is invitingly charming.

The restaurant is also an interesting building. Its decor is purely Indian. A golden carpet, made in Delhi, shimmers in the light. The chairs are made of rosewood. The tables are of marble. Gold is the colour of the plumed turbans which Indian bearers wear. Gold is also the colour of their coats. The service is like a dream come true. The roof of the restaurant is made of a huge photograph of the Dilwara Jain temple on Mt. Abu. At night it glows, giving the illusion of a dome.

For the first time for sale are the authentic antiquities of India. The US museums are vying with one another to buy them. This is also true of the old miniature paintings.

D. New Theory On Earth's Crust: A Washington message on May 18 said that in defiance of prevalent geological doctrine, an American scientist had said he was convinced that there was still hope of finding fragments of the Earth's original crust.

Dr. Robert Dietz, of the US Coast and Geodetic Survey, said he believed that Montana, Northern Rhodesia, and the area of the Russo-Finnish border would be among the most fruitful areas in which to search.

Accepting a current theory that the Earth evolved originally as a cold body about 4,500 million years ago, he suggested that portions of the original crust might be found floating like watermelon seeds in the ultrabafic masses in the oldest rock terrain, (Ultrabafic is the collective name given to masses of dark, heavy rocks found in the oldest mountains.) These rocks are mostly sedimentary and could themselves represent the original crust, as they must be derived from other rocks, but Dr. Dietz believes that rocks trapped within the mass may be considerably older than the 3,500 million years which has been assigned to the oldest of them.

He thus rejects the theory that the Earth was initially molten and believes that it may be possible to improve upon the assessment of James Hutton, the Scottish father of modern geology, who wrote in 1788 that the rocks revealed "no vestige of a beginning, no prospect of an end".

He said: "Most likely, the Earth originally evolved as a cold body from a dust cloud around the Sun, probably about 4,500 million years ago. Then, for 1,000 million years the Earth remained quiet while internal heat was slowly generated by the decay of the radio-active substances. Only then, 3,500 million years ago, did the Earth become an active body and begin building mountains and continents.

"In this original creation of the continents, fragments of the original crust almost certainly were caught up during the creation of the mountains. They must exist today as some of the ultrabafic masses in the oldest rock terrains."

A fragment of it would resemble a stony meteorite from the primeval solar dust clouds, and, though it might be somewhat altered, its primitive nature should remain chemically identifiable.

A. Davis Cup (Eastern Zone) Championship: The Philippines won the Davis Cup (Eastern Zone) Championship in Manila on April 26, beating India by three matches to two.

India and the Philippines split their opening singles matches on April 24, Jaideep Mukherjea beat Johnny Jose 7-5, 3-6, 6-3, 6-2, but Premjit Lall (India) lost to Felicismo Ampon at 6-0, 6-3, 7-5.

A. Draft Constitution: The draft Constitution will be presented to the Grand Afghan Council (Loi Jirga) during the first half of the Afghan New Year for endorsement.

This was announced by Dr. Abdul Zahir, President of the National Assembly, according to a Kabul Radio broadcast on May 26.

Meanwhile, King Zahir Shah has extended the term of the Afghan National Assembly for a few months till the Loi Jirga is called.

Dr. Abdul Zahir, while inaugurating the Assembly, informed the members that the King had also designated all National Assembly Members as members of the Loi Jirga, besides others. He said that the new Afghan Constitution would be the beginning of a new era in Afghanistan and would bestow on the people a democratic set-up.

The National Assembly, which was a partly elected and partly nominated institution and had completed its 11th term, would be terminated after the inauguration of the Loi Jirga. The Loi Jirga in Afghanistan is regarded as the supreme authority in all matters relating to national and international issues and for giving its verdict in times of emergency.

The Afghan Government has also constituted a number of commissions to deal with various aspects of national life.

According to a Kabul Radio broadcast, Dr. Abdul Zahir placed the names of the members of these commissions before the Assembly session which recently started at Kabul.

The various commissions as announced in the Assembly are for law, finance, agriculture and public works, communications, education and Press, justice and foreign affairs.

CAMBODIA

A. Imports By Private Sector To Continue: The Government has permitted the private sector to continue imports up to June, 1964 against licences issued up to February, 1964.

This decision has been taken because of the inability of the National Society of Exports and Imports (SONEXIM) to cope with the entire load of exports and imports of Cambodia, including distribution of the imported commodities, which it took over after the declaration of nationalization of Cambodia's international trade with effect from January 1, 1964.

It was originally expected that, as a result of nationalization, the private sector in the export and import trade would be relegated to the background and that all imports would be effected, and the imported commodities distributed to the retailers, through various professional commodity associations to be set up by SONEXIM. But it has been pointed out that SONEXIM has not the experience or the confidence or the capacity to undertake this job.

Owing to the existence of a huge number and variety of retailers, it has not been possible to form the commodity associations in the circumstances, it has been decided that the private sector will continue to import as before but only through SONEXIM. SONEXIM will now charge a commission of 14 to 23 per cent on the value of the transaction on all imports.

Although the Government's decision amounts to relaxation of the control in favour of the private sector, it is not certain as to how long this nebulous state is to persist.

A report received by the World Trade Department of Indian Chambers of Commerce from Pnom Penh says that SONEXIM has been contemplating formal releases from the national foreign exchange, but this has not been made possible on account of the sudden termination of US aid, political instability, and the inability of the Government to evolve a firm policy and procedure for imports.

To finance Cambodia's entire imports, SONEXIM has now offered to private importers the release of national foreign exchange with pound sterling priced at 230 riels to a pound, as against the official exchange rate of 98.14 riels to a pound and the open market rate of 270 riels for a pound.

The report says that alongside this mode of importation, SONEXIM is also inviting global tenders from time to time for certain essential purchases as, for instance, jute bags.

A consignment of more than a million jute bags has been bought from India recently. Imports are also being made under Cambodia's commercial treaties with other countries. A total of 5,000 tons of cement have been recently imported from North Viet-Nam.

SONEXIM has also decided that agricultural and industrial organizations with administrative and financial autonomy, State enterprise societies, and the societies composed of mixed economy, will be able to import their supplies of equipment and raw materials on a priority basis on their application to SONEXIM.

Foreign exchange for the purpose will be released by a high-powered body which is to meet from time to time, and SONEXIM will import the requirements on behalf of the applicants.

Cambodia's national Budget for 1964 envisages a tentative import target of 2,475 million riels, as against 3,070 million riels in 1963. The figure has been scaled down by drastically cutting imports of pharmaceuticals, tobacco leaves, vegetable fibres, paper, rubber goods, etc.

Unlike its imports, Cambodia's exports after nationalization were open to the private sector only for two months up to February, 1964, subject to corresponding imports being completed before June 30.

Accordingly, SONEXIM has seriously launched its collection-of-harvest campaign with the assistance of the co-operatives in the field of exports.

SONEXIM has decided to charge approximately two per cent commission of the export value for its services. Its handling of the rubber exports so far has involved the foreign plantation interests in a loss of 70 million riels, which has chilled the planters' interest in the expansion of coffee plantations.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Mr. J. Nehru Passes Away; "Caretaker" Cabinet Appointed; US Military Aid; "Aid-India" Consortium Meeting; Development Bank.

A. Mr. J. Nehru Passes Away: The Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru, died in New Delhi on May 27 after a sudden heart attack.

He was stricken by the heart attack at 6-20 a.m. The doctors fought desperately to save his life. He was kept under an oxygen tent and every possible treatment was tried. His condition became grave at 11-45 a.m. and he started sinking rapidly. The doctors gave up all hope at 1-30 p.m. The end came a few minutes before 2 p.m. He died of internal haemorrhage and shock. He was unconscious throughout.

The whole country was stunned by the suddenness of Mr. Nehru's death, although he had been ailing for the last few months. The first reaction of the people everywhere was one of complete disbelief, but soon they were overwhelmed by the benumbing reality.

Only a few days earlier, the nation had felt somewhat reassured when Mr. Nehru himself remarked at his news conference that "my lifetime is not ending so very soon."

Mr. Nehru had returned from a short holiday in Dehra Dun the previous evening looking quite normal and cheerful. After a quiet dinner, he went to bed at 11 p.m. It was not known whether he had become unconscious by the time the doctors reached him after the heart attack or he was conscious enough to tell them what had happened.

An official announcement issued on May 27 said:

"The Government of India announces with the most profound regret the death of Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru, Prime Minister of India, in New Delhi today (May 27).

"As a mark of respect to the memory of the departed Prime Minister, all offices under the control of the Government of India throughout the country will remain closed on May 27 and 28, 1964. This period will be treated as a paid holiday for all employees of the Central Government, including industrial employees on regular work-charged and industrial establishments paid on monthly basis and the labour hired on daily wages for the entire month. These days have also been declared as holidays under the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881.

"State mourning will be observed for 12 days up to and including June 8, 1964. Flags will be flown at half-mast on all Government buildings throughout India and there will be no public entertainment during this period."

On May 28, more than a million people witnessed the cremation of Mr. Nehru's body on the banks of the Yamuna, about 300 yards from Mahatma Gandhi's samadhi at Rajghat.

The vast congregation stood in silence for a moment when the "last post" was sounded and three volleys were fired before Mr. Nehru's 16-year-old grandson, Sanjay, lit the sandalwood pyre at 4.30 p.m. amidst the chanting of Vedic hymns by priests.

The President, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan, the Vice-President, Dr. Zakir Hussain, the new Prime Minister, Mr. Gulzari Lal Nanda, and his Cabinet colleagues, the visiting foreign dignitaries, Members of Parliament, Governors and Chief Ministers of several States, and heads of diplomatic missions paid their last respects to the departed leader before the cremation ceremonies began.

The visiting dignitaries present at the funeral included Sir Alec Douglas-Home, British Prime Minister, and Lord Mountbatten, representing the Queen; Mr. Dean Rusk, US Secretary of State; Mrs. Sirimavo Bandaranaike, Ceylon Prime Minister; Mr. Alexei Kosygin, Vice-Premier of the Soviet Union; Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, Pakistani Foreign Minister; Dr. Tulsi Giri, Chairman of the Nepalese Council of Ministers; and the Maharaja of Sikkim.

The funeral procession took nearly three hours to cover the six-mile route from Prime Minister's House to the cremation site. At least half of Delhi's three million population lined the route to honour the departed leader on his last journey. Tens of thousands of people had come to Delhi from distant places to pay their homage to the maker of modern India.

On June 9, Mr. Nehru's ashes were immersed at the confluence of the Ganges and Yamuna at Allahabad and at a number of holy rivers throughout India. Part of the ashes were also scattered from the air, according to his wishes.

Parliament's Homage:

On May 29, Parliament paid its homage to Mr. Nehru with tearful speeches and touching appeals to the people to prove themselves worthy of the noble heritage bequeathed by him to the nation.

Both Houses expressed their profound anguish and grief over his death and "firmly resolved to strive for the ideals of world peace and progress and national unity, solidarity and prosperity to which the departed leader had dedicated himself."

Members stood in silence for two minutes before the two Houses adjourned till June 1. Afterwards, the members assembled in the Central Hall to pay their joint homage to Mr. Nehru.

Glowing tributes were paid in both Houses by the leaders of all parties to the many-splendoured achievements of Mr. Nehru. Many found it impossible to give full expression to their feelings of tremendous sorrow and sense of bereavement. Speeches were made in voices choked with great emotion and members heard them in hushed silence.

The newly-appointed Prime Minister, Mr. Gulzari Lal Nanda, tried hard for several minutes to brace himself to speak. With a final effort, he checked his surging emotion, wiped his tears and managed to get through his speech in the Lok Sabha.

As he entered the House, there was a hushed silence. He slowly moved to the Prime Minister's seat where Mr. Nehru had sat during the last 18 years and kept standing until the Speaker arrived a few minutes later. He read out the prepared speech slowly pausing often to place great stress on the touching tributes he was paying to the man who "belonged as much to India as to all mankind."

He declared that the great principles for which Mr. Nehru stood and the policies based on them in the national and international sphere "will continue to be our sheet-anchor."

In the Rajya Sabha, Mr. M. C. Chagla, Leader of the House, moved the resolution and made an equally moving speech. He said: "The ship of State has lost its captain, but the ship must sail, however turbulent the seas. Whoever is the new captain can steer the ship by the light that Nehru's name and memory will always shed."

For so long we had counted on his influence for good, it now seems impossible to believe that he is no longer with us. Yet his spirit lives on. Life Sketch:

The sterling traits of Mr. Nehru as a devotee of world peace and progress, national unity and solidarity, his undying faith in democracy and equality of all men, and his humanism were recorded in an obituary notification in a special black-bordered Gazette of India published on May 30.

"The country," the notification said, "has suffered its greatest loss since the death of the Father of the Nation."

It recalled what Rabindranath Tagore had said about him: "He had never fought shy of truth when it was dangerous, nor made alliance with falsehood when it would be convenient."

The following is the text of the notification:

"The passing away of India's beloved leader and Prime Minister, Jawaharlal Nehru, on May 27, 1964 has plunged the whole nation into the profoundest grief. The country has suffered its greatest loss since the death of the Father of the Nation.

"Jawaharlal Nehru belonged to the whole of mankind, as he belonged to the people of India and the world today mourns the departure of this great figure. A valiant fighter for the people of India all his life, Jawaharlal Nehru was the chief architect of modern India. His entire life was dedicated not only to the ideals of national freedom, unity and solidarity but equally to those of world peace and progress.

"Born at Allahabad on November 14, 1889, Jawaharlal Nehru was the son of Pandit Motilal Nehru, an eminent lawyer and one of India's greatest patriots. At the age of 15 he went to England and after two years at Harrow, studied at Trinity College, Cambridge. He was later called to the Bar from the Inner Temple and he returned to India in 1912.

"Destiny had not intended him to confine himself to the legal profession and he was drawn irresistibly towards the movement for India's freedom. His meeting with Mahatma Gandhi in 1916 was the coming together of two great souls and was to prove to be a landmark in Jawaharlal Nehru's life.

"In the same year he was married to Kamala Kaul who stood by him throughout all the joys and tribulations of his life until her early death in 1936, leaving behind her only child and daughter Indira.

"After the epochal meeting with Mahatma Gandhi, Jawaharlal Nehru and his whole family were plunged in the mainstream of the freedom struggle. In 1918 he was elected Secretary of the Home Rule League, Allahabad, and became a member of the All-India Congress Committee of which he remained a member for the rest of his life.

"He was soon assisting Deshbandhu Chittaranjan Das in the inquiries into the repression that followed the Jallianwala Bagh tragedy in the Punjab and by 1920 he was in close contact with the problems and aspirations of the Indian peasantry, beginning with the Kisan agitation in eastern UP. In 1921 came the first of the many occasions on which he courted arrest by refusing to obey orders he considered unjust.

"In 1923 he was arrested for disobeying orders to leave the then State of Nabha. Thus began his special association with the freedom struggle in the Indian States.

"In 1927 began his long association with international democratic movements with his participation in the Congress of Oppressed Nationalities in Brussels as an official delegate of the Indian National Congress, which he followed up with an extensive tour of Europe and his first visit to USSR.

"In 1929 he was elected President of the Lahore session of the Indian National Congress. The national struggle entered a new and significant phase when on the sacred banks of the Ravi the Congress took the pledge on the historic day of December 31, 1929 of complete independence as its goal.

"The 'thirties saw Jawaharlal Nehru become the acknowledged heir to Mahatma Gandhi. In between recurrent spells of incarceration and despite his pre-occupations with national problems he found time also to participate in the struggle against the onslaughts of fascism in different parts of the world. He lent courageous support to the Republican forces in Spain and visited that country during turbulent days. His was one of the resounding voices in the years preceding the holocaust of the Second World War, warning the democratic forces all over the world against its coming menace.

"The failure of the then Government of India to give the Indian people a meaningful opportunity to participate in the world struggle against fascism inexorably led to a conflict. The historic 'Quit India' Resolution was passed by the All-India Congress Committee at Bombay on August 9, 1942, and immediately thereafter Mahatma Gandhi, Jawaharlal Nehru and other leaders were imprisoned.

"On their release three years later, negotiations with the British Government began and Jawaharlal Nehru took office as Vice-President of the Executive Council when the Interim Government of India was formed on September 2, 1946.

"The Constituent Assembly met on December 9 of the same year. Events followed in rapid succession leading to the partition of India. On August 15, 1947, India and Pakistan came into being as two separate countries.

"On that solemn midnight when India became free Jawaharlal Nehru declared: 'Long years ago, we made a tryst with destiny, and now the time comes when we shall redeem our pledge, not wholly or in full measure but very substantially. To the people of India, whose representatives we are, we make an appeal to join us with faith and confidence in this great adventure. We have to build the noble mansion of a free India where all her children may dwell.'

"In these 17 years he had to bear many a grievous shock and none greater than the assassination of the Father of the Nation on January 30, 1948. Jawaharlal Nehru rallied the nation. 'A great disaster is a symbol to us to remember all the big things of life and forget the small things of which we have thought too much.' As the years passed Jawaharlal Nehru lost many a trusted lieutenant and comrade in arms; undeterred, he strove to build the India of his dreams.

"His world vision remained undimmed. He convened the Asian Relations Conference in March, 1947 and was its moving spirit. In 1954 he enunciated Panch Shila, the five principles of peaceful co-existence. There were other international conferences leading to the Bandung Conference in 1955. He gave the world the doctrine of non-alignment which was affirmed at the summit meeting of the non-aligned nations in Belgrade in 1961.

"Jawaharlal Nehru was dedicated to the ideals of the UN and the principles of the Charter. He addressed the third General Assembly session in Paris in 1948. His last appearance at the UN was in 1960. There he moved a significant resolution stressing the need for world peace and urging the leaders of the Great Powers to renew their contacts. He was the first Head of Government to support the partial test-ban pact signed by the three nuclear Powers in August, 1963.

"He strove tirelessly against war and for total disarmament. He initiated and supported action for the liberation of dependent countries. He fought against the exploitation of man by man and worked ceaselessly to bring freedom from fear and hunger not only to his own people but to the world at large. He set his face against all political and military blocs as the greatest impediments to world peace.

"Not the least abiding of Jawaharlal Nehru's contributions was his concept of a revolution in our national economy through planning within a democratic frame-work. Even before India had attained freedom, he foresaw the need for economic planning and was instrumental in setting up the National Planning Committee under the aegis of the Indian National Congress as early as in 1936.

"When freedom came, the earlier efforts bore fruit. The Planning Commission was set up and in 1951 India embarked upon her historic series of Five-Year Plans. The acceptance of economic planning as a way of life by many new free nations is an eloquent tribute to his basic social and economic thinking.

"Jawaharlal Nehru was unremitting in his endeavour for the unity and solidarity of the Indian nation. He struggled ceaselessly to blend the different elements of our national life into an integrated social structure. He fought against all the barriers of caste, religion and language and for the uplift of the less privileged. He constantly affirmed the secular concept of our State as necessary for all sections of the people to live together in peace and harmony.

"Jawaharlal Nehru was a distinguished man of letters. He utilised his spells in prison to write Autobiography, Letters from a Father to His Daughter, Glimpses of World History and Discovery of India which have found a permanent place in literature.

"Such was the man who led his country for so many decades and administered it so wisely for 18 years—an upholder of the noble values of human life and the dignity of man.

"There could be no finer epitaph for Jawaharlal Nehru than that which he himself suggested in a pensive mood with characteristic humility. 'If any people choose to think of me then, I should like them to say: This was a man who with all his mind and heart loved India and the Indian people. And they, in turn, were indulgent to him and gave of their love most abundantly and extravagantly.'

"That loving memory the Indian people, and indeed the peoples of the world, will always cherish for Jawaharlal. For, as Rabindranath Tagore said, 'he had never fought shy of truth when it was dangerous, nor made alliance with falsehood when it would be convenient.'"

Last Testament (The Will):

In his will and testament made 10 years ago, Mr. Nehru had acknowledged with deep gratitude the overwhelming love and affection of the Indian people for him.

Extracts from the will, dated June 21, 1954, released on June 3, 1964, revealed his burning love for his people and a passionate desire to serve them to the best of his ability until the last.

"Many have been admired, some have been revered," he recorded in the will, "but the affection of all classes of the Indian people has come to me in such abundant measure that I have been overwhelmed by it."

Inaugurating a special radio programme containing excerpts from Mr. Nehru's will, the President, Dr. Radhakrishnan, said: "Destiny cast on him the role of not merely one of the prime liberators of the country, but one of its main builders as well."

The extracts were read by Mrs. Vijayalakshmi Pandit and broadcast from all stations of All-India Radio.

The following are the extracts from Mr. Nehru's will:

"I have received so much love and affection from the Indian people that nothing that I can do can repay even a small fraction of it, and indeed there can be no repayment of so precious a thing as affection. Many have been admired, some have been revered, but the affection of all classes of the Indian people has come to me in such abundant measure that I have been overwhelmed by it. I can only express the hope that in the remaining years I may live, I shall not be unworthy of my people and their affection.

"To my innumerable comrades and colleagues, I owe an even deeper debt of gratitude. We have been joint partners in great undertakings and have shared the triumphs and sorrows which inevitably accompany them.

"I wish to declare with all earnestness that I do not want any religious ceremonies performed for me after my death. I do not believe in any such ceremonies and to submit to them, even as a matter of form, would be hypocrisy and an attempt to delude ourselves and others.

"When I die, I should like my body to be cremated. If I die in a foreign country, my body should be cremated there and my ashes sent to Allahabad. A small handful of these ashes should be thrown into the Ganga and the major portion of them disposed of in the manner indicated below. No part of these ashes should be retained or preserved.

"My desire to have a handful of my ashes thrown into the Ganga at Allahabad has no religious significance, so far as I am concerned. I have no religious sentiment in the matter. I have been attached to the Ganga and the Jumna rivers in Allahabad ever since my childhood and as I have grown older, this attachment has also grown. I have watched their varying moods as the seasons changed, and have often thought of the history and myth and tradition and song and story that have become attached to them through the long ages.

"The Ganga, especially, is the river of India, beloved of her people, round which are interwined her racial memories, her hopes and fears, her songs of triumph, her victories and her defeats. She has been a symbol of India's age-long culture and civilization, ever-changing, ever-flowing, and yet ever the same Ganga. She reminds me of the snow-covered peaks and the deep valleys of the Himalayas, which I have loved so much, and of the rich and vast plains below, where my life and work have been cast. Smiling and dancing in the morning sunlight, and dark and gloomy and full of mystery as the evening shadows fall, a narrow, slow and graceful stream in winter, and a vast roaring thing during the monsoon, broad-bosomed almost as the sea, and with something of the sea's power to destroy, the Ganga has been to me a symbol and a memory of the past of India, running into the present, and flowing on to the great ocean of the future.

"And though I have discarded much of past tradition and custom, and am anxious that India should rid herself of all shackles that bind and constrain her and divide her people, and suppress vast numbers of them, and prevent the free development of the body and the spirit; though I seek all this, yet I do not wish to cut myself off from the past completely. I am proud of that great inheritance that has been and is, ours, and I am conscious that I too, like all of us, am a link in that unbroken chain which goes back to the dawn of history in the immemorial past of India. That chain I would not break, for I treasure it and seek inspiration from it. And as witness of this desire of mine and as my last homage to India's cultural inheritance, I am making this request that a handful of my ashes be thrown into the Ganga at Allahabad to be carried to the great ocean that washes India's shore.

"The major portion of my ashes should, however, be disposed of otherwise. I want these to be carried high up into the air in an aeroplane and scattered from that height over the fields where the peasants of India toil, so that they might mingle with the dust and soil of India and become an indistinguishable part of India."

Nehru Peace Award Instituted:

The Indian Council of Cultural Relations on June 3 paid a fitting tribute to the late Mr. Nehru when it decided to institute an international award for outstanding contribution "to the ideal of world peace and the brotherhood of man."

The amount of the award will be Rs. 1,00,000 and it will be given every year, out of a special fund to be created by the Council, to "a person of pre-eminence" who has contributed most, particularly in the preceding year, to international understanding and friendship between peoples of different countries.

A committee will be set up for the selection of award winners. The committee will invite suggestions from all over the world to make sure that the award goes to the right person.

Except this year, the winner's name will be announced every year in February and he will be invited to India in November to receive the award and also to deliver a lecture after its formal presentation to him.

The governing body of the Council, which took this decision at an extraordinary meeting, also decided to invite every year 25 children of the age group 11 to 14 from five countries to tour India for two weeks and to live for a few days in a camp with an equal number of Indian children. They will be awarded a Nehru Medal at the end of their tour.

All Ministers of State and Deputy Ministers except five who were away from Delhi were also sworn-in. The Ministers continued to handle their previous portfolios.

Addressing the new Cabinet, Dr. Radhakrishnan said: "We are passing through a period of crisis. The only way to show our respect to Mr. Nehru is to adopt an attitude free from every kind of prejudice."

The Emergency Committee of the Nehru Cabinet had met in the morning at the Prime Minister's residence when Mr. Nehru's condition became grave and they decided as a matter of national duty to complete the arrangements for a "caretaker" Government as early as possible. The Committee decided that the Home Minister, Mr. Nanda, who ranked second in the Nehru Cabinet, should be the new Prime Minister.

This formality became necessary since there is no provision in the Constitution for the appointment of an acting or officiating Prime Minister. With Mr. Nehru's death his Cabinet ceased to exist and it became necessary to have a new Prime Minister to keep the continuity of the Government until a permanent arrangement was made.

Consequent on the demise of Mr. Nehru, the Council of Ministers stood dissolved with effect from the afternoon of May 27.

C. Long-term Military Assistance By USA: It was officially announced in New Delhi on June 6 that the United States had agreed to provide long-term military assistance for India's defence effort to meet the Chinese threat.

The Defence Ministry issued a Press communique stating that "general agreement" had been reached during Mr. Y. B. Chavan's visit to Washington "as to the military grant assistance which the United States plans to provide with respect to the fiscal year 1965," subject to Congressional approval.

The communique also announced that the two Governments "will continue to consult upon US assistance related to India's long-range defence effort."

There was, however, no agreement yet on the question of supersonic aircraft for India's air defence. The communique simply stated that further talks on this subject would take place soon between the two Governments.

The assistance which USA has promised during the fiscal year 1965—that is, from July 1, 1964, to June 30, 1965,—would be at about the same level as in the fiscal year 1964. The assistance given during the 1963-64 period was more or less equal to the $60 million Nassau aid given after the Chinese attack in October-November, 1962.

The communique said that US aid during the fiscal year 1965 would include "such items as continued support for Indian mountain divisions, air defence communications equipment, transport aircraft support and road building equipment for India's border roads."

In addition, the US Government has agreed to make available in credit before the end of June the unutilized portion of the fiscal 1964 grants to enable India to purchase vehicles and communications equipment and machinery for the modernization of the Indian ordnance factories.

The project report of the new Ambajhari ordnance plant near Nagpur will be financed from the 1963-64 credits, but an additional allocation has been promised during the 1964-65 period for the purchase of equipment for this factory.

For political and constitutional reasons, the present US Government is not inclined to enter into any firm advance commitments in regard to the remaining three years of India's five-year defence plan. But it has assured the Government of India that the necessary assistance would be provided on an year-to-year basis. Neither USA nor India was really interested in making a public declaration of this implicit agreement.

The US Government has no doubt endorsed the broad objectives of India's five-year defence plan which aims at building up an army of 8,25,000 and an air force of 45 squadrons equipped partly with supersonic aircraft. At the same time, it has cautioned India against the heavy strain which such an ambitious defence plan would impose on her economy.

During the discussions in Washington, Mr. Chavan had explained that India herself was anxious to ensure that the defence effort would not impair the rate of her economic development. The communique said that it had been agreed that "to secure this objective careful control of defence expenditures as well as continued external aid would be necessary."

India had sought US assistance to the extent of nearly $800 million during the five-year period. The US Government was reported to have scaled down the figure by a third and offered assistance, in the form of direct grants and long-term credits, totalling about $550 million. The communique did not give any figures, but it referred to the promised US aid as "military grant aid and credit assistance."

It was hoped earlier that the talks on the supply of supersonic aircraft would be completed in time before the official announcement was made of the US decision to provide long-term military assistance to India. But Mr. Chavan had to return suddenly to India on account of Mr. Nehru's death without completing these negotiations. The US Government felt that what had been agreed upon should be announced without any more delay, pending further talks on the air defence question.

The United States is prepared to give India at a nominal price a few squadrons of F-64 Skyray all-weather jet fighters armed with Sidewinder missiles as part of a package offer to meet the immediate requirements of the Indian Air Force. The Skyrays were originally built in 1952 for use by the US Navy and the Marine Corps and are capable of Mach 1 or Mach 1 plus performance which, it is argued, should be good enough for India's air defence for the next few years until she is able to build or acquire faster aircraft. The United States has also offered assistance in the development of HF-24 to help India build her own supersonic aircraft.

The Indian Air Force is, however, not very impressed by the Skyrays which are, no doubt, capable of very fast climbing but are not adequately equipped to search, spot and intercept equally fast enemy aircraft. The production of these planes was stopped in 1958 since these were no longer considered good enough as front-line aircraft by the US Navy and Marine Corps. But India has not turned down the offer, and it is quite possible that the Air Force would eventually agree to have them as part of a stop-gap arrangement.

The final draft of the communique was approved at a meeting between Mr. Chavan and the US Ambassador, Mr. Chester Bowles. On the Indian side, the Cabinet Secretary, Mr. S. S. Khera, and the Defence Secretary, Mr. P. V. R. Rao, were also present. Mr. Bowles was assisted by the Minister-Counsellor of the US Embassy, Mr. Joseph Greene, and the Head of the US Military Supply Mission in India, Major-General John Kelly.

The protracted negotiations between India and USA for military assistance had dragged on for nearly 15 months and had been interrupted twice by two great tragedies. On the first occasion, President J. F. Kennedy was assassinated a day before he was due to sign the necessary papers authorizing long-term aid to India. On the second occasion, Mr. Chavan was scheduled to meet President L. B. Johnson on May 28 or 29 to finalise the latest agreement, but once again a great tragedy came in the way. This time Mr. Nehru died and Mr. Chavan had to return to India suddenly without completing the negotiations.

On both occasions, Mr. Chester Bowles was in Washington to participate in the final discussions. But this time he was determined to see that the agreement would not be bogged down any longer. So he persuaded his own Government as well as the Government of India to go ahead and announce the agreement that had already been reached, without waiting for the conclusion of the talks on air defence.

D. Direct Talks With China Ruled Out—Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri's Statement In Lok Sabha: The Central Minister without Portfolio, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri on June 1 ruled out direct India-China talks on the border question at present because of Peking's continuing intransigence in refusing to accept the Colombo proposals as the basis for such talks.

In a statement in the Lok Sabha, he pointed out that Peking had turned down even the suggestion that talks could start on the basis that neither India nor China would set up civilian checkposts in the demilitarized zone in Ladakh.

The suggestion was originally made by two representatives of Lord Russell, who came to New Delhi in 1963 and met the late Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru. It was repeated by the Ceylonese Premier, Mrs. Sirimavo Bandaranaike, in a letter to Mr. Nehru in April this year.

Mr. Shastri recalled that the late Mr. Nehru had written to Mrs. Bandaranaike that India would be prepared to consider the proposal if China made a direct approach.

The issue was raised in the House by a calling attention notice on the reported rejection of Mrs. Bandaranaike's suggestion by the Chinese Government.

Mr. Shastri affirmed that the Chinese official news agency had characterized the suggestion as a "pre-condition." "If the New China News Agency's comment represents the considered stand of the Government of China, it would be clear that, despite all their professions to the contrary, China is not interested in accepting the Colombo proposals or direct negotiations with India at present."

While answering supplementaries, he admitted that India's willingness to consider the proposal for talks with China on the basis of neither country having posts in the demilitarized zone in Ladakh meant some modification of India's original stand, but even the "new offer" would have put India on par with China with regard to the demilitarized zone.

He maintained that the change was not substantial. But he assured the House that "nothing material has happened" because it was clear from the Chinese news agency report that the Chinese Government was not prepared to have talks on this basis.

The following is the text of Mr. Shastri's statement:

"On April 13, during the course of the reply to the demand for grants, our late Prime Minister made a reference to the question of civil posts in the demilitarized zone in Ladakh. This question of posts had come up because of the Chinese refusal to accept the Colombo proposals in full. The House will recall that one of the two Chinese reservations to the Colombo proposals was that while the Chinese would maintain their so-called civil posts in this demilitarized zone, there should be no Indian civil posts in this area. As the deadlock over the Colombo proposals centred mainly round this Chinese objection, attempts were made by parties friendly to both India and China to find a way out, without departing from the substance of the Colombo proposals.

"On April 13, the House was informed that Mrs. Bandaranaike, in one of her recent letters, had asked us whether the withdrawal of all the Chinese posts in the demilitarized area could be considered by us to be a fulfilment of the Colombo proposals. The same idea had been advocated by the two representatives of Lord Russell who had come and seen the late Prime Minister, last Summer. The representatives of Lord Russell as well as Mrs. Bandaranaike were informed that such a proposal could be considered by us if a proper approach was made by China. Our position on this question remains unchanged. We have declared our willingness to solve the border question through peaceful negotiations. We have demonstrated this willingness by accepting, without reservations, the recommendations of the Colombo Conference.

"The statements emanating from Peking are not encouraging in this matter. The Hon'ble Members must have seen reports of the comment made by the New China News Agency on the question of the withdrawal of posts. The suggestion has been characterized as a 'pre-condition for holding negotiations between the two countries' and as an 'attempt to cover up India's stubborn stand against holding direct negotiations on the basis of the Colombo proposals.' If the New China News Agency's comment represents the considered stand of the Government of China, it would be clear that, despite all their professions to the contrary, China is not interested in accepting the Colombo proposals or in direct negotiations with India at present."

E. "Aid-India" Consortium Meeting: The International "Aid-India" Consortium pledged on May 27 an additional $1,028,000,000 in assistance for the fourth year of India's current Third Five-Year Plan.

The Consortium had earlier pledged a total of $3,417,000,000 for the first three years. The fourth year of the Third Plan began in April, 1964.

The new pledges announced on May 27 were (in millions of dollars): Austria, one; Canada 41; France, 20; West Germany, 95; Italy, 3; Japan, 60; Netherlands, 11; United Kingdom, 84; United States, 435; World Bank and its affiliate the International Development Association, 245.

The Indian Government estimated that its current development plan would require $5,460 million in external assistance from all sources, including non-Consortium members and private foreign investment. Of this amount, the Consortium has now pledged a total of $4,445 million.

The World Bank announced that about one-half of the aid pledged was expected to be in the form of non-project assistance, which could be used to finance imports required for the maintenance of India's economy.

G. Constitution (19th Amendment) Bill Passed: The Constitution (19th Amendment) Bill—now amended as 17th Amendment Bill—was passed by the Lok Sabha on June 2 by 381 votes to 27.

Congress and Communist members greeted the result of the voting with prolonged cheers, while the Swatantra, Jan Sangh and some Independent members cried "shame, shame."

The Central Law Minister, Mr. A. K. Sen, who piloted the Bill, said its passage would enable the State Legislatures to pass land reform laws consistent with the all-India programme for the benefit of the peasantry and the tillers of the soil.

He re-iterated that the programme of land reforms did not violate the spirit of the Constitution. On the contrary, it enabled the various States to carry out the Directive Principles of the Constitution.

He refuted the argument of Dr. L. M. Singhvi that the Government had thrown to the winds Articles 14 and 19 of the Constitution and the Supreme Court decisions on the strength of its brute majority.

The Ninth Schedule to the Constitution, as it stood today, included the Bihar Act which was struck down by the High Court. It was the very first Act to be put in the Ninth Schedule by Parliament by passing the First Constitution Amendment. "Can any one suggest that the spirit of Article 9 of the Constitution was violated by putting the Bihar Act in the Ninth Schedule?" he asked.

He said the definition of what constituted a family in the Bill might not be according to orthodox conceptions, but a definition had to be laid down in the Bill keeping in view the interests of the people and the needs of progressive legislation. The criticism that an "artificial family" had been created was not special to this Bill alone.

In income-tax laws and several other taxation laws, he said, definition of what constituted a family was given. This was necessary in the interests of the people themselves.

He denied the charge that land reform policy was being implemented in a half-hearted manner. He quoted from the Third Plan mid-term appraisal to show that the policy was being fully implemented in all the States.

He explained that the Bill did not seek to confer any benefits on peasants. It was meant to assist the State Governments to pass laws to benefit the peasant. The Government had already reclaimed 7.8 million acres of waste land and distributed it among the landless. A provision of Rs. 7 crores had been made in the Third Plan to reclaim more land. It would be distributed as and when the work was completed.

H. Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari On Price Situation: The Central Finance Minister, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari, on June 4 described the price situation as "critical" and declared that there was no escape from recourse to a "rigorous system of State trading and rigorous control over retail distribution."

He told the Lok Sabha in reply to questions that this, however, could not be done without the co-operation of the States. He was, therefore, advising the Prime Minister-designate, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, to invite the Chief Ministers for a meeting at a very early date and take steps which would yield quick results.

He was very categorical in underlining the need for State trading. "My mind is very clear. There is no alternative to it," he said, answering several supplementaries.

He said the position with regard to prices was "extremely serious" and that the Government was concerned about it. "My honourable colleague, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, the other day did make a mention of this matter. We are not at all happy with things as they are today."

"The fact is, while shortages in certain commodities may be marginal in character, the distribution system that exists in the country magnifies the defects. It seems to the Government now that even if there is a marginal surplus, the present position will continue because the distribution system at various stages will not respond adequately to the law of demand and supply. Unless we have a substantial surplus, the normal operative economic law will not function.

"Therefore, we have come to a critical situation where we have to take steps of a far more serious character."

He said the mere existence of a price stabilization board or committee would not do. There was already the Prices Committee, but it did not seem to be adequate.

This was a matter which had to be considered in conjunction with the Chief Ministers. "To my mind, it is inescapable. There will have to be a rigorous system of State trading and rigorous control over retail distribution. I shall advise the Prime Minister-to-be to invite the Chief Ministers at a very early date and take steps which will yield quick results."

He added: "That is all the assurance I can give now. I cannot say it is an assurance which is satisfactory. To me, it is not."

Mr. H. C. Mathur referred to the statement of Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri that he would discuss the question of prices with the Finance and Food Ministers and the Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission. He wanted to know if they had made any "collective thinking" and its outcome.

Mr. Krishnamachari said that the Central Government could subsidise, to a small extent, perhaps, to meet the cost of control, but other things had to be done by the States.

He said he had had discussions with the Food and Agriculture Minister, but the matter "does not end there." Many more things had to be done even to get a picture of the problem in all its aspects so that adequate measures could be taken to deal with it.

I. FICCI Review Of Economic Situation: In an analysis of the current economic situation, the Federation of the Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI) on June 5 described the price situation in the country as "disturbing" and said that "for a variety of reasons which stem mainly from governmental policy, it is next to impossible to increase production."

"Except prices and population which seem to be keeping up a dangerous and unwanted buoyancy, there is hardly any sector of the economy which reveals the requisite forward push.

"It is worse than folly to imagine that the distributive trade is the villain of the piece and that the levels of production and taxation have no influence on the price level".

Recalling the earlier assessment of the economic scene made during FICCI's annual session in March, the analysis regretted that the situation had not perceptibly improved". In other spheres also the conditions were not "propitious."

"A matter of anxiety in this situation is that responsible spokesmen of the Government and political parties are indulging in statements which are not calculated to improve and strengthen the forces of production and, therefore, of progress."

According to the analysis, delays in the issue of licences, utilization of foreign exchange and in the "ideology governing distribution of fields between private and public sectors" were not a little responsible for decreasing the tempo of production.

Investment trends, as reflected in the stock exchanges and in the capital market were "far from healthy." "There were great expectations that the Finance Minister would create the much-needed atmosphere for the speedy development of industries." While the Finance Minister had held that economic development was the country's paramount need, some of his Budget proposals, however, had been at variance with, at any rate not conducive to, the fulfilment of this foremost objective.

FICCI said the stock exchange had become "sensitive and sophisticated with shareholdings becoming spread over thousands and thousands of people." The majority of shareholders belonged to middle income groups.

The analysis recognized that the Budget had endeavoured to assist to some extent the corporate sector to increase its resources. The major factor was a human factor—the individual.

J. Development Bank: The Development Bank commenced operations from July 1.

The Bank will have an initial paid-up capital of Rs. 10 crores to be entirely contributed by the Reserve Bank. This will be supplemented by an interest-free loan of Rs. 10 crores from the Central Government repayable in 15 equal instalments after a period of 15 years from the date of the loan.

The Bank will also be entitled to borrow from the Reserve Bank for periods up to five years against trustee securities, against bona fide commercial bills or promissory notes bearing two good signatures.

For long terms, the Bank can borrow from the National Industrial Credit (long-term operations) Fund which is being established by the Reserve Bank with an initial contribution of Rs. 10 crores and an annual contribution of Rs. 5 crores commencing with the year ending on June 30, 1965. The resources of the Fund are to be utilized by the Reserve Bank for granting loans to the Development Bank for the purpose of acquiring shares, bonds or debentures of other financial institutions or for financing the Development Bank's own operations.

The Reserve Bank may also purchase out of this Fund bonds and debentures issued by the Development Bank for augmenting its resources.

Apart from these resources, the Development Bank will have at its disposal a fund to be called the Development Assistance Fund to be built up from contributions to be made by the Central Government, from time to time to enable the Bank to provide assistance for projects which, for various reasons such as heavy investment involved or low anticipated rate of return on capital, may not be able to raise finance from banks or other lending institutions but which may nevertheless be considered as of importance justifying special assistance.

The Development Bank can further borrow, with the Central Government's approval, foreign currency from any foreign bank or financial institution and can also raise deposits or borrow money on bonds in India. The Bank will have thus ample resources from the very commencement of its operations.

K. Ban On Forward Trading In 14 Commodities: The Government banned on June 1 forward trading in 14 commodities including groundnut, groundnut oil and groundnut oilcake.

All outstanding forward contracts in these commodities were consequently closed at the rates prevailing at the close of business on June 1.

A Press Note explained that the decision had been taken because various measures adopted so far to prevent speculative excesses had failed to produce the desired result.

The commodities affected by the new decision were groundnut, groundnut oil, mustardseed including taramira seed, rapeseed or toria, groundnut oilcake, mustard oilcake including taramira oilcake, methi, coriander seed, cottonseed oilcake, sesamum oilcake, rapeseed oilcake, aniseed, arhar, chuni and mung chuni.

L. Gold Control Bill Referred To Select Committee: The Rajya Sabha adjourned sine die on June 6 after adopting an official motion to refer the Gold (Control) Bill to a joint committee of Parliament. The Bill had earlier been passed by the Lok Sabha.

During the brief discussion on the motion, the Gold Control Order came in for strong criticism from the members, who said that it had failed to achieve the twin objectives of stopping gold smuggling and reducing gold prices. It had only helped in ruining thousands of goldsmiths.

Mr. B. R. Bhagat, Deputy Finance Minister, replying to the debate, said that even though smuggling had not been fully stopped and the prices had not come down much since the introduction of the Order the measure was "necessary in the interest of the economy". Though it might take some time to stabilize the price of gold, the demand for gold would be less and, therefore, the incentive for smuggling removed.

The Gold Control Order had helped to stabilize the price of gold. This was a "partial achievement". The total quantity of gold declared since the introduction of the Order was valued at Rs. 43 crores. Of this, Rs. 15 crores worth of gold was declared by individuals and princes. The information about the actual quantity of gold declared by princes alone was, however, not available.

Referring to Mr. Bhupesh Gupta's demand to seize gold from the princes, Mr. Bhagat said: "It is not our policy to seize gold from private persons. We have not come to the stage when we can seize private property and private gold holdings".

On the rehabilitation of goldsmiths, he said that out of the 300,000 goldsmiths 200,000 had already applied for licences. About 40,000 goldsmiths had been rehabilitated and 9,000 members of their families given jobs. The Government had so far set apart Rs. 3.5 crores to give loans to goldsmiths.

M. Upper Krishna Project—Foundation Stones Laid: The Central Minister without Portfolio, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri laid on May 22 the foundation stones for two dams across the Krishna River at Alamatti and Narayanpur, 40 miles apart, which together is known as the Upper Krishna project.

This Rs. 120-crore project will be the largest and most important major irrigation project of Mysore State, designed to bring large tracts of arable land under assured irrigation in Bijapur, Gulbarga and Raichur districts—areas often subjected to drought and scarcity conditions.

The Upper Krishna project consists of two storage dams, one near Alamatti in Bijapur district and the other near Narayanpur in Gulbarga district, with a gross command of 19,00,000 acres and an irrigable command of 12,00,000 acres. The water utilized will be 225 TMC feet with a provision to increase it in future to 340 TMC feet under the same set-up.

The Alamatti reservoir will be constructed about three miles below the confluence of the Ghataprabha with the Krishna. The dam will be of masonry construction, 4,650 feet long and 100 feet high above the lowest river-bed level.

It will have a gross capacity of 58.8 TMC feet and a live storage of 43.6 TMC feet. It is also contemplated to generate 7,200 kw of power at the dam site. Fifty-six villages and 40,479 acres of cultivable land will be submerged.

The dam is estimated to cost Rs. 15.23 crores. The left bank canal costing Rs. 46.17 crores will be 282 miles long with three branches—Indi, Malaghatti and Jevargi.

A provision for a right bank canal has been made for future development which will irrigate 1,00,000 acres mostly in Raichur district. The Alamatti storage will irrigate 2,72,000 acres in Bijapur district and 2,78,000 acres in Gulbarga district.

Forty miles below the Alamatti reservoir will be the Narayanpur storage dam. It will be a composite dam, masonry in river gorge, 2,204 feet long and earthen at the flanks, 32,284 feet long, with a height of 128 feet above the river-bed level. The gross storage will be 49.3 TMC and live storage 46.2 TMC feet. The reservoir will submerge 22 villages and about 23,150 acres of cultivable area.

Power is also contemplated to be generated to an extent of 18,500 kw.

The left bank canal with a branch canal known as Shahapur will have 49.3 TMC and live storage of 46.2, irrigating 2,80,000 acres in Gulbarga district. The right bank canal with two branches—Raichur and Maski—will be 119 miles long, irrigating an area of 3,70,000 acres in Raichur district. The dam will cost Rs. 27.1 crores while the left and right bank canals Rs. 13.6 and Rs. 18.6 crores respectively.

Mr. Prem Bhasin, Mr. Surendra Mohan and Mr. Vasudeo Singh were elected joint secretaries.

The Party has adopted a hut as its election symbol. Its flag will be slightly different from the P-SP and Socialist Party flags. The exact pattern will be decided later.

The ad hoc National Committee of the party at its meeting unanimously decided the "aims and means" of the new organization. They are as follows:

(1) To achieve, by democratic and peaceful means, a socialist society, free from social, political and economic exploitation of man by man and of nation by nation.

(2) The party will organize, guide, and lead peaceful revolutionary class struggles, mass movements and civil disobedience; promote constructive efforts and also use parliamentary methods to secure political power in order to eliminate all forms of injustice and feudal-capitalist exploitation.

The meeting was also attended by two representatives of the Peasants' and Workers' Party. They have decided to advise their Central Committee to unite with the new Party and get this decision ratified by their party conference.

Meanwhile, it was decided that the Peasants and Workers Party will associate itself with the proceedings of the ad hoc National Committee and its various subcommittees.

Three P-SP members, Mr. M. S. Gurupadaswamy, Mr. Jaswant Mehta and Mr. Rajendra Barua, said in a statement on June 7 that they could not accept the decision of the National Executive of the P-SP to join the ad hoc committee of the Samyukta Socialist Party. Their group could not associate itself with the formation of the new party for three reasons: first, it was not based on proper and realistic appreciation of the national situation; secondly, it visualised an anti-democratic alliance in the future and thirdly, it was essentially motivated by destructive animosity against the Congress. "We find more fury than substance in this consolidation."

O. Urban Population: Although over the decade 1951-61, India's urban population has risen from 6.24 crores to 7.89 crores, the number of towns has fallen from 3,060 to 2,700. The reason lies in the more precise definition of "town" adopted by the 1961 Census.

For the purposes of the 1961 Census, a town was broadly defined as an area with a population of at least 5,000 persons, having predominantly urban characteristics, and where three-fourths of the working population is in the non-agricultural sector. On the application of this definition, 803 towns lost their urban status. On the other hand, the number of new towns added in the 1961 Census was 497.

The highest rate of urbanization was observed in Assam where the number of towns rose from 27 to 60. Assam was followed by West Bengal, where the number rose from 120 to 184.

On applying the 1961 test, the urban population of India in 1951 works out to 5.60 crores against 6.23 crores estimated by the 1951 Census.

But since the size of the population was not the only deciding factor in determining the status of an area in 1961, there are 253 areas with populations below 5,000 which became towns because they had marked urban characteristics and a non-agricultural complexion.

Similarly, there are 4,197 villages having populations above 5,000, of which 1,097 are in Kerala, 545 in Madras, 436 in Andhra and 485 in Bihar. There are 776 villages with populations above 10,000, of which 510 are in Kerala, 96 in Madras, 44 in Bihar, 29 in Maharashtra and 28 in Andhra.

The total rural population of 36.03 crores lives in 567,351 villages.

Of the 2,700 towns, 107 have populations over 1,00,000 and are known as cities. Seven cities have populations of over one million—Bombay, Calcutta, Delhi, Madras, Ahmedabad, Bangalore and Hyderabad.

P. "Naya Paisa" Becomes "Paisa": With effect from June 1, 1964, the prefix "naya" and "naye" in the designation "naya paisa" or "naye paise," which appeared on the reverse of the decimal coins, was deleted.

The coin in the denominations of 50, 25, 10, 5, 2 and 1 to be minted as from June 1 will be termed "paisa" or "paise" coins as the case may be.

The paisa or paise coins will be issued from July 1, 1964 by the offices of the Reserve Bank of India at Bombay and Calcutta in the first instance. They will be supplemented gradually after sufficient stocks have been produced by issue from other offices of the Reserve Bank.

The design, shape, weight and metal composition of the paisa or paise coins will be the same as those of the existing naya paisa coins.

The paisa/paise coins and the existing naye paise coins will both be legal tender and have the same value.

The issue of the paise coins does not involve the withdrawal of the coins with the words naya or naye. The naya paise coins, as well as the nickel and quarternary alloy half-rupee and quarter rupee coins, will continue to be issued and reissued and be in circulation and be legal tender along with the new coins.

IRAQ

A. President Arif On Interim Constitution: The Iraqi Embassy in New Delhi released the following summary of President A. S. Arif's statement on the country's Interim Constitution:

"We hereby proclaim the Interim Constitution of the Republic of Iraq; this Constitution shall be our guide for patriotic, nationalist and human endeavours and the fundamental authority in respect to the foundations of rule and in respect of regulating the relationship of the State with the individuals as well as with the society in the political, economic, social and cultural fields for the period of transition which, with God's leave, will be very brief.

"It is worth mentioning that this Constitution has been prepared after consideration of our people's historical, geographical, and cultural status, and after keen examination of its conditions and the factors governing its national existence in the past, present and future. Hence it provides for democracy and socialism which are derived from the Arab and Islamic legacy. Also it strengthens the ties binding Iraq with the Arab nation and the Islamic message which is considered as a principal foundation of the Constitution.

"Among the first goals of this Interim Constitution are the essentials of society, for it ensures social solidarity, equal opportunities, family security, motherhood protection and social insurance in cases of old age, sickness, disability and death. Also it ensures economic development, social justice, co-operation of the public sector and the private sector, increase of production, raising living standards, the immunity of natural wealth which is a state property, the inviolability of public property, the protection of private property, and the encouragement of co-operation and co-operative establishments.

"Among the most important points of this Constitution are also the definition of public rights and obligations, and the provision for the essential national and nationalistic rights, such as the right to work and right to employment, the right to practice legal self-defence against accusation, inviolability of homes, the right to hold meetings, the right to free education, medical care and franchise. The Constitution also provides for the freedom of religion and religious practice, freedom of opinion and scientific research, freedom of Press and publication and the freedom of forming societies and unions, all in accordance with the legal rules. It states that Iraqis are equal and that no discrimination whatsoever between them is allowed on grounds of race, origin, language, or religion, whether they live in the North, South, East or West of Iraq for there is no difference between Baghdad, Sulaimaniya, Basrah, Karbala, Mosul and Kirkuk etc. All are equal in rights and public obligations and all must co-operate in the protection of the country's entity and the unity of ranks, and share the responsibility of defence of its security and peace and march side by side in this sound and rapid progress towards the great change which is going to take place in pursuit of a better society.

"Furthermore, the Interim Constitution lays the rules for the Republic's structure in the terms of pertaining to the election of the Republic's President, and the definition of his authorities, the definition of the powers of the legislature represented by the National Assembly, the Council of Ministers and the National Council of Revolutionary Command during the transition period, the definition of the powers of the Executive and the Government, and the duties of the armed forces which consist of the army, police, security police, and gendarme whose duties are to protect the country, not to serve any party. The Constitution provided that the period of transition should not exceed three years with effect from the date it comes into force.

"It is hoped that the period of transition will be greatly shortened by political stability that this country now enjoys. The socialism we need is the solidarity which Islam ordains, based on the Arab traditions, in the feeling of brotherhood, integrity and reciprocal responsibility, whether on the level of individual, tribes or collectives. We mean thereby social justice, non-exploitation, removal of monopolization and providing opportunities for all.

"Iraq State is an Arab Islamic State and the basis of its Constitution is the tolerant Islamic Law. The Constitution was drawn up after seeking the advice of men of experience and opinion and reviewing modern Constitutions. This is the Interim Constitution. It is clear in its foundation on the Islamic Law and your glorious legacy. It is a prelude to the permanent Constitution in which the decisive word will be yours, you at the National Assembly. I hope that this Constitution will mark the opening of a new and prosperous era.

"The Constitution which has been outlined is very similar in its contents to that of the United Arab Republic. This similarity will be the means for a Pan-Arab unity, the initiation of which will be with the United Arab Republic."

ISRAEL

A. Curbs On West German Scientists In UAR—Knesset's Appeal: The Knesset unanimously adopted on May 4 a resolution calling upon the West German Government to put an immediate end to the activities of West German scientists and experts in UAR.

It characterized such activities as constituting a grave danger to Israel's security and to the peace of the region.

Earlier, the Foreign Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir said in a statement to the Knesset: "We expect the German Government to undertake without delay the measures necessary to stop the work of the German scientists in Egypt. No other course will be understood or accepted."

The Government decided on May 1 that it would make a statement in the Knesset, rather than reply to the three Opposition motions for the agenda. While there was no debate, each Knesset faction made a "statement." This was in accordance with a decision of the House Committee earlier in the day.

Mrs. Meir told the House that the Government had repeatedly expressed its disappointment over the Bonn Government's failure to take requisite steps. The German Government could not remain indifferent to the fact that, 19 years after the fall of the Hitler regime, members of the same people were again involved in actions aimed at helping President Nasser to attack the State of Israel, in which the survivors of the Holocaust gathered.

President Nasser, she declared, was threatening Israel with "the very rockets which he was producing with the aid of German scientists."

"We have not said that these scientists were sent by the Bonn Government. But it is clear that only that Government can and should do all in its power to effect their return—whether by special legislation or in any other way so as to prevent its citizens from supplying know-how to the enemies of Israel which can be used to carry out their evil purpose."

Israel, she said, could not accept the view that the choice facing the Bonn Government was one between assuring the freedom of the individual and refraining from action to prevent its citizens in UAR from aiding in the preparations for the liquidation of Israel. Even in a democratic regime, freedom of the individual did not mean freedom to commit crimes or to engage in their preparation.

The following is the text of the resolution:

"The Knesset re-iterates its resolution of March 20, 1963, in which it denounced the activity of German scientists and experts engaged in Egypt in the production of weapons of destruction against Israel, which constitutes a grave danger to the security of Israel and its population.

"Since the adoption of that resolution, 14 months have passed, and the activity of the German scientists has not been discontinued.

"The Knesset expresses its displeasure that the authorities of the German Federal Republic have not yet taken any effective action in order to prevent the said activities, which are pregnant with the most dangerous consequences and undermine the security of Israel and the peace of the region.

"The Knesset again expresses its urgent and emphatic demand that urgent measures be adopted by the competent authorities in West Germany in order to put an immediate end to this criminal activity. The authorities of the German Federal Republic and the German people should feel the heavy responsibility for the deeds of their nationals in Egypt.

"The Knesset calls on enlightened public opinion in the world to exert its influence in order to bring to an end this activity of the German experts."

B. Amendment To Income-tax Ordinance—Cabinet Approves Draft: The Cabinet approved on May 3 a draft amendment to the Income-tax Ordinance imposing a maximum tax of 25 per cent on capital gains from various sources.

The Income-tax Commissioner, Mr. Uziel Steinberg, who reported on the contents of the Bill at a news conference in Jerusalem on May 7, explained that capital gains accruing from Government bonds, key money on flats (but not on business premises), land sales which are subject to the Land Betterment Tax, household goods, and profits deriving from the linking of currency will be exempted from the tax. Similarly, the tax will not be implemented immediately on capital gains made from the resale of securities, but the Minister of Finance will be empowered to enact regulations governing their taxation.

The Minister's decision had been held up pending the report of a joint Treasury-banking committee which is studying the problem of deducting the tax on capital gains from securities at source.

Under the draft Bill, losses will be offset against gains for tax purposes during an eight-year period. This will work by recording losses during any year against any capital gains accruing during the following seven years.

New immigrants will be entitled to a four-year period of grace. Thus, the purchase date of a security or other property will be considered as beginning with the fourth year after their arrival in the country.

The tax will be 25 per cent on gains made on a resale less than a year after the purchase date, declining by five per cent (of the total tax) every year. If the security or property is held for 20 years before being sold, the profit will be tax free.

A. Tomb Found At Dothan Site: The Director-General of the Antiquities Department announced in Amman on May 27 that archaeologists excavating the site of ancient Dothan, 60 miles north of Jerusalem, had recovered nearly 2,400 objects from a tomb constructed about 3,000 years ago.

The discovery, by workers of the Near East School of Archaeology under Dr. Joseph Free, was the largest tomb find ever excavated at the site of the ancient city.

Dothan flourished as early as the middle bronze age, about 2000 BC, the time of the biblical patriarchs Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Joseph.

The newly-discovered tomb is believed to date between 1100 BC and 1400 BC. The excavators also found medieval Arab ruins on the site and below them Byzantine and Roman remains.

A. Governors' Conference: The Governors' Conference, meeting in Rawalpindi on May 22, directed the Provincial Governments to check vigorously social evils like display of heavy dowry and funeral feasts.

The Conference, over which President Ayub Khan presided, also considered the rehabilitation of Muslim refugees coming into East Pakistan and took a number of decisions for their settlement.

It also discussed family planning and the results so far achieved through campaigns launched in this connexion.

Besides the Governors of East and West Pakistan, the Conference was also tended by Central Ministers, Finance Ministers of the two Provinces, and the Chief Secretaries, and the Central Secretaries.

According to a Government handout, the Conference considered the Report on Eradication of Social Evils and took a number of decisions on administrative and other matters. The report was referred back to the Provinces for further study, with a directive that it should be brought back to the Conference at the next meeting.

It considered the ostentatious display of dowry, which should be discouraged. Similarly, the Conference felt that funeral feasts should be discouraged, as they were a heavy burden on the bereaved family. It thought that instead of feasting themselves at the cost of the bereaved family, the friends and mourners could perhaps go to a local mosque, where the head of the bereaved family would receive them during certain specified hours for a few days.

The Conference further decided that Provincial Governments should take steps to ban obscene literature and films extolling crime and sex.

B. Mid-term Review Of Second Plan: The National Economic Council, the country's supreme economic body, approved on May 20 the annual development programme for 1964-65 envisaging an expenditure of Rs. 655 crores—Rs. 395 crores in the public sector and Rs. 260 crores in the private sector.

The Council, which met under the chairmanship of President Ayub Khan also considered the mid-Plan review—an evaluation of progress in the first three years of the Second Five-Year Plan.

The Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission, Mr. Said Hasan, presenting the estimates for the Annual Development Programme for 1964-65, pointed out that after estimating the actual expenditure in the first four years of the Plan, it appeared that the balance felt would be Rs. 395 crores in the Government-financed sector and Rs. 115 crores in the private sector. A provision of a net programme of Rs. 395 crores in the annual development programme for 1964-65 was, therefore, needed to ensure that the financial targets of the Plan were fully implemented in the public sector.

As regards private investment, he said, it was expected to reach a level of Rs. 250 crores in 1965, thereby exceeding the financial targets of the Plan by 17 per cent. In overall terms, therefore, the actual expenditure during the Plan period would be about Rs. 2,445 crores compared with the Plan target of Rs. 2,300 crores—a commendable achievement by any standard.

In the public sector, the net programme of Rs. 395 crores would require a gross budget allocation of Rs. 473 crores, after allowing for a shortfall of about 17 per cent which is in line with recent experience. Of this, an allocation of Rs. 205 crores is for East Pakistan, Rs. 195 crores for West Pakistan and Rs. 73 crores for the Centre.

The provision for East Pakistan is higher than the balance of Rs. 171 crores which if it is left with for the last year of the Second Plan and the proposed provision of Rs. 205 crores, will mean that East Pakistan will be reaching parity with West Pakistan, even though it started with a share of less than 40 per cent in the total public sector expenditure in the first year of the Second Plan.

The development expenditure in East Pakistan has been accelerated sharply in the last four years. Taking the total expenditure in East Pakistan in the public sector, both Central and Provincial, the increase has been from Rs. 78 crores in 1963-64 to Rs. 227 crores in 1964-65 i.e. an increase of nearly three times.

During the same time, the level of expenditure in West Pakistan has doubled. The suggested distribution of the total development programme between East and West Pakistan in 1964-65 is, therefore, in line with the strategy of accelerating the pace of development in East Pakistan and narrowing down the disparities between the two regions.

The absorption capacity of East Pakistan has risen dramatically during the last four years. Whereas huge budgetary shortfalls were a familiar feature in East Pakistan in the pre-Second Plan era, recently the utilization of budgetary allocations has been faster in East Pakistan compared with West Pakistan.

In addition to the gross budgeted programme of Rs. 473 crores for 1964-65, it is proposed to make a provision of Rs. 40 crores for the Works Programme. The Works Programme for which Rs. 10 crores were provided in 1962-63 and Rs. 30 crores in 1963-64 is supplementary to the normal annual development programme.

In this programme also East Pakistan obtains Rs. 10 crores more than West Pakistan, i.e., a total of Rs. 30 crores more than West Pakistan in the annual development programme and the Works Programme taken together.

Though the overall performance under the Plan is fairly satisfactory, it is not very even from one sector to another; while some sectors have not been able to make full use of their allocations, other sectors have exceeded them; thus water and power and transport and communications will be over-fulfilling their financial targets. While there is likely to be a shortfall in agriculture and in some of the social sectors, an effort has been made in formulating the programme for 1964-65 to remove some of the imbalances in sectoral implementation, but it is neither possible nor desirable that all the excesses and shortfalls of the previous four years should be smoothed out in the last year of the Plan.

The evaluation report highlights the progress made by Pakistan's economy during the Second Plan period.

During the first three years of the Second Plan, the gross national product is estimated to have increased at an average annual rate of 4.2 per cent. The provisional estimates for the current year indicate that the growth rate in 1963-64 may be between 6.5 and 7 per cent. There is no doubt that the Second Plan target of 24 per cent increase in the GNP will be fully achieved.

The agricultural sector, in spite of year to year fluctuations due to weather, has been growing steadily over the last five years. The current prospects are that the economy can look forward to an overall growth rate at least 5 per cent in a year of normal crops and much higher growth rates in case the weather is really favourable.

Another important index of the country's progress is the accelerated expansion of experts. As against the Plan estimate of Rs. 1,125 crores of exports over the entire Plan period, actual exports in the first three years are up to about Rs. 740 crores. If the export performance is maintained at about the current level of Rs. 290 to Rs. 300 crores in the next two years, the Plan estimates will be exceeded by about Rs. 200 crores. This means that export earnings over the Plan period will increase at an annual rate of about 6 per cent as against only 2 per cent forecast in the Plan.

This encouraging export performance has also enabled the country to finance a significant proportion of its imports of capital goods and raw materials for their manufacture. It is estimated that around Rs. 100 crores are being spent annually out of Pakistan's own foreign exchange earnings on development imports.

Another feature of the performance of the Second Plan is the increase in the domestic effort of the country. It is expected that the Plan will be exceeded in financial terms with much less use of foreign assistance than originally contemplated. Whereas the Plan envisaged that the total development outlay of Rs. 2,300 crores would be financed to the extent of about 50 per cent (Rs. 1,155 crores) through foreign aid and loans and PL 480 Counterpart Funds, the actual financial expenditure is expected to be about Rs. 2,445 crores of which foreign assistance will supply Rs. 950 crores or less than 40 per cent.

Formerly called USS Diablo, PNS Ghazi is a later version of the World War II submarine which had undergone extensive modernization to suit the requirements of the Pakistan Navy.

A large number of distinguished guests attended the transfer ceremony of the American submarine to Pakistan including the US Ambassador to Pakistan, Mr. McConaughy and the Pakistan Ambassador to Washington, Mr. G. Ahmed.

Accepting the submarine from the US Navy, Vice-Admiral A. R. Khan, Commander-in-Chief of the Pakistan Navy, said that PNS Ghazi fulfilled "a long-standing requirement of the Pakistan Navy" and its transfer "underlined the spirit of alliance between us and the United States."

Mr. McConaughy, speaking on the occasion, paid warm tributes to the Pakistan Navy and said that the submarine could not have been better placed. It would make the Pakistan Navy more versatile and better equipped. He expressed the desire of the US Government to continue its military assistance programme to Pakistan and spoke of Pakistan's determination to preserve her "freedom and democracy."

SAUDI ARABIA

A. Aramco Report For 1963: The Arabian American Oil Company's (Aramco) annual review of operations for 1963 was published in London on May 22.

The review placed the estimate of proved total liquid hydro-carbon reserves at 57,811,000,000 barrels—an increase of 1,522,000,000 barrels over 1962.

This was a smaller increase in proven reserves than in previous years, when the figures were (in million barrels): 1962, 9,744; 1961, 2,005; 1960, 7,445; and 1959, 2,358. Saudi Arabia still holds the second largest proved oil reserves—17.9 per cent of the estimated world total of reserves of 335,370 million barrels at the end of 1963, according to the Oil and Gas Journal. (Kuwait heads the list with 18.9 per cent of total proved world oil reserves). The search for new sources of oil continued despite the high level of reserves, and five exploration parties were at work in areas extending from the Gravel Plains in the north to the remote Rub' al-Khali in the south, in addition to seismic refraction parties, stratigraphic parties and groups undertaking geological studies.

During 1963 crude oil production, refining and exports all reached record levels. Average daily crude production rose to 1,629,018 barrels—an increase of 7.1 per cent over 1962 and reached an annual total of 596 million barrels compared with 555 million in 1962. Total cumulative production at the end of 1963, the Company's 25th year of commercial production, had reached a total of 5,914 million barrels.

The Ras Tanura refinery processed a record 97,441,801 barrels of crude, and total exports rose to a new high at 583 million barrels.

Aramco relinquished 227,306 square miles of its concession to the Saudi Arabian Government on March 24, 1963, and progressive relinquishments by 1963 reduced the Company's exclusive area to 20,000 square miles—less than 3 per cent of its original exclusive and preferential areas.

Regular employees numbered 12,988 at the end of 1963, of whom 10,391 (or 80 per cent) were Saudi Arabians. Aramco spent $22.8 million through Saudi Arabian businessmen during the year—an increase of 51 per cent over 1962—and in all about $86 million was spent within the country by Aramco and its employees, compared with $76 million in 1962.

The new crude oil stabilizer at Ras Yanura was nearly completed by the end of the year, and will eventually more than double the refinery's crude stabilization capacity. At the Ras Tanura Marine Terminal work on new installations to increase crude oil and products handling capacity has been started, and design and engineering studies for a $10 million sea island to increase crude oil shipping capacity of the port by 500,000 barrels daily were also completed. The new two-berth island will be completed in 1965.

Other improvements during the year increased the capacity to produce refrigerated liquified petroleum gas from 3,500 to 12,000 barrels daily. Exports of refrigerated butane and propane gas totalled 1,674,322 barrels during 1963.

YEMEN

A. Spy Ring Smashed: Sanaa Radio announced on May 26 that a spy and sabotage ring working for British authorities in Aden and for the deposed Imam of Yemen had been smashed by the Yemen Republic.

The Radio, quoting a statement by Mr. Ahmad al Marwani, Minister of Information, said: "All but the ring leader, Mohammed Ali Sari, has been summarily executed in accordance with Mohammedan law".

His statement alleged that the ring which had been "employing simpletons in spy and sabotage activities within the Republic", had been "uncovered and completely smashed" by Yemen Republican forces. The statement named six members of the ring, but observers in Sanaa said that none of them seemed to be well-known.

Mr. Marwani, in his statement, accused British authorities in Aden of using the ring "for subversive activity" against the Republic.

In a commentary broadcast by Sanaa Radio, Lieutenant-Colonel Ali Abdullah al-Sallal, son of the President, said that Mohammad Ali Sari confessed during interrogation that he was working "for the British and Sharif of Beihan"—meaning Sharif Husain bin Ahmad al Halabi, father of the ruler of Beihan State and Interior Minister of the South Arabian Federation.

Sanaa Radio said that tape-recorded confessions of the plotters would be broadcast after the investigation was completed. "Various types of British manufactured weapons" were found in their hide-out along with "bags of silver riyal coins and gold sovereigns".

B. UN Mission Extended: The UN Secretary-General, U Thant, on May 4 informed the Security Council that Saudi Arabia and the UAR had concurred with his suggestion that the UN Observation Mission in Yemen be extended for two months as from May 4.

He added that in the absence of any objection from members of the Council he had consulted informally, he proposed to extend the Mission until July 4.

He reported that UN Observers on the northern frontier had found no movements of military supplies. The control exercised by the Observers on a long frontier was necessarily far from complete.

The territory on the Yemeni side of the border was occupied by royalist forces. Yemeni and UAR authorities no longer alleged that arms were coming in quantity over the northern frontier, but now claimed that they were being introduced from the Beihan area of South Arabia.

He observed that in the period covered by the report there was no progress in troop reduction towards the implementation of the disengagement agreement. Moreover, if the military situation appeared to have become somewhat more favourable for the Government forces and the UAR, no actual end of the fighting appeared in sight.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. Gold Deposits Found In Siberia: The Soviet Government newspaper Izvestia said on March 29 that gold production had been stepped up to pay for imported wheat and machines. It added that Russia's reserves of gold were rich enough to last another 100 years.

Izvestia was answering speculations in financial circles abroad that Soviet gold reserves were running dry—with the implication that Moscow may not be able to pay all its current debts.

Referring to the region around the Siberian river Lena, the traditional Soviet gold mining territory. Izvestia said: "Nature has provided so much ore here that it is sufficient for 100 years, and will be sufficient for another 100 years."

The Soviet claims coincided with the resumption of heavy Soviet gold sales on Paris and London markets, apparently to pay for US and Canadian wheat shipments and other goods.

A gold shipment of 8½ tons was reported to have arrived in Paris on March 30.

Izvestia gave no figure, however, of the estimated value of Soviet reserves. Neither did it state precisely the value of the amount now being mined annually. This figure has been a closely-guarded secret, at which Western experts can only guess.

A recent estimate by the US Central Intelligence Agency put Soviet annual production at about five million ounces worth between $150 to $170 million.

Other Western authorities considered this figure a gross underestimation.

It compares to a US 1933 production of 5,240,000 ounces.

On January 28, 1964, the organ of the Russian Republic Sovietskaya Rossiya printed an appeal to gold miners to fill the nation's coffers to the brim.

Izvestia, claiming that Siberia was still rich with gold, said Soviet geologists had discovered other bountiful deposits.

B. USA Launches Two-Seater Space-craft: The United States on April 8 put into orbit an un-manned two-seater space-craft in an important test of its man-on-the-Moon programme.

The satellite, which weighed 7,000 lbs. was packed with instruments and was fired atop a two-stage Titan-2 rocket from Cape Kennedy. This was part of America's Gemini programme which should see a two-man Earth orbit later in 1964.

The experiment was a test of both the modified Titan-2 and the capsule's aerodynamics qualities.

CHINA

A. Mr. Chou En-lai's Foreign Tour: The Prime Minister, Mr. Chou En-lai, undertook a foreign tour between December 14, 1963 and March 1, 1964. Among the countries he visited were Albania, Burma, Ceylon and several African States.

He arrived in Cairo by special plane on December 14, 1963 with a party of high-ranking Chinese officials at the invitation of the UAR President, Col. G. A. Nasser.

He was welcomed at the airport by the Chairman of the UAR Council of Ministers, Mr. Aly Sabri, on behalf of President Nasser.

Marshal Chen Yi, the Chinese Vice-Premier and Foreign Minister, who had arrived in Cairo earlier in the day, was also at the aiport to receive Mr. Chou En-lai.

In a written statement at the airport, Mr. Chou En-lai said that this was his first visit to UAR and that friendly contacts between China and Egypt began from very early days in history. "In the anti-imperialist struggles of modern time, our two peoples have always sympathized with and supported each other. The friendship between our two peoples will last throughout the ages like the ever flowing Nile and Yellow Rivers.

"This is also my first visit to the African continent. I would like to avail myself of this opportunity to pay my tribute to all the new emerging, independent African States and their peoples and to all the fighting peoples in Africa. All the oppressed nations and peoples in Africa, Asia and throughout the world are bound to win liberation."

Reception:

A reception was given by President Nasser to Mr. Chou En-lai on December 14, 1963.

In his speech, Mr. Chou En-lai expressed the hope that his visit to UAR would help further enhance the mutual understanding between the two countries.

He said that in the great struggle of the Arab people and the African people to win and safeguard national independence, the struggle and the victory of the people of UAR occupied an important place. The victory and achievements of the people of UAR encouraged the people of Arab countries in their struggle against imperialism and had given a powerful impetus to the national liberation movement in Africa.

In his speech, President Nasser said: "Here, you will find many who have long awaited your visit to UAR. You will find them all filled with boundless admiration for the great revolution of China and its decisive victory. You will find them follow with the greatest interest the achievements of the gigantic Chinese revolution, wishing it all success from the bottom of their hearts."

He re-affirmed the stand of the UAR Government and people for the restoration of China's legitimate seat in United Nations.

He pointed out that it could not possibly be imagined that United Nations could assume its role effectively except through the restoration of China's legitimate seat.

On December 15, 1963 Mr. Chou En-lai visited the UAR Military Academy in Cairo. Later, he visited the Egyptian Museum.

The following day, he and his party paid a visit to an automobile factory near Cairo.

At Aswan:

On December 17, 1963 he flew to Port Said, and the following morning he left for Aswan.

Speaking at a luncheon given by the Governor of Aswan, the Chinese Premier said he was deeply impressed by the aspirations and enthusiasm of the people of UAR in building their country. Innumerable facts had proved that the Asian and African people were not only able to drive out imperialism and colonialism through their heroic struggles, but were also able to wrest more wealth from nature through their own strenuous labour.

He returned to Cairo the same evening.

Talks With President Nasser:

Mr. Chou En-lai and President Nasser held their third round of talks in Cairo on December 19, 1963.

Also on December 19, the Chinese leader and his party visited the Great Pyramid.

He gave a reception in honour of President Nasser in Cairo on December 20, 1963.

In a formal speech on the occasion he said: "Our present visit to the UAR has been crowned with success, in that it had enhanced our mutual understanding and promoted friendship between the Chinese and UAR people."

President Nasser said that Mr. Chou En-lai's visit had gone beyond the sphere of direct relations between China and UAR. This visit would have positive benefits serving the cause of peace and human progress.

He added that Mr. Chou En-lai's tour of Africa was an excellent endeavour for mutual understanding, and consolidation of co-operation between China and the new revolutionary Africa, which was firmly advancing towards freedom.

Communique:

At the end of the visit on December 21, 1963, President Nasser and Mr. Chou En-lai issued the following communique:

"During the visit, Premier Chou En-lai expressed respect and deep admiration for the heroic struggles waged by the UAR under the leadership of President Nasser for defending the sovereignty of the Suez Canal against armed imperialist aggression and extended congratulations to the people of UAR on their successes in defending their homeland, sovereignty, building their country and developing national economy and culture.

"The talks were held in a spirit of cordiality and friendship, frankness, mutual confidence and understanding of the circumstances of the two countries. The talks were held in a number of sessions where President Nasser and Premier Chou En-lai reviewed the development of world events in general and those related to Asia and Africa in particular.

"The two leaders are confident that the Bandung Conference held in April, 1955 was the major turning point in the history of Africa and Asia. The parties were glad to note that since the Bandung Conference in which both China and UAR took active part, the Asian-African people have scored important victories in their struggle against imperialism and colonialism.

"Both parties expressed warm congratulations to the people of Kenya and Zanzibar who have won their national independence recently.

"The two parties strongly condemned the policy of racial discrimination pursued by the colonial authorities of South Africa and the system of racial discrimination wherever it might exist in the world.

"The two sides supported the establishment of nuclear-free zones in all parts of the world and backed the efforts deployed for the achievement of that objective. They particularly referred to the resolution of the African 'Summit' Conference held in Addis Ababa in May, 1963, declaring Africa a nuclear-free zone.

"The two sides reviewed in detail the circumstances of the Sino-Indian problem. They were animated by confidence and hope in the possibility of reaching a peaceful settlement and underlined their determination to support the peaceful efforts initiated at the Colombo Conference, which aimed at dissipating the tension existing between the two great countries and bringing about a peaceful settlement through direct negotiations.

"Both parties stressed that Asian-African countries should settle all their disputes in accordance with the Five Principles of peaceful co-existence and the 10 principles of the Bandung Conference, through peaceful negotiations and amicable consultations without resorting to force.

"On behalf of Chairman Liu Shao-chi and on his own behalf, Premier Chou En-lai extended an invitation to President Nasser to visit the People's Republic of China at a time convenient to him. President Nasser accepted the invitation with pleasure."

News Conference:

Before he left for Algiers, Mr. Chou En-lai held a news conference in Cairo on December 20, 1963.

An Indian correspondent asked why China had announced reservations about the Colombo proposals. The Chinese Premier replied that he did not think there was any question of reservations. This was because the Colombo proposals were recommendations put forward by the mediating countries and not an award given by arbitrating Powers. This was what all the Heads of the six Colombo Powers had told him.

He said the attitude of the Chinese Government was that in principle it accepted the Colombo proposals as a basis for direct Sino-Indian negotiations and that China and India should come to the conference table to settle their border problem peacefully without advancing any pre-conditions.

He said that the measures taken by the Chinese Government on its own initiative since November, 1963 had far exceeded the requirements set forth in the Colombo proposals. The proposals asked China to withdraw 20 kilometres along the whole line in the western sector, in the middle sector and the eastern sector of the boundary. Another example included further steps taken by China to evacuate the areas which had been occupied by India on the Chinese side of the 1959 line of "actual control" and other areas ceded by the two sides in their cease-fire arrangement without even setting up civilian check-posts pending a negotiated settlement with India.

He said that in taking these steps China had considered the honour and dignity of both sides. China suggested that both sides sit at a conference table without laying any pre-conditions, but during the negotiations either side could also discuss specific plans and proposals of the Colombo proposals as well as their interpretations of these proposals.

Answering a question why China opposed the tripartite Treaty between the Soviet Union, Britain and the United States on the partial test ban, he said that these three countries had concluded the Treaty with a view to monopolizing nuclear weapons. That was why he was against it. "We stand for the complete prohibition and destruction of nuclear weapons and the prevention of a nuclear war. On this account all the countries of the world should jointly discuss the question of strict prohibition and thorough destruction of nuclear war. Politically, all the countries of the world, big or small, strong or weak, are equal."

Replying to a question on Sino-Soviet differences, he said: "We do have serious differences with the leaders of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union on questions of principles of Marxism-Leninism. It is our hope, however, that these disputes will be resolved in the end on the basis of Marxism-Leninism and of the revolutionary principles of the 1957 Declaration and the 1960 Statement. Some countries want to profit by the Sino-Soviet differences, but they are doomed to failure."

In Algeria:

Mr. Chou En-lai and his party left for Algiers on December 21, 1963.

Mr. Chou En-lai and the Vice-Premier, Marshal Chen Yi were conferred honorary citizenship of Algiers at a ceremony in the Municipal Hall on December 23.

The two sides are determined to increase their efforts to develop the Bandung spirit. They consider that general and complete disarmament and destruction of nuclear weapons are an important task in the struggle for the defence of world peace."

The communique said that China supported the Governments of African countries in their pursuit of the policy of peace, neutrality and non-alignment.

Earlier, addressing the Algerian National Liberation Front (FLN), Mr. Chou En-lai said that his Algerian friends may rest assured that in the common cause of safeguarding national independence, strengthening Afro-Asian solidarity, opposing imperialism and defending world peace, the Chinese people would always remain united with the Algerian people and march forward with them hand in hand.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri Elected Premier; IDA Credit; Diplomatic Appointments; P-SP Members Join Congress; All-India Socialist Workers' Convention.

A. Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri Elected Prime Minister: Consequent on the death of Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru on May 27, the Congress Parliamentary Party immediately elected Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri as its new leader and Prime Minister on June 2.

Soon after his election, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri told the Party meeting that socialism would remain as the main objective of his Government and added: "Our policies have already been enunciated and defined, and what is essential is their quicker and proper implementation."

He wanted Parliament and the people to give him their fullest support in fighting the twin enemies—poverty and unemployment.

The out-going Prime Minister, Mr. Gulzari Lal Nanda, proposed Mr. Shastri's name and Mr. Morarji Desai seconded it. Since no other names were proposed, the Congress General Secretary, Mr. G. Rajagopalan, declared Mr. Shastri elected amid prolonged acclamation.

Not since the historic night of August 14-15, 1947, when Mr. Nehru made his famous "tryst with destiny" speech to herald the dawn of India's freedom, had the Central Hall witnessed such moving and vibrant scenes. National unity, collective leadership and socialism were the main themes of the speeches made on the occasion.

All senior leaders of the Congress pledged their full support to the new leader with words of sincerity and devotion to the common cause. Mr. Kamaraj himself set the pace by promising Mr. Shastri his "unstinted support." Mr.

Nanda, in turn, declared that the rank and file of the Congress would stand by him "through thick and thin." Mr. Desai, Mr. Jagjivan Ram and Mr. S. K. Patil also assured Mr. Shastri of their loyalty and co-operation to the fullest extent.

In his reply, Mr. Shastri said that he trembled at the thought of the heavy responsibility and the highest charge that had been entrusted to him. In a brief speech that he had prepared hurriedly before coming to the party meeting, he assured the country that he would follow the footsteps of his illustrious predecessor and try to implement his policies to the maximum extent possible. Since the speech was not intended to be a policy statement, he made no reference to major foreign policy issues. But he left the party members in little doubt that India would continue to adhere to her basic policy of non-alignment.

Addressing his first news conference on June 2 as Prime Minister-designate, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri declared his intention to follow the late Mr. Nehru's domestic and foreign policies.

He would work for a new social order through peaceful means. In external affairs, he would pursue the policy of friendliness towards all countries without getting involved in military blocs.

He said that the British and Soviet proposals on Laos were under consideration. India had agreed to participate in the informal meetings of Ambassadors to be held in Vientiane. In the efforts to solve the Laotian problem, "we would try to carry the USA, Britain and the USSR with us." Ultimately, however, unless the 14-nation conference met it would not be possible to settle the question fully and satisfactorily.

While outlining his approach to economic questions, he laid stress on the urgent need to arrest the soaring prices. In a few days he would discuss with the Ministers for Food and Agriculture and Finance as well as the Planning Commission what "practical" measures should be taken in that regard. In the new social order he had in mind, the few should not be allowed to monopolise the national wealth, leaving others to suffer.

Other domestic issues on which he spoke in some detail were national integration and the question of minorities.

Answering a question, he said if he went to London for the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference he would try to meet President Ayub Khan of Pakistan there. He was much impressed by the Pakistan President's latest statement on Indo-Pakistani relations.

Although he had not held discussions with the Defence Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan yet, his impression was that the Defence Minister's visit to USA for arms aid had been successful.

Appeal To The Nation:

On June 9, the Prime Minister, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, appealed to his countrymen "to do his or her bit and give a helping hand to the nation-building activities."

In a special message to All-India Radio, he said: "I have formally taken over today the heavy burden cast on me. I am very happy to find that there is a fund of goodwill and the people want us to succeed. Let each and every one of us resolve to do his or her bit and give a helping hand to the nation-building activities. Let the atmosphere of bickering and faultfinding cease and a constructive effort be made to tackle our difficult problems with unity, purpose and courage."

The following is the text of the broadcast:

"Friends,

"The towering personality who was in our midst till but a few days ago is no longer with us to lead and guide us. The last of his mortal remains has gone to join the soil and water of the India that he loved. Even though Jawaharlalji has passed from our sight, his work and his inspiration lives on.

"And we, to whom was given the privilege of being his countrymen, contemporaries and colleagues, must now brace ourselves to the new tasks ahead, and face up to the situation whose very prospect we once used to dread—the situation of an India without Jawaharlal.

"There comes a time in the life of every nation when it stands at the cross-roads of history and must choose which way to go. But for us there need be no difficulty or hesitation, no looking to right or left. Our way is straight and clear—the building up of a socialist democracy at home with freedom and prosperity for all, and the maintenance of world peace and friendship with all nations abroad. To that straight road and to these shining ideals we re-dedicate ourselves today.

"No better beginning could have been given than by my colleagues of the Congress Party, who in the hour of decision resolved to come together. I am also grateful to the nation for the way they have received my taking over of the heavy burden cast on me. What I need in the discharge of these heavy responsibilities is the willing co-operation of our people. They are our real source of strength and it is from them that I shall seek to draw my inspiration.

"Among the major tasks before us none is of greater importance in our strength and stability than the task of building up the unity and solidarity of our people. Our country has often stood as a solid rock in the face of common danger and there is a deep underlying unity which runs like a golden thread through all our seeming diversity, but we cannot take national unity and solidarity for granted, or afford to be complacent, for, there have been occasions when unfortunate and disturbing divisions, some of them accompanied by violence, have appeared in our society.

"I know that these disturbances gave a deep shock and caused great anguish to Jawaharlalji who had, all through his life, worked untiringly for communal harmony and mutual toleration. Let people in different parts of the country, however strong their feelings might be on particular issues, never forget that they are Indians first, and that all differences must be resolved within the unalterable frame-work of one nation and one country.

"Let us make every endeavour to foster this feeling of oneness and to carry forward the work of national integration started with the National Integration Conference in 1961.

"Political democracy and the way it has functioned in our country is surely a great achievement. Here again we owe an immeasurable debt to Jawaharlalji for his deep attachment to democracy as a way of life.

"There is something in our older cultural heritage too. I have particularly in view that enduring strand in Indian life which can be best described as respect for human personality and the spirit of toleration.

"I have no doubt in my mind that it is by methods of persuasion and mutual accommodation, and by a constant search for areas of agreement as basis for action, that democracy can be worked. It is in this spirit that I shall devote myself to the duties and responsibilities of the office I have been called upon to fill.

"Of all the problems facing us, none is more distressing than that of the dire poverty in which tens of millions of our countrymen continue to live. How I wish that I would be able to lighten the burden of poverty on our people. I cannot forget particularly the claims of the most backward sections like the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes, who had suffered neglect, and had to endure disabilities for many centuries. It would be my proud privilege to work for the establishment of a more just social order.

"At the moment we are in the process of building up our defences. The burden is a heavy one, but recent events have left us with no choice. There can be no letting-up in these preparations, but we are determined that these should not affect our first foremost priority—the development of our economy.

"The main question before us is of execution of our plans and policies and how to introduce the necessary vigour and efficiency required for it.

"This naturally takes us to the problem of efficiency and integrity of the administration. Our public services have on the whole responded well to the numerous calls that have been made upon them since Independence. But there is a widespread feeling—which I share—that extensive reform of the administration is essential if the tasks of economic development and social reconstruction are to be accomplished.

"Apart from this, it is essential in a democracy that the public services should be sensitive to the feelings and sentiments of individual citizens. They should, under all circumstances, function not only with formal courtesy but in a spirit of service, sympathy and humanity. The administrative organization and its methods and processes must be modernized if it is to become an effective instrument of economic change.

"I shall do my best to have systematic attention paid to these major problems and I shall apply myself closely to the problem of administrative reforms in its various aspects.

"I know that our people are full of enthusiasm and that they are prepared to accept many sacrifices in order to keep the nation stable and strong. But sometimes their impatience gets the better of them and then there are unfortunate happenings which cause pain to everyone.

"Discipline and united action is the source of real strength for the nation. May I also appeal to the members of the various political parties to lend us a helping hand in the task of national reconstruction.

"Similarly, the Press can play a very useful role as indeed they have been doing all this time. Theirs is a position of great strength and influence and I have no doubt that their influence will always be exercised for the public good.

"We are all of us different elements working in different ways towards a common goal—the service of the people. I shall respect these differences, but I shall continue to lay emphasis on the oneness of our objective.

"In the realm of foreign affairs we shall continue to seek friendship and develop our relations with all countries irrespective of ideology or their political systems. Non-alignment will continue to be the fundamental basis of our approach to world problems and our relations with other countries.

"It will be our special endeavour to further strengthen our relations with neighbouring countries. With most of our neighbours we have friendly and co-operative relations. We have problems with some of them which we would like to settle peacefully and amicably on an equitable and honourable basis.

"India and Pakistan are two great countries linked together by common history and tradition. It is their natural destiny to be friends with one another and to enter into close co-operation in many fields. Goodwill and friendship and mutual co-operation between these countries will not only be of immense benefit to them but will make a great contribution to peace and prosperity in Asia.

"Far too long have India and Pakistan been at odds with one another. The unfortunate relations between the two countries have somehow had their repercussions on the relations between communities in the two countries, giving rise to tragic human problems.

"We must reverse the tide. This will require determination and good sense on the part of the Governments and peoples of both India and Pakistan. President Ayub Khan's recent broadcast showed both wisdom and understanding and it has come just at the appropriate time. However, a great deal of patience will be necessary.

"It had always been our desire to establish friendly relations with China. But all our efforts were nullified by the Government of the People's Republic of China. China has wronged us and deeply offended our Government and people by her premeditated aggression against us.

"Despite our strong feelings about this aggression we have shown our desire for a peaceful settlement by accepting in toto the Colombo Proposals. We adhere to them and it is for China to reconsider her attitude towards these proposals as well as give up the anti-Indian campaign that has been carried on in China itself and amongst our friends in Asia and Africa.

"For the greater part of this century the names of Gandhi and Nehru have been symbols of the movement of subject peoples for freedom from colonial domination. We, who have gone through our own struggle for freedom, cannot but look with sympathy at peoples struggling for freedom anywhere.

"Our country has, for many years, been a stout champion of the freedom of dependent nations at the United Nations and elsewhere in the councils of nations. Unfortunately there are still some parts of the world where colonialism remains and where large sections of people are denied freedom and fundamental rights. We would consider it our moral duty to lend every support to the ending of colonialism and imperialism so that all peoples everywhere are free to mould their own destiny.

"Our late Prime Minister was one of the founders of the Afro-Asian movement. We conceive of Afro-Asian solidarity not as an end in itself but as a means for achieving certain noble objectives. These are to work for the freedom of the people of Asia and Africa, to build up the area of peace and understanding among all nations and to promote economic growth and higher living standards among our peoples.

"We seek no leadership of the Afro-Asian group. We are content to be humble collaborators with the sister-nations of Africa and Asia in the common cause of world peace and freedom of peoples.

"We have always been a staunch supporter of the United Nations. As a member of that august body India has undertaken its full measure of responsibility in all aspects of United Nations activities.

"My Government re-affirms its unflinching support for the United Nations. The United Nations is the one hope of the world for bringing peace and freedom to humanity. Towards the achievement of these goals India has played an active role in the past and will continue to do the same in the future.

"The problem of problems that faces mankind today is the achievement of peace and disarmament. For countless generations mankind has been yearning for peace. The supreme task facing the United Nations is to ensure not only that war is banished, but that war is made impossible.

"As President Johnson has said, a world without war would be the most fitting memorial to Jawaharlalji. We pledge ourselves, in co-operation with other peaceful nations of the world, to continue to work for the realization of this ideal.

"Before I conclude may I repeat that I am only too conscious of the magnitude of the tasks before us and the responsibility placed on my shoulders for the service of the people of my country. I approach these tasks and responsibilities in a spirit of humility and with love and respect for all my countrymen.

"I will try to serve them to the limit of my capacity. The memory of our departed leader is still fresh with us. With him has ended the great age which Gandhiji began and Jawaharlalji consolidated.

"We have now to build on the firm foundations they have left behind. Let us then bend ourselves to the great task before us—an India free, prosperous and strong and a world at peace and without war—these would be the most fitting memorials to Gandhiji and Jawaharlal."

Mr. Morarji Desai's Statement:

On June 3, Mr. Morarji Desai said that the Prime Minister, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, had asked him to join the Cabinet, but he regretted his inability to do so.

In a statement he said: "I was offered by the Prime Minister the third rank in the Cabinet, I regret that the offer was such that I could not accept it. I, however, think that by remaining outside I will be able to serve the country and the party better. I have assured the Prime Minister of my fullest co-operation and support even from outside the Cabinet."

C. IDA Credit For Capital Goods Production: The International Development Association (IDA), an affiliate of the World Bank, on June 10 extended credit equivalent to $90 million to India for the purpose of expansion of selected lines of capital goods production.

The credit will assist companies manufacturing commercial vehicles, industrial machinery and construction equipment to make fuller use of existing capacity and to produce more goods, by enabling them to import components and materials on a larger scale than had been possible up to now because of foreign exchange shortage.

In the industries directly affected, the IDA credit is expected to increase the output by 30 per cent in the current financial year.

The proceeds of the IDA credit will be made available to the participating firms and agencies through the regular import licensing procedures of the Government of India. About $75 million will finance imported components, materials and balancing equipment for factories producing trucks and buses, machine tools, cutting tools, heavy construction equipment, electrical equipment, such as switchgear, motors and transformers and similar items of capital equipment.

The balance will finance import of equipment and spares for heavy earth-moving and construction equipment, and transporters to move the equipment from one project site to another.

The credit is for a term of 50 years. Repayment of principal will begin from November 15, 1974, after a 10-year grace period. Thereafter, one per cent of the principal will be repayable annually for 10 years and three per cent annually in the final 30 years. The credit is free of interest, but a service charge of ¾ per cent per annum on the amount withdrawn and outstanding will be made to meet IDA's administrative costs.

F. P-SP Members Join Congress: Over 100 members of the Praja-Socialist Party, led by Mr. Asoka Mehta, joined the Congress Party on June 11.

The Central Home Minister, Mr. Gulzari Lal Nanda, described the event as the fulfilment of the late Mr. Nehru's great desire to weld into one dynamic force the scattered socialist elements in the country.

A message from the Prime Minister, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, said: "It is not uncommon in politics for old colleagues and comrades to drift apart and go their separate ways and yet there is no greater joy than when their paths converge again and old friends are re-united.

"Even while being in separate parties, we have shared the common objectives of the struggle against poverty and want and of building up of a socialist democracy in India with plenty for all.

"I greatly welcome the re-entry of our old colleagues from the P-SP into our mother organization—the Congress. My congratulations and best wishes to you all."

G. All-India Socialist Workers' Convention: Inaugurating the All-India Socialist Workers' Convention in Lucknow on June 10, Mr. Asoka Mehta, Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission, called upon all socialist forces to weld socialism into a single force "enshrined in the Congress."

He said the re-assemblement of all socialists, their consolidation into the Congress, was a great grand design of Mr. Nehru's efforts of which the Bhuvaneswar Congress was, as it were, the pivotal point. "What we have assembled here to achieve is, therefore, in accordance with the will and testament of the departed leader."

He said the Convention sought to "strengthen the elements inside the Congress and to provide to their thought and work the needed point and thrust. It should also indicate further ways to draw socialists outside the Congress into the organization. In this effort, can I appeal to those Communists, who have awakened from obsolete spells, for response?"

He felt that the "historic work that awaits us of breaking the barrier of under-development, of carrying forward the liberation of many millions of our people, of pushing through the 'development revolution,' is of such vast dimensions and pressing urgency that to remain fragmented is a crime."

He said that those Socialists who sought to combat the Congress must realize, first, that "valuable time for transformation would be inevitably lost (and time was our scarcest resource)," and secondly, that internecine conflict would strengthen the enemies of change.

"The vast tasks of 'development revolution' need the use of levers of power, not abandonment to others. To bring about a mutually re-inforcing combination between political and administrative powers and ferment and fervour among the people is what has to be striven for. Does that brook divisions and conflicts?"

Outlining the main tasks of socialist transformation, he said: "It entails building an independent, comprehensive and modern industrial system and putting our economy, including agriculture, on a modern industrial system and putting our economy, including agriculture, on a common technical basis as early as we can.

"It means metals, machinery and fuels are produced by our heavy industries to meet the needs of socialist expanded reproduction, the needs of the technical transformation of all sectors of the national economy and those of defence.

"We must also see that agriculture has all the modern aids it needs like electricity, chemicals, fertilizers, pesticides and power-operated tools to produce the best results from the most fruitful combinations of land, water and human efforts.

"We must ensure that light industries produce various goods to meet the requirements of rising levels of living of the people. These levels must rise disproportionately, the lower always going up faster.

"These tasks, apart from demanding considerable discipline and forethought in industry, require also devoted efforts in agriculture and small-scale production. Heavy industry and agriculture are the two wheels of the chariot of economic development. If either of them fails, the chariot bogs down."

Presidential Address:

In his presidential address to the Convention, Mr. Ishwarbhai Desai referred to the Ramgarh decision of the P-SP to form a new amalgamated party and said that the Praja-Socialists had come to the parting of ways.

"I need not make a prophecy, but I must warn my colleagues and brothers in the P-SP," he said, "of the dangerous implications in choosing their new camps because ultimately, their's will not remain a socialist camp."

He was of the view that the logic of opposition politics was bound to compel them to seek united front with non-socialist and anti-socialist forces. They would one day find themselves as tragic instruments for releasing forces of totalitarian dictatorship or finish themselves in social chaos and national disintegration.

He felt that the Congress had slowly but surely moved towards a whole-hearted acceptance of democratic socialism. At the same time the forces of communalism and Right reaction were gathering strength to oppose the nation's march towards its cherished destiny. "The supreme need of the hour is for the forces of socialism to combine before they are overwhelmed by the reactionary forces."

He criticized the P-SP as a routine political party having its eyes on the parliamentary programme. The logic of opposition politics had compelled it to seek adjustments and alliances with unlike-minded parties and groups. It had failed to re-assess the political situation in the country following the Bhuvaneswar resolution and the Kamaraj Plan and unnecessarily provoked a controversy by expelling Mr. Asoka Mehta from the party. This, he said, had destroyed free thinking in the P-SP which was the essence of its democratic politics.

Resolutions:

On June 11, the Convention passed a resolution paying homage to the late Mr. Nehru and another pledging its wholehearted support to his successor, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri.

The main resolution was moved by Mr. Genda Singh which appealed to all socialists in the country to bind together to make the Congress the chosen instrument of the people's will for rapid and decisive transformation of life and work.

The resolution said that the realization of a socialist society demanded co-operative efforts. This required both a change in values as also a change in the mode and style of work. It denoted at once a cultural revolution and a revolution in tools, techniques and organization of work. To foster a fundamental transformation was the main task of the socialists.

The resolution said that trade unions, co-operative societies, panchayats, audio-visual education centres were among the organizations where socialist understanding emerged and socialist discipline could be shaped. Simultaneously a net-work of community-building activities had to be spread and the incandescence of socialist understanding imparted to them.

The resolution expressed confidence that Congressmen would offer their absolute allegiance to the struggle for social justice and economic abundance, and in this task the Convention sought the joint involvement of all fellow socialists.

In its earlier part the resolution said that the accredited leaders of the Congress had publicly expressed their anxiety to implement a socialist programme and had also invited all like-minded persons to join the Congress in this effort. The formation of the Samyukta Socialist Party was apparently a step in the direction of consolidation of socialist forces. But the refusal on the part of the leaders of that party to recognize the transformation taking place in the Congress was likely to lead them to seeking alliances with groups and forces that might endanger the cause of democracy and socialism.

The resolution said that the underlying assumption that the encouragement of the forces of instability could alone create conditions for a major social change in the country was dangerous to the interest of the nation, particularly in these critical times.

IRAQ

A. Iraq-UAR Unity Agreement: Under a Unity Agreement signed in Cairo on May 26 by President G. A. Nasser of UAR and President Abdul Salam Arif of Iraq, UAR and Iraq are to have a joint Presidential Council, and joint organizations for political, military, economic, cultural, socialist ideology and popular organizational affairs.

The following is the Agreement:

"Believing in the unity of the Arab nation, a unity which springs from the unity of language, of history, of the Arab struggle and the Arab destiny, and realizing the false nature of the artificial plan which the present divisions reflect in the Arabs' land, divisions which were imposed by imperialism in accordance with its interests in exploiting and dominating it, the Arab nation finds itself attached to its unity by virtue of its history and experience. The aspirations of the Arab nation were embodied in a pilot experience which was the rise of the United Arab Republic comprising Syria and Egypt which aimed to prove to the whole world that the slogan of unity is not an unattainable hope but a truth which can prove its existence in fact.

"The elements of evil combined, and imperialism and reaction co-operated to carry out the crime of separatism. But the lesson of separatism left behind it a rich experience which, in itself, is a shield which protects unity in the future and strengthens adherence to it; the flags of unity remained raised repeating the slogans which exist within the heart of every Arab despite the vain attempts to impede them.

"Then came the Agreement of April 17, 1963, to achieve unity between Egypt, Syria and Iraq, but the absence of good intentions on the part of some people also led to the failure of these attempts.

"The revolutionary concept of unity is based on the unity of peoples, the unity of the working powers of the people, those in whose interest and in whose right the Revolution is carried out, the unity of the Arab socialist society, the society of sufficiency and justice at which the Arab socialist struggle aims and for which it works so that Arab unity may have a social context which would express the determination of the Arab people to establish a new and free future for the free Arab man.

"By all this and emanating from it, and on behalf of the people of the United Arab Republic and the Republic of Iraq as well as their Governments, the two Presidents, Abdul Salam Mohamed Arif, President of the Republic of Iraq, and Gamal Abdul Nasser, President of the United Arab Republic, have agreed on the following:

(b) The planning and co-ordination of the policy of the two countries in the political, military, economic, social, cultural and information fields.

(c) The realisation of ideological unity between the people of the United Arab Republic and the Republic of Iraq through the popular formations in the two countries, and working towards the unification of the two formations in the future.

"Article 6: Each of the two Governments shall appoint its Council members in the following way:

(4) The Joint Presidential Council or the Joint Committees may call experts and technicians from both countries to attend their meetings, if necessary.

"Article 7: The following joint organizations shall be established: (a) The Political Committee. (b) The Military Command. (c) The Economic Committee. (d) The Cultural and Information Committee. (e) The Socialist Ideology Committee. (f) The Popular Organization Committee. (g) Any other Committees which need to be established.

"These Committees shall undertake the study and preparation of the various questions ensuring the realisation of the purpose of this agreement and the questions referred to them by the Joint Presidential Council.

"Article 10: (a) The budget of the Joint Presidential Council is to be paid in equal parts by the two contracting Governments. (b) Each State is to be responsible for the salaries and special compensation of the members and the officials appointed by it according to its financial systems.

"Article 11: The provisions of this Agreement do not, in any manner, infringe upon the rights and obligations imposed, or which may be imposed on either of the two countries by virtue of the United Nations Charter. The above-mentioned provisions have no bearing upon the provisions of any Agreement concluded within the frame-work of the Arab League.

"Article 12: This Agreement remains in force until the necessary arrangements needed for the establishment of unity are taken.

"Article 13: The Agreement comes into force upon its ratification by the constitutional methods in force in the two countries. This Agreement was drawn up in Cairo on Moharram 14, 1384 Hegira,—May 26, 1964—in two original copies, one for each of the two parties. A copy of the Agreement shall be deposited with the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States."

Joint Communique:

A joint communique issued in Cairo on May 26 said that the Unity Agreement will come into force following its ratification by the constitutional measures adopted in each of the two countries.

The following is the communique:

"A number of meetings were held between President Abdul Salam Arif and President Gamal Abdul Nasser in a spirit of brotherhood, true cordiality and complete frankness.

"An examination of the relation between the two countries, the situation in the Arab world, and the international situation in general was completed at these meetings.

"The two Presidents reviewed the development of relations between the two countries since the November 18, 1963 revolution and expressed their satisfaction at the growth of the relations between the two countries in the various fields, a growth built on mutual confidence. Points of view have also completely met during the examination of internal and foreign affairs, a fact that called for a new step towards unity, the Arab nation's great aim, and a drive based on the Arab people's confidence in their unity and in appreciation of the sacrifices suffered on the path of unity and its past experiences.

"The two sides reached a draft agreement which is regarded as a first step towards the realisation of unity, to come into force following its ratification through constitutional procedures adopted in each of the two countries.

"The two Presidents also confirmed their holding fast to the Arab Summit Conference's decisions as an effective means of resisting Israel and its evil ambitions, as a path by which we can fully recover and restore the rights of Palestine's Arabs, and an important factor in consolidating the fraternal relations between the Arab countries. The two Presidents also proclaimed their support for the Palestine Conference which will be held in Jerusalem on May 29, 1964.

"The two Presidents confirm their total material and moral support for the Arab people's struggle in Aden and the Occupied South. The two Presidents have considered with great concern the deterioration of the situation in Syria as a result of the terrorist regime imposed upon the people of Syria, which has required great sacrifices from the people, sacrifices which should have been saved for the battle of the unified Arab destiny.

"The two Presidents have discussed the great development in the situation of the Arab Republic of Yemen following the downfall of the corrupt regime which governed there. They proclaim their continued support for the Yemeni revolution and the affording of all possible assurance to it.

"The two parties have affirmed the adherence of the two people to the policy of peaceful co-existence between States with different social systems.

"The two parties have also affirmed their adherence to the policy of non-alignment and commended the continuous and sincere desires for the convening of the Second Conference of Non-Aligned States, which is scheduled to meet in Cairo in the course of this year, as well as the convening of the Second Conference of Afro-Asian countries to be held in March, 1965."

Scores of school children sported badges bearing King Mahendra's portrait.

The title of Tribhuvan Prajatantra Shripad (pillar of Tribhuvan democracy) was conferred on two former Premiers, Mr. M. P. Koirala and Mr. Tanka Prasad Acharya. Their names figured in the birthday honours list.

Messages felicitating the King have been received, among others, from the Indian President, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan, Queen Elizabeth of Britain and Mr. Liu Shao-chi, Chairman of the Chinese People's Republic.

The postal authorities have issued a new series of stamps bearing a portrait of the King.

The Chairman of the Council of Ministers, Dr. Tulsi Giri, opened a park named after King Mahendra in Balaju suburb of Khatmandu. A reception was later held in the park.

Addressing a meeting at Bhaktapur, eight miles from Khatmandu, Dr. Giri criticised those who tried to "weaken the foundations of the panchayat system in the name of healthy criticism."

He pointed out that the participation of people in large numbers in the birthday celebrations indicated that they supported the King's policies.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

SUMMARY: CENTO Ministerial Council Meeting; World Conference On Economic Sanctions Against South Africa; World Bank Loans; British Budget.

A. CENTO Ministerial Council Meeting: Addressing the opening session of the CENTO Ministerial Council in Washington on April 28, the Pakistan Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, said that the vital function of CENTO was the "preservation of the independence and integrity of its members whom it is pledged to protect against all aggression".

He said that "peace and stability are not a self-perpetuating phenomenon" and that nations which want to preserve peace and stability must supply "demonstrable proof of their desire to do so".

[The United States has interpreted CENTO as a defence shield against Communist aggression. Pakistan considers it a pledge against any aggression which may come from its neighbour, India, as well.]

Other member-nations also re-affirmed the need for the CENTO alliance.

The inaugural session also heard speeches by the Foreign Ministers of Britain, Iran and Turkey and by the US Secretary of State, Mr. Dean Rusk.

The CENTO Secretary-General, Dr. A. A. Khalatbary, told the Conference that "it cannot be said that the chronic political instability in the Middle East has lessened."

"Thus", he said, "the necessity for CENTO continues. As a defensive stabilizing element it offers the best solution for countries determined to decide their destinies in their own way."

The Pakistani Government refused to permit five Pakistan newsmen to come to USA to cover the meetings of CENTO though USA had offered to fly them to Washington. This was interpreted as a Pakistani effort to belittle her alliance.

Last Winter the Pakistani Navy took part in a training exercise with elements of the US and British Navy, but no extensive report of it appeared in the Pakistani Press.

Washington was also disturbed by Mr. Bhutto's absence from the recent S-EATO meeting. He chose, instead, to attend talks for an Afro-Asian Conference sponsored by China.

Communique:

The two-day meeting of the CENTO Ministerial Council ended on April 29 after releasing a final communique.

As expected, the Turks were more successful than Pakistan in obtaining a specific reference of the area—their special concern being Cyprus.

The US Secretary of State, Mr. Dean Rusk, who presided over the meeting, parried questions at a news conference on the significance of the omission, but revealed that the Foreign Ministers had discussed both Kashmir and Sino-Pakistani relations.

He seemed conscious of the delicate American position faced with complaints by its ally, Pakistan, that USA was not doing enough to secure satisfaction to Pakistan's claims, and with its friend, India, charging USA with pro-Pakistan partisanship by virtue of the CENTO and S-EATO alliances and the enjoyment of monitoring facilities near Peshawar and in the Pakistan-occupied area of Gilgit.

He said that at first "there was a discussion on Kashmir and there were discussions on other elements of instability in the area. The Ministers themselves did not talk of these matters in detail."

Answering a pointed question on the omission of Kashmir and the inclusion of Cyprus, he said: "Kashmir was discussed, certainly. It was not ignored in any sense in our discussions." But, he added: "As far as the decisions were concerned had there been decisions they would have been registered in the communique. There was a very good and far-ranging exchange of views but had we anything to say we would have said it in the communique."

Asked whether Sino-Pakistani rapprochement also figured in the Council, he said: "There was some discussion but not very much discussion on that. It figured rather slightly."

Asked whether it was not a fact that while USA regarded CENTO as an anti-Communist alliance and that Mr. Bhutto had told the Council that it was aimed at "all aggression", implying thereby that it was also aimed against countries like India, Mr. Rusk said: "As far as USA is concerned we are associated with CENTO for the purpose of assisting the members of the Organization to deal with the problems of aggression from Communist countries.

"That does not mean we are disinterested in the problems of aggression that might arise elsewhere. There are other forums where those matters could be taken up. There are other issues that could be raised. But as far as we are concerned, our association with CENTO is directed towards the well-known threat from the Communist world."

He added: "There may be differences of, shall I say, balance of weight on that particular point but that has not in any way interfered with the working of CENTO as an organization."

He indicated continued American preference to remain as financier and observer but not a full member of CENTO. "There has been no change in the situation as far as the US is concerned. We are closely associated with CENTO for the past 10 years. We have not been formally a member."

The Council re-appointed for three years as Secretary-General Dr. Abbas Ali Khalatbary of Iran, the only member-country with no major problem with its neighbours.

Dr. Khalatbary revealed that CENTO discussed a report from its counter-subversion office. Communist subversion, he said, was mainly through clandestine radio stations. Apart from clandestine stations, "Communist radios from Peking to Budapest" beamed broadcasts in Turkish and for seven or eight hours daily."

The communique laid considerable stress on the non-political activities of CENTO.

It said that the "recent deterioration" in Cyprus had created a "dangerous situation with grave implications for peace and security in the whole area."

"The Council declared its earnest desire that the violence should be brought to an immediate end in acordance with the letter and spirit of the United Nations Security Council resolutions."

It referred to the "traditional frank atmosphere of CENTO," and said: "The Ministers particularly exchanged views on recent developments in the general area of West Asia and discussed the implications of these events for the CENTO alliance."

Meeting Of Military Committee:

The 15th meeting of the CENTO Military Committee ended in Washington on April 23 with agreement that the Middle East alliance "continues to make a major and essential contribution towards the defence of the area".

The two-day session made an analysis of the military defence posture of the Treaty region which includes Iran, Pakistan and Turkey.

Britain is a full member of CENTO with the three Middle East countries and USA is an active participant in the military and economic committees but has not become a full member.

In a message to the Conference, the military leaders of the five countries said there was great military significance within the region to the completion of a military communications link between the three Middle Eastern members and the provision of $18 million by USA to help complete the Turkey-Iran railroad links.

The Committee approved plans for CENTO military exercises in the 1964-65 fiscal year and made recommendations which will be presented to Foreign Ministers of the five countries during the CENTO ministerial meeting.

B. World Conference On Economic Sanctions Against South Africa: An international Conference on Economic Sanctions against South Africa opened in London on April 14 under the chairmanship of the Tunisian Foreign Minister, Mr. Mongi Slim. About 250 delegates and observers from 40 countries attended.

In a message to the Conference, the late Indian Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru, said the evil practices of racial discrimination were not only an insult to the human personality but a threat to peace and understanding among nations.

He said that the "hateful racial policies" of South Africa had received universal condemnation from men and women of all races and religions. He hoped that firm steps would be taken by the Conference to persuade or compel the racial administration of South Africa to conform to the views and sentiments of the international community.

The leader of the Opposition in the British Parliament, Mr. Harold Wilson, in a message said that a Labour Government would loyally carry out the the UN Security Council's call for an arms embargo on South Africa. He, however, reiterated that his Party had never supported the unilateral application of sanctions. The imposition of a trade boycott was also not justified at present.

The opening session was marked by proposals for a world trade boycott of the South African Government.

The Danish Foreign Minister, Mr. Per Haakerup, expressed the view that any sanctions should be supplemented by a positive UN policy to help South Africa towards a new multiracial alternative to apartheid.

He said that Denmark supported the UN ban on arms export to South Africa and felt that pressure should be gradually increased. Other Nordic countries shared Denmark's grave concern, anxiety and resentment over developments in South Africa.

The leader of the Indian delegation, Mr. K. K. Shah, said that sanctions would be the first effective step to end the injustices in South Africa.

He stressed that it would be vital for all members of United Nations to carry out the decisions of the Security Council, as otherwise people in Asia and Africa in their frustration may feel that their interests would be better served by a separate organization for Asia and Africa to solve their problems. He pointed out that India had stopped all relations with South Africa in 1956, even though the balance of trade was in India's favour.

The Conference, which ended on April 17, presented a great degree of agreement among people representing different ideologies.

The Indian delegates told correspondents that the success of the Conference would eventually depend on the ability or willingness of USA to apply sanctions against South Africa; for if American public opinion could be converted in favour of it, Britain would eventually follow suit and it would also be possible to get UN to agree to such a course of action.

They said that throughout there was an atmosphere of friendliness and understanding between the African and non-African delegates.

The Conference called for the imposition of total economic sanctions against South Africa in an attempt to bring that "apartheid (racial segregation) State to its knees".

The Tunisian Foreign Minister, Mr. Mongi Slim, who presided over the Conference, told the closing session: "Economic sanctions are the last possible way of defeating apartheid peacefully. After that the road to violence will be open."

The Conference agreed that adverse effects on the British and US economies would be marginal if total sanctions were applied against South Africa.

It warned that if the nations of the world failed to take "speedy and decisive action on sanctions it may well lead to the disintegration of the UN itself."

South Africa's apartheid policies, it pointed out, constituted a threat not only to peace within South Africa but throughout the continent and indeed the whole world.

Bitterness and hostility in India and throughout Asia, the Conference said in a resolution, was engendered by the "most savage treatment" inflicted on the 500,000 people of Indian origin in South Africa.

The report recorded expert evidence that sanctions could not be applied effectively without a naval blockade to enforce them. A naval patrol would require from four to seven fleet carriers and from 30 to 100 ships and it was estimated that such a blockade might cost about $150 million a month. It was clear that to be successful a naval blockade would need financial backing far heavier than any previously given by UN and with the full support of the major naval Powers.

The Conference decisions will be sent to the world Governments and international organizations.

International Conference Against "Apartheid":

Another Conference—the International Conference Against Apartheid—ended in London on April 17.

A despatch on April 18 said that a concerted effort to persuade USA to impose economic sanctions against South Africa would be made in the next few months by those who had participated in the Conference.

It was felt by most of the delegates that the key to success in bringing economic pressure on South Africa to change its radical policies was Washington, as US approval and action was certain to be followed by Britain, West Germany and Japan, the four countries with the largest investment and trade with South Africa.

The Conference ended by declaring, on the basis of the opinion of outstanding economists, that economic sanctions against South Africa were feasible and practicable and could be imposed without damage to world trade or countries trading with South Africa.

The most "heartening feature" of the Conference was the complete harmony which prevailed in the end between the various participants. The Chinese delegation, for instance, which started with a propaganda and ideological outburst, in the end became co-operative and agreed that China would not object to action through the Security Council if it was effective. The delegation did not clash with the Soviet delegation or with the Indian.

After an initial misunderstanding was settled between the Indian and Pakistan delegations over an Indian paper, which mentioned Pakistan's trade with South Africa, the two delegations concentrated on the question of South Africa.

The implementation of the Conference resolutions will be undertaken in two stages. Immediately they will be circulated to United Nations, Heads of Governments and other international bodies.

The second stage will be for the participants who are member-States of UN to approach the Security Council while individually or jointly they try to persuade USA and Britain, the two most important countries trading with South Africa. They have already the backing of all the Scandinavian States, all the Communist and Afro-Asian States, excluding Japan.

The conclusions of the five commissions set up by the Conference were approved at the final session of the four-day Conference.

The Conference agreed that:

(1) Special pressures were essential to get the Governments of Britain, the United States and France to change the direction of their policies on the South African question.

(2) Concerted action to blacklist firms which trade with South Africa and thrive on apartheid must be planned.

(3) The continued frustration of the wishes of the overwhelming majority of nations could lead to a break-down of United Nations, to alignments on a colour basis and to extreme crisis on a world scale.

(4) National and international action was needed to use the machinery of United Nations to declare that the South African situation constituted a threat to world peace.

(5) The crisis in South Africa amounted to a state of race war which could not be resolved except by outside intervention and complete trade sanctions provided the only effective means of intervention short of military intervention.

The Conference report warned that if the nations of the world failed to take "speedy and decisive action on sanctions it may well lead to the disintegration of United Nations itself."

It cited the dangers of race war and added that "certain States in the West are warned that they cannot continue economic and political support for apartheid without endangering their relations with the whole Afro-Asian world."

Anti-"Apartheid" Movement's Memorandum:

In a memorandum released on April 13, the Anti-Apartheid Movement in London accused Britain of aggravating the South African question.

It said that the British Government had refused to impose a complete and effective embargo on the supply of arms and military equipment to South Africa. It had also maintained a policy of continued economic and political co-operation with South Africa.

These policies, it said, despite Britain's public condemnation of apartheid, had been a major factor contributing to the South African Government's persistent defiance of UN requests for the abandonment of its racial policies.

C. Cut In Production Of Nuclear Explosive Materials: President Lyndon B. Johnson said in New York on April 20 that USA would make a new reduction in its production of nuclear explosive materials.

In Moscow, the Soviet Prime Minister, Mr. N. Khruschev, also announced that the Soviet Union would cut back substantially on uranium production for nuclear weapons.

He made his announcement after receiving notice from President Johnson and the British Prime Minister Sir Alec Douglas-Home that USA and Britain were reducing their uranium production.

Mr. Johnson, announcing a "substantial reduction" in American enriched uranium production over a period of four years, said this new cut, together with others, would mean "an overall decrease in the production of plutonium by 20 per cent and of enriched uranium by 40 per cent."

He added: "By bringing production in line with need, we reduce tension while maintaining all necessary power."

In his speech he dealt with five areas of concern to the United States. They were: (1) East-West relations; (2) European unity; (3) Latin America; (4) The "battle for freedom" in the Far East; and (5) the new nations of Africa and Asia.

He said that today in East-West relations there were "new pressures, new realities, which make it permissible to hope that the pursuit of peace is in the

D. UN Seminar On Freedom Of Information: A report issued on April 21 by a United Nations seminar on freedom of information revealed general agreement on basic problems, but suggested that they be made the subject of further international study.

The seminar, organized by United Nations in co-operation with the Government of Italy, ended after two weeks' discussion in Rome. Its report summarized informal views put forward by participants from 25 European countries.

The main topics covered at the seminar were the role of government, Press laws, the role of the publisher and proprietor, the role of the professional journalist, standards of journalism and the role of the reader.

Among the general conclusions of the seminar was that the same basic problem exists in all countries, irrespective of their social and political systems: how to ensure that the great powers of information media were used for the good of mankind and not as an instrument of tyranny. Certain common standards and aspirations were given recognition in all countries.

It was agreed that information media should strive to enhance human dignity, broaden the intellectual and moral outlook of peoples, bring about a better understanding among individuals, groups and nations, and enable their readers to play a responsible role in the affairs of the community and of the world. However, the ways of reaching these goals differed according to the social and political systems prevailing in different countries. A healthy competition between different systems, both of which genuinely pursue noble aims, could only produce positive results.

The report said that a number of problems were raised at the seminar which might usefully be given further international study. These concerned not only the role of the Press, but also the role of other mass media in the promotion of freedom of information. The world-wide spread of radio and the expansion of television were already having a decisive impact on the dissemination of information, and the advent of space communication, vastly increasing the range and scope of broadcasting, will accelerate this trend, bringing new problems but also new opportunities for international co-operation.

A related problem, the report said, was the fomulation of codes of ethics for information personnel. A draft international code of ethics prepared in 1952 under UN auspices might be subjected to new study, taking into account the significant developments in mass communication since 1952.

The report suggested that a committee set up by the Commission on Human Rights might examine, against the background of recent technological advances in communications, the question of international co-operation in the use of broadcasting for the promotion of the free flow of information and mutual understanding; the re-establishment of international machinery to deal with the problems of freedom of information; and the preparation of an international digest of decisions in the application of standards of conduct for information personnel.

The seminar, which began its informal discussions on April 7, was presided over by Mr. Edoardo Martino, of Italy. Mr. Robert Touzery (France), Mr. E. N. Mamadov (USSR) and Mr. R. G. S. Hoare (United Kingdom) were Vice-Chairmen, and Mr. Patrick O'Hanrahan (Ireland) was Rapporteur.

The participating States were Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Byelorussia, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, West Germany, Greece, the Holy See, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Spain, Switzerland, Turkey, Ukraine, USSR, United Kingdom and Yugoslavia.

E. New Journal To Replace "United Nations Review": The UN Office of Public Information announced on April 3 that the United Nations Review will cease publication with the April issue and will be replaced in May by a new journal to be known as UN Monthly Chronicle.

The object of the change is to provide a more comprehensive and documented coverage of UN activities and to encompass and reflect the expanded role of United Nations in world affairs. The new journal will aim at increased ease of handling and of reference.

The UN Monthly Chronicle will be divided into four sections—the first will be a Record of the Month, in which proceedings, decisions and resolutions of the main organs and committees of the Organization will be reported under relevant subheadings—political, economic, social, legal, administrative, etc.

The second section will contain authoritative articles and feature material on themes of UN interest.

The third section—Notes of the Month—will be devoted to such items as announcements of the Organization and its related agencies, lists of forthcoming meetings and events and reviews of important UN publications.

The fourth section will contain photographs, diagrams, charts and other illustrative material. Each issue of the magazine will cover a complete calendar month.

F. World Bank Loans To 72 Countries: A United Nations hand-out on May 15 said that the World Bank had reported a net income of $72,000,000 for the first nine months of the current fiscal year.

Loan commissions earned during the nine months ended March 31, 1964 amounted to $24,600,000 and were credited to the Special Reserve, increasing that Reserve to $279,500,000.

During the period, the Bank made 27 loans totalling $616.3 million in Chile (two loans), China, Colombia (two loans), Costa Rica, Denmark, El Salvador, Finland, Japan, Liberia, Malaysia (two loans), Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, New Zealand (two loans), Nigeria, Norway, Peru, Portugal (two loans), Spain, Thailand, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

This brought the total number of loans to 376 in 72 countries and territories and raised the gross total of commitments to $7,737.7 million. By March 31, as a result of cancellations, exchange, adjustments, repayments and sales of loans, the portion of loans signed still retained by the Bank had been reduced to $5,074.3 million.

Disbursements on loans during the nine months were $427.1 million, making total disbursements $5,852.6 million on March 31.

During the nine-month period the following 17 countries became members of the Bank: Algeria, Burundi, Cameroun, Central African Republic, Chad, Congo (Brazzaville), Congo (Leopoldville), Dahomey, Gabon, Guinea, Kenya, Malagasy Republic, Mali, Mauritania, Ruanda, Trinidad and Tobago, and Uganda. Subscribed capital amounted to $21,130,400,000 on March 31, 1964.

G. British Budget For 1964-65: The British Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Reginald Maudling, presented to Parliament on April 14 the Budget for 1964-65.

He proposed higher taxes on alcoholic drinks and cigarettes and a boost to personal savings.

He proposed new taxes totalling about £100,000,000 to put a slight brake on the nation's economy while aiming to keep the present boom going.

He painted a bright picture of the nation's economy. The March trade figures would show that the trend of exports was still encouragingly upwards and the demand for British goods should continue to rise vigorously.

The balance of payments position was expected to worsen this year—"but this is an inevitable result of a higher level of activity."

He declared that the theme of his Budget was the same as last year: "To maintain expansion without inflation."

He stressed that the key to Britain's success was a vigorous increase in exports. That in turn depended on keeping costs competitive. He said he believed if taxes were stepped up by £100 million he would be doing enough to steady the economy without checking expansion.

He said there would be no increase in direct taxation. He then announced rises of about 10 per cent on the duty on tobacco and alcoholic drinks.

This would mean 4d. more on 20 cigarettes costing 4sh or more, and 3d on smaller brands.

There would also be an extra penny a pint on beer, 3d a bottle on light wines, 6d on heavy wines and 3sh a bottle on spirits.

He also announced a number of measures to encourage personal savings. These included a new 5 per cent Savings Bond from May, and moves to allow greater holdings of the current National Savings Certificates.

Describing the economic situation, he said that trade was buoyant, business confidence was high and investment in industry was gathering pace. The purpose of this year's Budget was to achieve a smooth transition from the recent exceptional rate of growth to a long-term growth rate of 4 per cent.

After announcing a series of minor taxation changes, mostly of a technical nature and bringing in only about £6 million extra to the exchequer, he said there was something in the argument that the basis of indirect taxation in Britain would have to be widened. But he did not think it possible to do it this year.

The minor changes announced by him included an increase in the duty on home-produced light oils and allowing passengers on ships and planes to buy more duty-free goods than at present.

A further proposal would change the present arrangements on sugar duties, allowing export manufacturers of foods containing sugar to buy refined sugar at the internal price where this was below the world price.

He said he had considered a general betting tax, but had decided against introducing one now.

He proposed to cut the duty on greyhound totalizators from 10 to 5 per cent and had decided to extend the football pool betting duty to cover fixed odds coupons. Fixed odds coupons had been exempt from duty so far.

Dealing with the 1965-66 Budget, he said the total revenue on the basis of existing taxation was estimated at £7,352 million, an increase of £462 million over the previous year's receipts.

On the expenditure side, the biggest absolute increase was £161 million on defence, the equivalent of nearly 9 per cent.

Total expenditure—not counting loans to nationalized industries and local authorities—was estimated at £7,388 million. On the basis of the existing tax rates, the deficit would be £36 million.

But he pointed out that these total figures did not include costs of developments which had taken place since estimates were framed.

He said the overall deficit (which includes loans to nationalized industries, local authorities, colonial Governments and so on) was estimated at £894 million in 1965. (Last year it was £597 million.)

Discussing the recent rise in imports, he said he rejected controls on import of manufactured goods. It was not a practical policy.

He stressed the need for an effective incomes policy as the foundation of sound growth. If wages and salaries were always to be pushed to the limit "by sheer force of trade unions, or profit margins by unlimited opportunism management, the result must be either inflation or a Government policy to curtail it at the expense of growth". Something must be done to reduce the growth of demand.

Speaking after Mr. Maudling had delivered his Budget statement, the leader of the Labour Party, Mr. Harold Wilson described it as "irrelevant in terms of the economic problems the country is facing".

H. Russia Launches "Polyot II": The Soviet Union put a second "acrobat" space ship into changing orbits on April 12, and said the launch was aimed at solving problems of eventual rendezvous in space.

The new blast-off came on the anniversary of the first manned space flight by Yuri Gagarin on April 12, 1961.

Tass said the ship, Polyot II was guided and manoeuvrable, indicating it was unmanned.

Polyot I, launched in November, 1963 as the world's first manoeuvrable space vehicle, also changed direction sideways and up and down.

Tass said the ability to achieve a space rendezvous would be a step towards building large orbiting space stations to be used as bases for manned interplanetary flights.

Radio Moscow said the satellite had been placed on the initial orbit calculated in advance. It said the Polyot II had then performed various manoeuvres in all directions.

By means of one of these manoeuvres, performed in the region of the Equator, the space vehicle considerably changed its orbit's angle of inclination.

The agency said that for manoeuvres and stability Polyot II was equipped with special guidance gear and a system of motors. The vehicle carried scientific equipment, a radio-telemetric installation, and a radio transmitter.

During the flight "many turns and changes of direction were made according to the present programme". "Its stabilization and manoeuvring rocket motors were switched on many times. After completion of the programme Polyot II went into a final orbit with a maximum distance from the earth of 310 miles and a minimum of 192 miles."

I. USSR Launches "Cosmos" Satellites: Another Soviet sputnik Cosmos XXIX was launched on April 25.

The sputnik carried scientific equipment for the study of outer space in accordance with the programme announced by Tass on March 16, 1962.

The sputnik had gone into orbit with the following elements: period of rotation round the Earth 89.52 minutes; apogee 309 kilometres; perigee 204 kilometres; and inclination to the equatorial plane 65 degrees 4 minutes.

On May 18, Russia launched another satellite in the Cosmos series—Cosmos XXX.

All the equipment on board the satellite was reported to be functioning well.

J. Discovery Of New High Density Star: A report on March 28 said that four US space scientists, with an astronomer in support, believe they have confirmed the reality of a new type of star—one of so high a density that a matchbox full of its substance would weigh more than 1,000 tons.

They suggest the discovery should be known as a "neutron star"—one in which compression has been carried a stage beyond that found in "white dwarf" stars. Squeeze a star sufficiently hard, say the scientists, and the electrons that form the outer part of its atoms will all be captured by atomic nuclei, which will then consist wholly of neutrons. The whole star might then be considered as a single atomic nucleus with the unusual factor that it carried no electric charge.

The occasion of this theory is the discovery, from observations made by an Aerobee rocket, of two galactic sources of X-rays. One of them is in the neighbourhood of the Crab Nebula, believed to represent the still expanding shell of gas ejected during a supernova explosion in AD 1054.

In the middle of the shell is a small, hot star which it has been suggested might be of unusually high density. The other X-ray source is in the constellation Scorpius, in a region of faint stars.

The observations and theory were published in an issue of the scientific jounal Nature. The observations were made by Dr. S. Bowyer, Dr. E. T. Byram, Dr. T. A. Chubb and Dr. H. Friedman of the United States Naval Research Laboratory, Washington.

The suggestion that a neutron star would provide a type of source which might account for the observations was first made by H.-Y. Chiu and the supporting theory has been worked out by Dr. D. C. Morton, of Princeton.

K. World Sugar Production—FAO Forecast: According to the Food And Agriculture Organization (FAO), world production of sugar in 1963-64 is expected to be in the order of 53,000,000 tons—about 2,600,000 tons more than in the previous year.

This was stated in a UN Press release on April 24. However, world supplies will be less, for the third successive year, owing to a reduction in stocks in 1962-63 totalling about 4,000,000 tons.

A review of the current situation and outlook for sugar was contained in the March issue of the FAO Monthly Bulletin of Agricultural Economics and Statistics. The review observed that world sugar consumption was beginning to level off but that stocks would be further reduced before sugar from the 1964-65 beet crop comes forward. Average sugar prices are expected to remain variable and "very high" during the first half of 1964, and to fall later in the year in recognition of increased production in the coming season.

The record world sugar production is 54.9 million tons, established in 1960-61. Production was 51.6 million tons in 1961-62 and 50.4 million tons in 1962-63.

During the current season Cuban sugar production, because of Hurricane Flora and other problems, was estimated at no more than 3.3 million tons, about one half of production in 1960-61. As a result of prolonged drought, production in USSR was estimated at about six million tons raw value—500,000 tons less than in 1962-63—despite an increase in beet acreage.

On the other hand, production in Western Europe was estimated at more than eight million tons—about one million tons more than in 1962-63, despite reduced production in Italy, Spain and the Netherlands. The main increases were in the Federal Republic of Germany, where production recovered to its record two million ton level, and in France, which expected a similar output. In USA, production of both beet and cane sugar was at record levels.

In other sugarcane growing areas "there are indications of increases in output in a number of countries, including Argentina, Mexico, the Philippines, Mauritius and South Africa". India also expected to produce more in 1963-64.

Although full information on trade in sugar in 1963 was not available at mid-February, "there was a further substantial decline in world trade in raw and refined sugar...which largely reflected the further fall in Cuban output". In particular, Cuban exports to the Soviet Union and China were severely reduced.

Total imports into the developed countries were larger in 1963 than in 1962. Imports into Britain increased from 2.18 million to 2.52 million tons and in other West European countries, especially Italy, the Netherlands and West Germany, imports were also higher. However, there was as yet "little indication as to whether or not importing countries in Asia, Africa and the Near East maintained their 1962 import levels".

The review said that world sugar consumption for 1963, excluding the centrally planned economies, was tentatively estimated at 41.5 million tons raw value, 1 per cent higher than in 1962. This "implies no increase in average per caput consumption".

The outlook for coming years is for increased sugar production in a number of major cane sugar producing countries, including Australia, South Africa, Southern Rhodesia, Mexico and India. Increased plantings for the 1964-65 sugar beet harvest are expected in Europe this Spring, encouraged in several countries by higher prices to growers. However, in all cases weather would play a major role in the final output.

BURMA

A. Demonetization Measure: Under a decree issued on May 17, the Government demonetized currency notes of the denomination of K100 and K50.

The Government said the measure was designed to counteract "numerous acts of subversion" committed by the rich, including foreign nationals.

Certain rich people, it said, had begun hoarding currency notes of these two denominations, thus affecting the Government's policy to bring down the prices.

It charged those who accumulated these notes with buying foreign currencies at high prices.

All the demonetized notes were to be surrendered to the Government within seven days. Violation of the order was made punishable with a minimum of ten years' imprisonment.

[One kyat equals one Indian rupee.]

The decree asked the people in possession of these currency notes to surrender them to the Treasury before 4 p.m. on May 24.

According to the decree, it applied also to foreign diplomatic missions, Government Departments, boards and corporations.

The decree stipulated that a maximum of K500 in legal tender would be returned to each depositor out of the total amount deposited and the balance sent to the nearest State commercial bank to be held as fixed deposit in the name of the depositor concerned.

The notes were the highest denomination in circulation and the K50 and K100 denomination notes constitute more than 50 per cent of the entire money in circulation within the country.

The announcement said "the capitalists had withdrawn money" from the banks when the banks were nationalized and had indulged in speculative trading with their hoarded money when trade was nationalized.

B. Trade Agreement With South Korea: Burma and South Korea formally signed in Rangoon on June 17 a general Trade Agreement to promote trade relations between the two countries.

The South Korean Consul-General, Mr. Jun Ha Pak, signed for Korea, and Lt.-Col. San Win, Trade Secretary for Burma.

Provisional signing of the Agreement was made in January, 1964 during the visit of the Assistant Trade Minister, Mr. Chul Seung Lee, to Rangoon and the Burmese authorities.

The Agreement mentioned the export commodities of the two countries. Korean exports, among others, include fish and fish products, sewing machines, and radios.

Burma's exports are rice, raw rubber, tin and timber.

C. Changes In University Education System: The Government promulgated on May 30 a new law aimed at introducing a new system of university education replacing the old one in conformity with the "Burmese way to socialism."

The new law would do away with the present unitary system of centralized universities and replace it with a multilateral one with various vocational and technical universities and institutes, each functioning autonomously.

An important feature of the new system is the emphasis on professional subjects such as medical science, industrial trade, teaching in agriculture, health, education and economics. Though priority will be given to teaching of science subjects in these universities, pursuance of the studies in arts subjects will also be provided for in proportionate measures.

The number of students to be admitted to universities will be determined by the availability of qualified teachers and accommodation and equipment.

CAMBODIA

A. Aggression Charge Against South Viet-Nam And USA—Security Council Debate: Cambodia requested the UN Security Council on May 13 to consider as soon as possible its charge of aggression against USA and the Republic of Viet-Nam.

Cambodia also requested UN to send investigators to check the accuracy of the allegations of collusion with Viet-Cong which, it said, had been advanced as justification for American and South Viet-Namese incursions into Cambodian territory.

On May 19, the Security Council took up the Cambodian charges. During the debate, these charges were rejected by Mr. Charles Yost of the United States, but supported by Mr. N. Fedorenko of Russia, who spoke of what he called "criminal American aggression against a small neutral nation."

The debate started with a difference of views on whether South Viet-Nam, which is not a member of United Nations, should be allowed to take part in the Council's deliberations. Russia and Czechoslovakia were opposed to what they called "a puppet regime of the United States" being invited to the Council table. On a vote being taken, nine members favoured the proposal and only two opposed it. An invitation was accordingly extended to Viet-Nam.

Cambodia's representative, Mr. Sonn Voeunsai demanded the holding of an international conference similar to the 1954 Conference on Indo-China to reach an agreement guaranteeing the territorial integrity and neutrality of his country.

He said that it was the International Truce Supervisory Commission, set up by the 1954 Agreements, which should ensure the surveillance of the Viet-Nam-Cambodian border, and "not a new organism under the auspices of UN."

He said Cambodia would be only too happy to have inspectors on a limited and short-term mission to make on-site inquiry into US charges against Cambodia. He said these charges were unfounded.

Mr. Pham Quac Rau, South Viet-Nam's representative, announced that his Government was sending a delegation to the Council headed by the South Viet-Namese Ambassador in London.

He said his Government was renewing its offer for bilateral talks with Cambodia.

The Czech delegate, Mr. Jiri Hajek, told the Council that it had the "duty" of calling an international conference to guarantee the neutrality of Cambodia.

He accused USA of violating the Geneva Agreements on Indo-China by its "military occupation" of South Viet-Nam.

Mr. Adlai Stevenson (USA) rejected proposals that the 14-nation Geneva Conference on Indo-China be reconvened to discuss the tense situation in South-East Asia and guarantee the neutrality of Cambodia.

He said that what was needed was not more conferences but respect and honour for the agreements that had been made. "If the parties will do in good faith what they promised to do in Laos and Viet-Nam, whether in good faith or not, there will be no danger to the integrity of Cambodia, there will be peace in South-East Asia and another threat to international security will be removed."

Mr. Stevenson, who was answering Cambodian charges that USA and South Viet-Nam had committed aggression against Cambodia, referred to the several practical steps for restoring stability to the frontier that had been suggested.

One of these, he said, was that the Council request the two parties directly concerned to establish a substantial military force on a bilateral basis to observe and patrol the frontier and to report to the UN Secretary-General, U Thant.

"Another suggestion", he went on, "is that such a bilateral force be augmented by the addition of United Nations observers and possibly be placed under UN command to provide an impartial third party element representing the world community. We also could see much merit in this idea.

"A third suggestion is to make it an all-UN force. This might also be effective. It would involve somewhat larger UN expenditure than the other alternatives. But if this method should prove desirable, the United States will be prepared to contribute."

He added: "We would suggest that whether one of these or some other practical solution is agreed, it would be useful to ask the Secretary-General to offer assistance to Cambodia and the Republic of Viet-Nam in clearly marking the frontiers between the two countries."

He hoped that the Council, the "primary world agency for peace and security", could quickly take effective steps to remedy a situation which could threaten the peace.

Dr. Nikolai Fedorenko, the chief Soviet delegate, said the US representative had made a "noisy and rather sensational show of American advertising techniques" from which it might have been supposed that he would have delivered a "really important and substantive statement."

It seemed, he said, that when USA was sending thousands of soldiers to Viet-Nam "in order to wage a very dirty and cruel war", it was making some sort of contribution to the cause of peace. "Those who talk to small children and village idiots might speak in this way".

He described the speech of Mr. Stevenson as "a tissue of myths."

The Security Council, he said, should condemn the aggression against Cambodia, recognize the responsibility of South Viet-Nam and USA, demand that they compensate the victims of their aggression, and take steps to avoid a repetition of such acts.

He wanted the Security Council to also declare itself in favour of a new Geneva Conference to guarantee the neutrality and territorial integrity of Cambodia.

Mr. Adlai Stevenson in reply said Mr. Fedorenko's ideas were obscure and offensive, and in the tradition of the cold war. USA had no national aims in South-East Asia, but that the sole cause of the war in this area was the aggression against neighbouring countries by the Hanoi authorities supported by China. If North Viet-Nam aggression ended, USA would have no further reason to aid countries that wished to stay free.

But, he added, as long as this aggression continued, USA would aid South-East Asian countries to remain free.

The Cambodian Foreign Minister, Mr. Huot Sam Sambath said Cambodia could not accept the South Viet-Namese proposals for a commission of experts to trace out the frontier, and for mixed patrols to provide joint supervision of the frontier zone.

He re-iterated his call for a Security Council decision in favour of a new Geneva Conference, to guarantee Cambodian neutrality and give the International Control Commission the means of supervising the frontier.

South Viet-Nam's Ambassador to London, Mr. Vu Van Mau, who, by that time, had come as head of his country's delegation, rebutted Cambodian charges of aggression and proposed international control of the frontier, with UN help.

Some Soviet and Czechoslovak representatives withdrew from the chamber when he took the floor.

He told the Council it was "purely a pipe-dream" to presume the North Viet-Namese would pay any more heed to a new accord than they had done to the 1954 Agreement.

He re-iterated his Government's proposal that mixed patrols should supervise the Cambodian-Viet-Namese border, adding that if Cambodia rejected this, "the only effective solution remaining would appear to be to set up an international system of control across the border under the auspices of UN."

"We are asking for nothing else but an effective system to prevent the crimes which falsely are imputed to us but are committed by the communists."

He said his Government proposed an expert commission to help demarcate the ill-defined border and an effective system of border control to keep constant watch on the guerrilla bands.

Speaking as a delegate of France, the President of the Council, Mr. Roger Seydoux, repeated his Government's call for a resumption of the Geneva Conference.

He also affirmed that "without any doubt, Cambodia is today the victim of a situation which it has in no way helped to create."

He repeated France's call for a new meeting of the 14 nations at Geneva "without delay". This alone could guarantee effectively the territorial integrity and neutrality of Cambodia.

Sir Patrick Dean, chief delegate of Britain which was a co-Chairman of the 1954 Geneva Conference, said it would "clearly serve no useful purpose" for the British Government to join in issuing invitations to a conference that would be declined by several of the members.

He told the Security Council that Britain did not believe the passage of resolutions by the Council calling for a new conference on Cambodia would alter the basic situation. (Cambodia had proposed that the Council should recommend the reconvening of the Geneva meetings to guarantee the neutralist Kingdom's neutrality.)

Sir Patrick affirmed Britain's sympathy with and support for South Viet-Nam in "its struggle against an attempt by a dissident group to impose their own peculiar doctrines on their unreceptive fellow country-men by force of arms and with the aid of weapons, men and active incitement from the north, in defiance of the 1954 Cease-fire Agreement."

On the fact of this "externally directed aggression", the British Government was in no doubt whatever.

Britain fully endorsed the right of the Republic of Viet-Nam to seek help from its friends and was equally convinced that if external communist aggression ceased, a major step towards preventing border incidents between Cambodia and South Viet-Nam would have been taken.

Noting that the International Commission composed of Canada, India and Poland was "sufficiently occupied", he said the Council should took elsewhere for machinery for border control.

He took issue with a Cambodian charge that Britain had opposed the reconvening of the Geneva Conference. The British Government had explained it was ready to join Russia, the other co-Chairman, in issuing invitations "as soon as all the Governments directly concerned expressed agreement to participate."

In the present circumstances, "it would clearly serve no useful purpose for my Government to join in issuing invitations to a conference which would, we have reason to believe, be declined by several of those Governments with which Cambodia has differences and with which it would be the purpose of such a conference to reach agreement."

Decision To Send UN Mission:

After two weeks of debate, the Security Council decided on June 4 to dispatch a three-member mission to Cambodia and South Viet-Nam to draw up recommendations to prevent a recurrence of border incidents between the two countries.

The group was asked to report back to the Council within 45 days.

The action, proposed by Morocco and Ivory Coast in a joint resolution, stemmed from Cambodian charges that South Viet-Nam and USA had committed "repeated acts of aggression" against the neutralist Kingdom.

In a separate vote on the operative paragraph covering the establishment of the inquiry group, Russia and Czechoslovakia cast abstentions. On the resolution as a whole, all of the members voted in favour.

U Thant told the Council that he proposed to assign five members of the secretariat to accompany the three Council members.

The Council might well have taken more far-reaching steps based on United Nations experience. But a beginning had been made and the establishment of the visiting mission was the most important part of the resolution.

An announcement by Dr. Nikolai T. Fedorenko that Russia would vote for the resolution as a whole if it were permitted to cast an abstention in a separate vote on the establishment of the inquiry group cleared the way for adoption of the draft.

Dr. Fedorenko said the International Commission, composed of representatives of Canada, India and Poland, was fully able to deal with border questions and it was "unjustified" to set up a new UN body.

He also repeated Cambodia's demand that the 14-nation Geneva Conference, of which Russia and Britain were co-Chairmen, be reconvened to draw up guarantees of Cambodian neutrality.

The Bank of Tokyo and the French firm BNCL were authorised to maintain "a representative office" in the Cambodian capital.

A. Compensation To Oil Companies: The Minister of Finance, Mr. T. B. Ilangaratne, on May 22 directed officials to take "meaningful steps" to compensate Shell, Caltex and Esso for assets taken over by the Ceylon Petroleum Corporation in 1963.

He said in a Press statement that he hoped the Governments concerned would appreciate the Ceylon Government's good faith and anxiety for a speedy settlement.

His reference was obviously mainly directed at the United States, which last year suspended aid to Ceylon until

CHINA

A. World Conference Of Communist Parties—Soviet Proposal Rejected: In a letter to the Central Committee of the Soviet Communist Party made public on May 8, the Chinese Communist Party rejected a Russian proposal for an early world conference of communist parties to resolve the ideological dispute between Peking and Moscow.

The Chinese letter stated that "it may require perhaps four or five years or even longer to complete preparations for such a conference."

It asserted that the convening of a conference in the Autumn, as proposed by Moscow on March 7, might result in a split in the international communist movement. Moscow should "bear responsibility for the split" if it unilaterally attempted to summon a conference.

Under the present circumstances of tension, the letter said, it would be more appropriate to take the first step towards a world conference about May, 1965 with the holding of bilateral talks.

The letter, dated May 7, which was a reply to the March 7 letter of the Soviet Central Committee, was published by the New China news agency together with other correspondence between the Central Committee of the two parties since November, 1963.

In a letter of February 29 the Chinese brushed aside Soviet offers to expand trade and to resume the economic aid and technical assistance suspended in 1960. They also rejected a proposal for the cessation of public ideological polemics but agreed to negotiate border differences. They referred to "unequal treaties" negotiated during the Czarist regime.

Alluding to difficulties on the Sinkiang frontier, in Central Asia, the letter stated: "The Soviet side has made frequent breaches of the status quo on the border, has occupied Chinese territory and has provoked border incidents."

It asserted that Moscow had undertaken "large-scale subversive activities in Chinese frontier areas, trying to sow discord among China's nationalities by means of Press and wireless, inciting China's minority nationalities to break away from their Motherland and inveigling and coercing tens of thousands of Chinese citizens into going to the Soviet Union."

B. Soviet Warning Of Possible Border Conflicts: The New China news agency reported on May 9 that the Soviet Union had warned China of possible conflicts over their mutual border and had made proposals for consultations.

The Soviet letter, dated November 5, 1963 recalled that both sides had favoured consultations on the question, and added: "In this connexion, we are transmitting to you a relevant document."

The letter referred to Chinese statements about the "aggressive policy of the Czarist Government and the unjust treaties imposed upon China." [Some eastern regions of the Soviet Union were ceded by China to Russia during the Czarist era].

It added: "Naturally, we will not defend the Russian Czars who permitted arbitrariness in laying down the State boundaries ....We are convinced that you too do not intend to defend the Chinese emperors who by force of arms seized not a few territories belonging to others.

"But while condemning the reactionary actions of the top-strata exploiters who held power in Russia and in China at that time, we cannot disregard the fact that historically formed boundaries between States now exist.

"Any attempt to ignore this can become the source of misunderstandings and conflicts. We have all the possibilities for fully eliminating border frictions of any kind, and thus showing the peoples an example of truly friendly relations between two socialist States."

The letter was one of seven exchanged between the communist parties of the two countries since November, 1963 on their ideological dispute.

C. Mass Purges In China Alleged: The Soviet Government newspaper Izvestia accused Chinese leaders on May 16 of mass purges affecting many hundreds of thousands of people.

The Izvestia article, first of a new series on China, was one of the most outspoken attacks on China's internal system to appear in the bitterly contested Sino-Soviet ideological feud.

Izvestia said the Chinese had made a "state practice of violating socialist legality". Peking interpreted the dictatorship of the proletariat to mean the dictatorship of a group of leaders, and Mao Tse-tung's personality cult was the crowning embodiment of this policy. "It is therefore quite understandable that the exposure of the Stalin personality cult by our party was received by the Chinese leaders as something directed against them."

The views of the Chinese leadership on the proletarian dictatorship "are the result of the gigantic pressure of the petty bourgeois elements drawn into the whirlpool of the revolutionary struggle."

D. Opposition To Soviet Participation In Asian-African Conference: The Chinese Government, in a statement issued on May 30, re-iterated its opposition to the Soviet Union taking part in the second Asian-African Conference to be held somewhere in Africa in March, 1965.

The statement, replying to a Soviet declaration of April 30, was handed to the heads of all diplomatic missions in Peking.

It said the Chinese Government had taken a "principled and consistent stand" on the question of Soviet participation in the Asian-African Conference.

"The Asian-African Conference is a conference of heads of Asian and African countries. Since the Soviet Union is a European country, it of course should not take part in such a conference. This is a matter of principle, and we abide by principle.

"The relations between China and the Soviet Union were very good in 1955, but we did not on that account stand for its participation in the first Asian-African Conference. And our objection to its participation in the second Asian-African Conference is by no means because the relations between China and the Soviet Union are at present not so good....

"On the contrary, even in the present circumstances when our relations are not so good, the Chinese people will certainly stand by the Soviet people and fight shoulder to shoulder with them against the enemy if the Soviet Union should be attacked by the imperialists, whether the attack is first directed against its European part or its Asian part."

Referring to Soviet statements that USSR was the "biggest Asian Power" and that the Asian part of USSR was almost twice as big as the territory of the whole of China, the Peking statement said: "These statements sound frightening. But what is the sense of talking like that? Does the fact that all the large Asian States could fit into the Asian part of USSR give it more say than all the Asian and African countries put together? Size cannot frighten anybody. It cannot frighten any Asian or African State, even the smallest...."

The statement said that, while it was true that two-thirds of Soviet territory lay in Asia, "equally important is the fact that nearly three-quarters of the Soviet population live in Europe."

"Even more decisive, the political centre of the Soviet Union as a single entity has always been in Europe and, therefore, it has traditionally been acknowledged as a European country."

The statement noted that the Soviet Union supported the first Asian-African Conference in 1955, but did not ask for its participation. As the second Conference was a continuation of the first, on what grounds could the Soviet leaders insist on being invited to it? "What changes have taken place in the world that should have caused the Soviet leaders to change their attitude?" it asked.

The Soviet Government, in its declaration, "said bluffingly it would give a rebuff" to those countries which are against its participation in the Asian-African Conference.

"Well, let us see your 'rebuff'. You probably rate yourselves most important. But in our opinion you will ultimately make yourselves a laughing stock by taking such an attitude. Although the Asian and African countries are poor and have many difficulties they have a backbone. The times when Asian and African countries could be ordered about by others are gone for ever.

"There exist serious differences between China and the Soviet Union. We are not afraid to debate with the Soviet leaders, but we have tried our best whatever possible to avoid embarrassing Asian-African countries by this debate.

"We are replying under compulsion. If the Soviet Government should endlessly repeat its old tune of the past month without any creative development, we would ask to be excused from making any further reply. What good would be served by such haggling?"

It called upon the Soviet leaders to "exercise some restraint and not to impose the Sino-Soviet dispute on Asian and African countries."

E. Russian Charge Of Bribery And Blackmail: The Soviet Press carried reports on June 3 accusing Chinese leaders of bribery and blackmail in an attempt to subordinate world communism to their ideological leadership.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The attack was in the first instalment of an article "against the splitters, for unity of the Communist movement" reprinted in Pravda from the latest issue of the party magazine Partinaya Zhizn.

The article accused the Chinese leaders of resorting to "all kinds of unsavoury tricks—slander, bribery and blackmail—in an attempt to gain control of at least some of the Communists of other countries." "It embarked upon the road of subverting the unity of the socialist countries."

It said that in Belgium the Chinese made use of an embezzler, in Chile a Trotskyist, and in Ceylon they paid a mortgage for a "splitter." "All kinds of renegades....are trying to float on the dirty foam of Peking's fractional struggle against the Marxist-Leninist parties."

The Chinese were especially active in Ceylon, where diplomats from the Chinese Embassy tried to give directives to the Ceylonese Communist Party and supplied it with propaganda literature.

The Chinese had settled a Rs. 5,000 debt for one Ceylonese communist, paid up a mortgage for another, and gave a third "splitter" Rs. 1,000 for car repairs.

In Peru, pro-Chinese activities made an armed attack on the offices of the Communist newspaper and threatened the party leader with physical violence.

In Brussels, "hooligans" tried to break up a Communist meeting.

In Australia, the pro-Chinese faction had only 100 members, but was able to publish its own newspaper and magazine, apparently with outside help.

Izvestia said on June 3 that China had stopped its exchanges of diplomatic information on foreign policy problems with USSR some time ago, although the exchanges were provided for in the Sino-Soviet Friendship and Aid Treaty of 1950.

Izvestia also accused China of sending strategic goods to the "imperialist countries" while the supply of such goods to USSR had been diminished or interrupted.

The newspaper said the Chinese leaders put no trust in Soviet military aid in the event of a conflict. In this connexion it cited a statement by Marshal Chen Yi, Foreign Minister of China, and said: "It is hard to say at what point it (the statement) is serious."

SUMMARY: Das Commission's Report—Mr. P. S. Kairon Resigns; CPI National Council Meeting; Loans From USA And Canada; Balance Of Payments Position.

A. Corruption Charges Against Mr. Pratap Singh Kairon—Das Commission's Report: In its report released in New Delhi on June 21, the Das Commission roundly castigated the Punjab Chief Minister, Mr. Pratap Singh Kairon, for his conduct in making himself an instrument of furthering the interests of his sons and for other irregularities.

A summary of the report was considered by the Central Cabinet on June 21 and was subsequently released. The summary was in three parts—the Commission's findings against Mr. Kairon himself, adverse comments against other Ministers and officials, and findings on the charges individually.

It showed that Mr. Kairon was held culpable in four cases, namely, those concerning Neelam Cinema, Chandigarh; Nandan Cinema and Cold Storage, Amritsar; land for the settlement of Harijans; and Dr. Harcharan Singh Dhillon.

In the first three instances, certain irregularities or illegalities were committed to promote the interests of the Chief Minister's relations with his full knowledge and consent. Dr. Dhillon, a State Government employee, attended, against Government directives, on Mr. Kairon during his election tour of 1956.

In a fifth case, in the absence of direct evidence of pressure having been exerted by the Chief Minister on behalf of his sons, Mr. Kairon was given the benefit of the doubt.

The conduct of three other Ministers was adversely commented upon. They were Mr. Mohan Lal, Home Minister, Choudhury Suraj Mal, former PWD Minister and Mr. Niranjan Singh Talib, Deputy PWD Minister.

The officers impugned were referred to by designation. Though the list was not exhaustive, the following were specifically mentioned: the Additional Secretary and the Deputy Secretary of the Capital Project Department; the Excise and Taxation Commissioner; the District Magistrates of Patiala and Hissar; the Director of Health Services and Mr. Waryam Singh of the Amritsar Municipal Committee.

Mr. Das pointed out that in coming to his conclusions he had insisted "on the high standard of proof, which our laws enjoin, before accepting any allegation however emphatically asserted." Accordingly, he dismissed most of the other charges for lack of evidence. Among these were the alleged mala fide prosecution of Mr. D. S. Grewal and of Mr. R. P. Kapoor.

The following extract, in which Mr. Das summed up his judicial reaction to the manner in which Mr. Kairon permitted his influence and authority to be prostituted to promote the business and other interests of his sons, constitutes a powerful damnation of the man who ruled Punjab for eight years:

"The Commission is free to concede that a father cannot legally or morally prevent his sons from carrying on business, but the exploitation of the influence of the father who happens to be the Chief Minister of the State cannot be permitted to be made a business of. Such exploitation cannot possibly be a legitimate business and the father's influence and powers cannot be permitted to be traded in.

"In the delicate situation in which Mr. Pratap Singh Kairon, holding such exalted high office, was placed as a result of the activities of his sons and relatives and Government officials, even assuming he personally had not lent a helping hand in relation to them, the least he could do was to give a stern warning, in private and, if necessary, publicly, to his sons, relatives, colleagues and subordinate officers against their alleged conduct even if such conduct had not been proved to be true.

"There is no getting away from the fact that Mr. Pratap Singh Kairon knew or had more than ample reason to think or suspect that his sons and relatives were allegedly exploiting his influence and powers. But, as his own affidavit shows, he made no inquiry, gave no warning to anybody and took no step whatever to prevent its recurrence but let things drift in the way they had been going, assuming he had no hand in it.

"In the premises, he cannot now be heard to say that he had no knowledge of any wrongful conduct on the part of his sons, or relatives or the officers under him. The allegations stared him in the face; he paid no heed to them. He cannot now plead ignorance of facts.

"In view of his inaction in the face of the circumstances hereinbefore alluded to, he must be held to have connived at the doings of his sons and relatives, his colleagues and Government officers. This is the true position, as the Commission apprehends it. It will be for the authorities to consider and decide what consequences follow from such connivance."

Mr. P. S. Kairon Resigns:

On June 15, the Governor of Punjab, Hafiz Mohammed Ibrahim, accepted the resignation of Mr. Pratap Singh Kairon from the Chief Ministership.

Mr. Kairon told a news conference before that after resigning he felt as if a "load is off my shoulders."

Replying to a question whether he wanted to become PCC chief, he replied: "It depends on the people. If they and the PCC President, Mr. Bhagwat Dayal Sharma, want me to head the State Congress, I will do so."

He said that he would now devote himself to organizational work in the State. "I wish to serve the State and through it the country."

He asserted that he would prove himself useful in any job. He would keep on doing his work. "I will try to find something new to do." He would also continue to pay attention to the task of doubling food production. "You will see how well I engage myself in that job."

He was anxious that those who had been in politics during the British regime should secure training in agriculture, industry and poultry farming. They should tour the countryside and tell the people how to do their work better. He was of the opinion that these people would prove useful in increasing production on farms and in factories.

He would also concentrate on a mass literacy campaign.

To a suggestion by a correspondent that he (Mr. Kairon) could have waited for the reaction of the Congress High Command to the two letters of his resignation before submitting the resignation of his Ministry to the Governor, Mr. Kairon said that he did not want to say anything in this matter.

He also declined to give reasons for tendering the resignation of his Ministry to the Governor.

Besides the Chief Minister, the Punjab Ministry consisted of seven Ministers. They were: Dr. Gopichand Bhargava, Mr. Mohan Lal, Mr. Darbara Singh, Mr. Gurbanta Singh, Mr. Ram Saran Chand Mittal, Mr. Ranbir Singh and Mr. Ajmer Singh. In addition, there was the Chief Parliamentary Secretary, Mr. Gulab Singh.

The Ministry was formed in February 1962 with 31 members. Its strength was reduced to nine after the declaration of Emergency.

Mr. Kairon had been in office since January 1, 1956.

Dr. Gopichand Bhargava Forms "Interim" Government:

On June 21, the Punjab Governor, Hafiz Mohammed Ibrahim invited Dr. Gopichand Bhargava to form an interim Government.

Besides Dr. Bhargava, who was sworn in as the "caretaker" Chief Minister at a quiet function at Raj Bhavan, Mr.

Mohan Lal, Mr. Gurbanta Singh, Mr. Ram Saran Chand Mittal and Mr. Ajmer Singh took oath of office.

The other two members of the Kairon Ministry—Mr. Darbara Singh and Mr. Ranbir Singh—were sworn-in later.

The Chief Parliamentary Secretary, Mr. Gulab Singh was sworn-in on June 22.

Mr. Gurnam Singh, Opposition leader in the Punjab Assembly, said: "Mr. Kairon's exit is the triumph of the people. I wish Mr. Kairon had taken this step much earlier in the interest of healthy, democratic traditions."

In an interview, Mr. Kairon said: "I have taken this step after consulting Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri and Congress President Kamaraj.

"My love for the people of Punjab is ever-abiding in my heart and I will continue to serve them. I wish to see Punjab great and India great."

Dr. Bhargava, the new "caretaker" Chief Minister, will continue till the Congress Legislature Party elects a new leader and forms a regular Ministry.

Mr. Mohan Lal Resigns:

The Punjab Home Minister, Mr. Mohan Lal, who was sworn-in as a member of the "caretaker" Government headed by Dr. Gopichand Bhargava on June 21, tendered his resignation later the same day.

He sent his resignation to the Governor, Hafiz Mohammad Ibrahim, through Dr. Bhargava. The Governor accepted the resignation.

Mr. Mohan Lal's resignation came in the wake of the release of the Das Commission's report which implicated him in the case in which Mr. Gurinder Singh Kairon was given Government support in getting the town planning scheme rescinded to enable him to start a cold store and a cinema at Amritsar.

It was learnt in New Delhi that Mr. Mohan Lal was being relieved of his Cabinet post.

Prajatantra Party Dissolved:

The Prajatantra Party, consisting of dissident Punjab Congressmen, was dissolved on June 21 at a meeting held under the presidentship of Mr. Gian Singh Rarewala.

A resolution adopted at the meeting stressed the need for ensuring a clean and efficient administration in Punjab.

It said: "We are gratified that the Congress High Command has taken prompt action on the basis of the findings of the Das Commission and accepted the resignation of Mr. Kairon and his Government. We regret, however, that he has been allowed to function as the head of the 'caretaker' Government. We wish also to emphasize that a large number of members of the State Congress Legislature Party cannot be relied upon to elect a suitable leader." It was, therefore, essential that the High Command should help them elect a leader who would be equal to the task.

The resolution demanded that the report of the Das Commission should be immediately published and proper and prompt action taken on the basis of its findings. Those who signed the resolution were Mr. Ram Chandra, Mr. Hardwari Lal, Mr. K. L. Sharma, Mr. Gurdial Singh Dhillon, Mr. Darshan Singh, Mr. D. D. Khanna, Mr. Dev Raj Anand, Mr. Tirlochan Singh Ryasti, Mr. Ram Piara, Mr. Moolchand Jain and Sardar Gian Singh Rarewala.

B. CPI National Council On Mr. Nehru's Death And After: The National Council of the Communist Party of India (CPI) began a 10-day session in New Delhi on June 7.

In a resolution adopted on June 7, it described the late Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru as "the most beloved leader of the Indian people", whose death "has left a void in the life of the nation that no other person can fill for a long time".

The resolution also described Mr. Nehru as "the greatest citizen of the modern world" and said that "with his faith in the unity of the Afro-Asian peoples, in peace and anti-colonialism, friendship with socialist countries and international co-operation based on equality of nations, he made outstanding contributions to the world development in the last two decades".

It added: "The National Council of the Communist Party of India expresses its deep sense of sorrow at the death of Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, the most beloved leader of the Indian people. His death has left a void in the life of the nation that no other person can fill for a long time.

"His death has also been mourned internationally, by all Governments and peoples, for Mr. Nehru was one of the greatest citizens of the modern world.

"With his faith in the unity of the Afro-Asian peoples, in peace and anti-colonialism, friendship with socialist countries and international co-operation based on equality of nations, he made outstanding contributions to world developments in the last two decades.

"He was one of the main architects of the policy of non-alignment which has played a great and positive role, not only in strengthening our country's freedom but also in the preservation of world peace and reduction of international tensions."

Resolutions:

In a resolution adopted on June 17, the CPI National Council welcomed the Prime Minister, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri's policy statement and said that the Party, as during the time of Mr. Nehru, would support "all progressive and democratic policies and measures".

But the Party would oppose all policies and measures which sought to reverse the policy of non-alignment and peace or which were "anti-democratic and harmed the people's interests".

It viewed with concern the "difficult situation" that faced the country after Mr. Nehru's death and said that the tragedy had been a signal "for reactionary elements within the country and diehard imperialist circles abroad to make renewed efforts to infiltrate their nominees into vantage posts in the new Government with the object of subverting the basic policies of Mr. Nehru."

It welcomed Mr. Shastri's statement that he would adhere to Mr. Nehru's policies and ideals, "thereby foiling the immediate hopes of the reactionary circles".

At the same time, it expressed concern that "such a well-known advocate of Rightist policies as Mr. S. K. Patil" had been included in the Cabinet.

It called for "drastic practical steps" to break the power of profiteers and monopolists by taking over the food trade, enforcing "severe penal measures against the anti-social robbers of the people's food" and nationalization of banks.

In another resolution on food, the Council called for State trading, asking the Government to enter the market at harvest time.

A separate resolution on the food situation in West Bengal asked the Centre to give an adequate quantity of rice to that State.

A fourth resolution demanded the release of Communist detenus.

The Council also discussed the Party programme prepared by the Leftist group and rejected it outright. But a Party spokesman said that the Council found several good points in the programme note submitted by Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad.

The Council advised the Leftists to dissolve their separate committees formed in certain States and pave the way for party unity. The spokesman said that the Party would like the Leftists to participate in the Party congress to be held in Bombay in the second week of November, provided they agreed with the decisions taken by the National Council.

In two resolutions released on June 18, the CPI indicated its attitude to the Congress and the Samyukta Samajwadi Party (SSP).

Without naming them, the Council rejected the plea of Mr. Asoka Mehta and his followers that democratic and Socialist-minded people should join the Congress to fight the "Right-reactionaries" inside the party.

It said that after Mr. Nehru's death "strong reactionary forces" entrenched in the Congress, "in league with their counterparts outside", had been trying to shift the Government's policies further to the Right. They had also been trying to weaken "the positive aspects" of the Government's policies.

Though as a political party the Congress declared at its Bhuvaneswar session its faith in Socialism, it was to be judged "not by its declarations, but by its performance and practice". In practice, the Congress had not carried out even the "essential pre-requisites" for weakening reaction and strengthening democracy. The "prerequisites" were nationalization of banking, breaking the power of "big money" and taking over the wholesale trade in food.

It warned "Socialist-minded" people against the "illusion" that the Congress could become a platform for the unity of democratic and Socialist forces.

In its second resolution the Council offered to co-operate with the Samyukta Samajwadi Party "for the adoption and implementation of progressive policies, and particularly in the sphere of mass struggles of the workers, peasantry, the intelligentsia and students". It hoped that the SSP would reciprocate the gesture.

But it warned that "democratic unity and, far more, Socialist unity, cannot lie through a policy of anti-Communism." Anti-Communism was the ideological spearhead of reaction against all progressive and democratic forces and movements.

In both its resolutions the Council drew pointed attention to the situation created after Mr. Nehru's death. There was now "no person of his national and international stature" in the ruling party who could hold the country and the people together as he had done.

C. Canadian Loan: The Canadian Trade Minister, Mr. Mitchell Sharp, announced in Ottawa on June 12 that a new loan of $900,000 would be granted to India in addition to a $1,000,000 export credits loan made in December, 1963.

This loan, he said, followed revision of India's needs for the construction of a new plant at Loharga, in Bihar State, with

D. US Loan For Methanol Plant —Agreement Signed: India and USA signed in New Delhi on June 19 an Agreement providing for an American loan of Rs. 3.7 crores ($7.3 million) to build a methanol plant at Trombay.

The project will make India self-sufficient in methanol, a key chemical in the manufacture of plastics, drugs, resins, synthetic fibres and dyestuffs.

The methanol plant, India's first, will be built by the Fertilizer Corporation of India and will begin production in late 1965, utilizing synthetic gases produced at the adjacent fertilizer factory.

Earlier US loans totalling Rs. 27.7 crores will meet both the foreign exchange and the rupee costs of the fertilizer plant itself, which will produce annually 420,000 tons of chemical fertilizers—enough to raise the food output by 100,000 tons—making it India's largest producer.

A portion of the loan given under the latest Agreement will be used to install ancillary facilities, including a sulphuric acid plant and an argon gas recovery plant.

Mr. P. Govindan Nair, Additional Secretary, Ministry of Finance, and Mr. Joseph M. Greene, Jr. US Charge d'Affaires, signed the Agreement.

F. Supply Of Field Tractor Components—Contract With Yugoslav Firm: Motor and Tractor Industries—the biggest Yugoslav tractor firm—signed in Belgrade on June 16 a contract with Tractors and Farm Equipment Ltd., Madras, for the export of field tractor components worth about Rs. 2 crores during the current year.

The new contract is more than double the contract signed the previous year.

At present, the Indian firm manufactures 60 per cent of the components required for field tractors and imports the rest from Yugoslavia.

Mr. Radic Stanojevic, Managing Director of the Yugoslav firm, which produces annually 9,500 field tractors per annum in addition to 150,000 motor engines of various horsepowers, said after the signing of the contract: "The contract is a symbol of new industrial collaboration between India and Yugoslavia".

G. Balance Of Payments Position During 1963: India's balance of payments position improved substantially during 1963 as a combined result of an improvement in "invisibles" and the narrowing of trade deficit.

As against a fall of Rs. 73.2 crores in 1962, the foreign exchange reserves rose by Rs. 45.6 crores in 1963.

The improvement took place in spite of a worsening of Rs. 39.6 crores under "errors and omissions" and an increase in imports on Government account by Rs. 117 crores.

Trade deficit narrowed down by Rs. 21.7 crores to Rs. 395 crores. The factors that favoured the narrowing down of the trade gap were: (1) increase in export earnings by Rs. 102.2 crores; and (2) decline in imports on private account by Rs. 36.6 crores.

The improvement in "invisibles" came as a result of receipts under transportation, insurance, miscellaneous, private donations and banking capital. The factor which affected invisibles was the larger outflow under investment income, presumably because of servicing of foreign loans.

There has also been an increase in receipts to the Government not shown elsewhere which include US Embassy expenditure in India from the rupee proceeds of sales of US surplus agricultural commodities.

The current account deficit in 1963 stood at Rs. 295.2 crores, which was less by Rs. 66.2 crores compared to the preceding year. Receipts from official donations were Rs. 78.4 crores, against Rs. 70.3 crores in the preceding year.

As against a net outflow of Rs. 15 crores for other invisibles in 1962, there was a net inflow of Rs. 21.4 crores in 1963.

Imports on private account were worth Rs. 600.7 crores and on Government account Rs. 568.2 crores. In the preceding year, they were Rs. 637.2 crores and Rs. 451.2 crores respectively. Export earnings were Rs. 773.9 crores in 1963, against Rs. 671.7 crores in the preceding year. This resulted in an adverse trade balance of Rs. 395 crores in 1963, against Rs. 416.7 crores in the preceding year.

In regard to capital account, the position with regard to private long-term capital deteriorated further. The net outflow in short-term capital was Rs. 8.6 crores, against Rs. 1.2 crores in the preceding year. In short-term capital, there was a net outflow of Rs. 1.1 crores, against a net inflow of Rs. 3.1 crores in 1962.

In banking capital, there was a net inflow of Rs. 2.9 crores in 1963, against a net outflow of Rs. 4.3 crores in the preceding year. The fall in the UK Bank Rate had presumably caused an upswing in the inflow of banking funds. The inflow was highest in the January-March, 1963 period, when the net inflow was Rs. 17.2 crores.

Utilization of foreign loans improved during the year. The net inflow of official loans was Rs. 421.4 crores during the year as against Rs. 342.3 crores in the preceding year.

I. Tourism During 1963: India earned Rs. 20 crores worth of foreign exchange through tourism in 1963 as compared to Rs. 19 crores in 1962.

In 1963, 1,40,841 foreign tourists visited India, of whom 29.9 per cent came from Western Europe, 29.2 per cent from North America, 19.2 per cent from East Africa, 10.3 per cent from Africa, 3.5 per cent from Eastern Europe, 3.3 per cent from West Asia and 1.1 per cent from South America and the rest from other parts of the world.

Tourists who came by air and entered Bombay numbered 47,730. Those who came to Delhi direct numbered 37,625, those who came via Calcutta were 24,369, via Madras 11,415, via Dhanushkodi 7,234 and via other ports 12,448.

Out of the total number of 1,40,841 tourists, 25,000 came to Rajasthan. About 75 per cent came by road, 24 per cent by air and one per cent by rail.

For the first time in the history of tourism in Rajasthan, Mount Abu was visited by a select 29 American tourists taken by a leading travel agency of USA—Ferguson Travel Agents—who visited the Dhilwara Temple and the Ranakpur Jain temple.

For the last 10 years, Ferguson Travel Agents are bringing tourists to India and showing them Jaipur and Udaipur.

During 1963, the Indian Government invited about a dozen tour operators and travel agents from USA, Japan and Australia. These groups have decided to include Jaipur and Udaipur as "musts" in their programme in future. Tourist traffic to Rajasthan during the first four months of this year showed considerable increase, compared to the first four months of 1963.

According to a spokesman of the State Tourist Department, Rajasthan is a tourist paradise. There is, however, difficulty to reach places like Bikaner and Jaisalmer, and these places should, therefore, be linked by air.

J. Population Estimates: According to estimates released in New Delhi on June 21, India's population has doubled in the past 63 years.

The first census held in 1901 recorded a total of 23.83 crores persons in the territories now comprising the Indian Union. Since then, India's population has been rising at varying rates—except during the decade 1911-21, when it fell by 0.31 per cent—and the present population is estimated at more than 47 crores, double the 1901 figure.

The growth rate of India's population was 5.75 per cent during the decade 1901-11, 11 per cent during 1921-31, 14.22 per cent during 1931-41, and 13.31 per cent during 1941-51. The population increased from 36.10 crores in 1951 to 43.92 crores in 1961, recording a 21.51 per cent growth rate.

Among the States, Assam has always shown the highest rate of growth. Even in the decade 1911-21 when most of the States showed a fall in population, Assam's population rose by 19 per cent. During the decade 1951-61, Assam's population rose by 31.45 per cent, followed by West Bengal, Gujerat, Rajasthan and Punjab, where the population increased by 32.80, 26.88, 26.20 and 25.86 per cent, respectively.

The working group set up by the population expert committee has finalized population projections up to 1981. It has indicated that the present growth rate will continue showing an upward trend during 1961-66 and the country's population will rise to 49.47 crores in 1966. Thereafter, the growth rate is expected to decline, and the country's population is expected to rise to 55.96 crores in 1971, 63 crores in 1976, and 69.49 crores in 1981.

A. Industrial Development Plan For Azerbaijan: A despatch from Tehran on June 12 said that Dr. Ali Naqi Alikhani, Minister of Economy who had recently visited Azarbaijan, had announced plans for large-scale industrial expansion in the Province, with the Industrial and Mining Development Bank of Iran allocating special credit facilities for the purpose.

The impressive results already attained in metal work by Azerbaijanis using primitive tools are to be developed with the aid of the Ministry of Economy.

A 200 to 300-ton cement plant is to be established at Azarshahr and at Mohabad. The construction of a dam is expected to contribute to the area's industrial and agricultural activity. A wool-processing and cleaning plant will be established with financial help from the Industrial and Mining Development Bank and another project is the installation of a semi-automatic plant for the production of blankets and locally produced wool.

[Prev. ref. 5863:IRN:A]

B. Second Phase Of Land Reform Programme: It was stated on June 9 that Iran would begin the second phase of its land reform programme in November.

The Prime Minister, Mr. H. A. Mansour sent a Bill to Parliament on May 19 that sets new, and considerably lower, limits on land holdings.

In its initial stage, launched in January, 1962, Iran's land distribution programme limited each landlord to one village, irrespective of size, and required everything else to be turned over to the Government for resale to the peasants. About 20 per cent of the country's estimated 48,600 villages were affected, the great estates were broken up and large-scale landlordism came to an end.

The new Bill seeks to carry the programme a stage further by breaking up the medium-sized estates. It sets new limits of 30 to 120 hectares for a landlord. Farm productivity is the criteria for application of limits.

The lowest figure has been set for the fertile rice fields of Gilan and Mazanderan. The highest is for the arid provinces of Sistan and Baluchistan. Limitations for Tehran and the surrounding area stand at 50 hectares; for other than rice fields in Mazanderan and Gilan at 60 hectares; and for all other areas at 80 hectares. (A hectare is about 2.5 acres).

Landlords are allowed three choices for disposing of their excess land. They can either sell to their peasants at a mutually agreed price. They can lease the land to them for a 30-year period, with terms of the lease reviewable every five years. They may, as a final choice, divide up the land between themselves and their peasants according to the crop-sharing ratio prevalent in the region.

The proposed law nevertheless includes a number of provisions to help landlords through the difficult transitional period. The law allows up to 500 hectares of mechanized farmland to each landlord. It further specifies that a landlord can hold an unspecified area of mechanized farmland above that limitation, provided the holding is virgin land brought under cultivation by the landlord's personal capital and effort.

A mechanized farm is defined as land where all work is done by hired labour (as against share-croppers) and where at least ploughing is done by machinery. To encourage mechanized farming further, priority in development of virgin lands will be given to former landlords, who have lost their land through the distribution. The Government will assist such efforts by easy credit and technical assistance.

In addition, the Government has undertaken to provide one-third of the price of any land sold to a peasant in cash to the landlord. The peasant will repay the Government in 14 annual instalments.

The pace of payments to landlords has been increased in other ways. Under the initial phase of land reform, the Government paid landlords in instalments over a 15-year period. It will now make a cash payment of £2,320 for any land worth more than that amount. For land valued at less than this, 95 per cent of the price will be paid in cash. In each case the remainder will be paid in 14 annual instalments.

The proposed law envisages broad authority for the Land Reform Organization which will supervise all transactions. It is authorized to mediate in disagreements between landlords and peasants over prices and terms of lease. Where either party fails to comply with the regulations, it is empowered to enforce the laws as agent for the non-complying party.

Because of the flexibility of the law, it is not yet known how great an area of land, or how many peasants, will be affected. Around 300,000 peasant families received land under the first distribution. The country has probably around three million peasant families, and it is certain that a great many will receive land under this phase.

The important question is whether the programme, so vastly extended, can be effectively financed and administered. Credit requirements for the newly-landed peasants are high, for the Government must step into the landlord's shoes in providing seed, fertilizer and ready cash. Availability of credit has so far not been commensurate with need.

The number of co-operatives will also have to multiply rapidly, and although the men to run them are being trained, they are not yet available in sufficient numbers. There were 3,089 co-operatives for the first 8,042 villages distributed (an average of 2.5 villages per co-operative). But less than half of these were reported as effectively operational.

Nevertheless, there are at least two reasons that argue in favour of pushing forward, however cautiously, with land distribution. Peasants were promised that the programme would be extended, and their patience is not inexhaustible. The landlords, knowing further distribution was forthcoming, were not eager to continue investing in their land. These were strong reasons for ending the period of suspense.

ISRAEL

A. Bank Of Israel's Report For 1963: According to the Bank of Israel's report for 1963 (available on June 5), a high rate of development was maintained in every sector of the economy, but during the second half of the year the massive inflow of foreign capital, precipitated by the devaluation of the Israeli pound in 1962, made its effect felt through a big increase in the money supply, causing the re-appearance of inflationary symptoms.

During the year output rose by 10.7 per cent or 5.5 per cent per gainfully occupied person, and incomes rose by an average of 8.2 per cent per person. Consumption rose by 5.4 per cent per head. The means of payment rose by I£353 million, or 28 per cent due largely to the inflow of funds from abroad, and the foreign trade deficit declined by 11 per cent from $455 million in 1962 to $407 million in 1963. Exports rose by 20 per cent to $605 million and imports were reduced in the first half of the year, but then began to rise sharply. Although the Government repaid some $50 million of foreign debts in advance of maturity, the foreign currency reserve increased by $72 million, reaching $634 million on March 31, 1964.

Overall investment increased during the year by only one per cent due to a 20 per cent decline in Government housing, 11 per cent in agriculture and smaller amounts in mines, quarries and electricity. On the other hand, investment in industry rose by 9 per cent and the capital stock of the country by 10 per cent. As a result of devaluation, the purchase of locally manufactured equipment rose by 25 per cent.

Mr. David Horowitz, Governor of the Bank of Israel, said in Jerusalem on June 4 that the maintenance of present monetary and credit restrictions and resistance to the wages push were necessary if Israel's trade balance was to be improved.

JAPAN

A. Mr. A. Mikoyan's Visit: The first Deputy Prime Minister of USSR, Mr. Anastas Mikoyan, visited Japan from May 14 to 27 at the head of a Supreme Soviet delegation.

He was the first Soviet leader to be granted an audience by the Japanese Emperor. Unlike his visit three years ago amidst basic distrust between the two countries, this time he met political and economic leaders, including conservative elements whose interests are deeply identified with those of USA.

Besides members of the ruling Liberal Democratic Party, he met top economic leaders who, for the first time, committed themselves to full economic relations with Russia. In the political field no tangible agreement was reached. Such issues as the northern islands, the proposed joint declaration calling for the immediate suspension of underground nuclear tests and talks for Far Eastern security stood now where they did before.

However, there was an indication that the return of the Habomai Island group and Shikotan Island off Hokkaido may be referred to further discussions when a Socialist Party mission visits Moscow in the near future.

Mr. Mikoyan said, on concluding his mission, that he was happy to meet representatives from many strata and see many places, including the growing industrial facilities which he could not see during his last trip three years ago.

Mr. Mikoyan's economic achievements may be summed up as follows:

(1) He foresaw a $1,000-million trade in 1970 compared to $270 million for 1964.

(2) Possible supply of Japanese economic potential for development projects of the Soviet Union envisaged in three plans, namely, Gosplan (1959-1965), Far Eastern development programme (1966-1970) and a seven-year chemical industry plan (1964-1970).

Especially, Japanese participation in the Siberian development now appears likely in the following projects: establishment of paper and pulp plants, fertilizer plants and the Irkutsk-Nakhodka pipeline.

Full participation by the ex-Zaibatsu business concerns in Soviet economic development occurred for the first time. These firms, which control the bulk of Japanese business, have so far remained reluctant to deal with communist countries because of consideration towards USA. The apparent thaw between USA and the Soviet Union has evidently encouraged the deeply pro-American business leadership to start unrestricted activities in what they consider to be the virgin soil of Siberia.

Economic And Trade Relations:

Earlier, in the first week of May, in an interview with the Kyodo News Agency director, Mr. Mikoyan emphasized the possibility of Japan taking a hand in the development of eastern Siberia and opening a direct air service with Europe.

Speaking about the need to develop trade between the two countries—which, he said, "we cannot consider sufficient"—he attached importance to the development of coastal trade between the Soviet maritime provinces and Japanese firms, "Of particular significance is the question of using Japanese technology and resources for industrial development in Siberia and the Far East."

He indicated a possible hitch by linking the prospect of fresh markets to the whole question of possible long-term credits. He said that industries serving Japan could be built on the Soviet mainland "if Japanese companies agree to provide us with technical equipment and other materials on conditions of deferred payment".

Oil is one of the products the Russians are most interested in supplying to Japan. The present obstacle of the long supply route through the Black Sea and Suez will be overcome largely with the completion of the trans-Siberian pipeline from Angarsk to the new Pacific port of Nakhodka.

Mr. Mikoyan told the Japanese that the establishment of a direct air link between Moscow and Japan would provide European businessmen with the shortest and most convenient service to the Far East. "Our Government", he said, "is ready to direct its efforts to a most speedy solution of this question on a mutually acceptable basis."

The Chinese are known to be interested in extending services from China to Japan and to South Asia and this may be one reason for the Russian interest.

Answering a question on the territorial dispute over the islands of Habomai and Shikotan, he said that the Soviet Government did not intend to force the issue if the Japanese Government did not think the time ripe for the conclusion of a Peace Treaty. In 1960, after the Japanese had signed a security treaty with USA, the Soviet Union declared that it would not return the islands until all foreign troops had been withdrawn from Japan.

Peace Treaty Proposed:

Mr. Mikoyan brought to the Prime Minister, Mr. Hayato Ikeda, a letter from the Soviet Premier, Mr. N. Khruschev which, among other things, proposed immediate signing of a Peace Treaty between the two countries.

The two countries are yet to sign a Peace Treaty to bring to a formal end their Second World War state of hostility.

When Mr. Mikoyan met Mr. Ikeda on May 15 he was firmly told that the territorial dispute between the two countries over the Kurile Islands must be settled before any Peace Treaty could be signed. (The southern Kurile Islands were taken over by Russia from Japan in the last days of the Pacific War. Japan claims she is the rightful owner of the Islands.)

Mr. Ikeda said he agreed in principle with Mr. Khruschev that a Peace Treaty was essential for normalization and development of relations between the two countries.

Mr. Ikeda said he agreed to principle with Mr. Khruschev's other proposals also for issuing a joint declaration urging world Powers to refrain from underground nuclear tests.

About an air link between Tokyo and Moscow, Mr. Mikoyan said Soviet experts would arrive in Tokyo very soon—after his departure—to discuss the matter with the Japanese experts.

Observers believed this showed a change in the Soviet stand on this issue. They had been reluctant to finalise the air link agreement—which was accepted in principle last year—for it involved flying over the closed strategic territory of Siberia.

According to official sources, Mr. Mikoyan during the talks suggested that development of trade between the two countries should be speeded up.

The sources said Mr. Ikeda said he wanted further talks with Mr. Mikoyan, and these would take place at the Soviet Embassy in Tokyo on May 26.

The Foreign Minister, Mr. Masayoshi Ohira, told the Diet (Parliament) on May 15 that the Japanese Government hoped to promote cultural and economic exchange with the Soviet Union for peace and security in the Far East.

B. Plan For Asian Development Bank: The Ministry for International Trade and Industry has drafted a plan for the establishment of an Asian Development Bank.

The draft plan envisages extending of loans to projects which should be of value to the economic and industrial progress of the Asian region. This includes industrial, transportation, communications and riparian development projects.

The Government has approved in principle the establishment of the Bank, which is in line with its policy at the UN Conference on Trade and Development in Geneva.

The proposed Bank will also finance technical aid for mapping out development plans, and loans for emergency import of goods that may be needed for stabilization of the people's livelihood.

The membership of the projected Bank would also be open to countries not belonging to the UN Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (ECAFE).

The Bank's capital would be increased to $1,000 million in five years after its inauguration.

The Foreign Minister, Mr. Masayoshi Ohira, told a conference of Japanese diplomats in Tokyo on June 2 that Japan hoped to set up a frame-work for an economic aid programme to the Pacific Asian area.

A spokesman for the conference said Mr. Ohira explained the Government's desire to participate in the economic development of South-East Asia.

He said at present South-East Asian countries had only a limited number of exports which were of interest to Japan. But as Japan's agricultural scene was now undergoing a change, her imports of South-East Asian primary products were expected to increase.

C. Chinese Trade Liaison Mission: The Government has agreed to the functioning of five Communist Chinese officials in Tokyo as a trade liaison mission without any guarantee from China that these officials would not engage in political activities.

Originally, the Government had asked for such a guarantee but as Peking was not willing, Japan agreed to the opening of the trade liaison office with a guarantee of good conduct from the Japan-China Trade Council, a private Japanese institution.

Observers pointed out that any such guarantee by a private Japanese institution to the Japanese Government could not be held binding on the Chinese liaison officials. In other words, they would be in a position to function in Tokyo as other foreign diplomats, even though Japan has not recognized China and has no diplomatic relations with it.

JORDAN

A. Palestine National Conference: Inaugurating the Palestine National Conference in Jerusalem (Jordan sector) on May 29, King Hussein said: "The eyes of millions of people are on you today as you plan your first steps along the road of a new and valiant struggle. The hearts of millions of the sons of your nations are with you, filled with love for you and determined to take unified action to recover the usurped homeland."

He said that there could be no life, freedom, union, or prestige for the Arabs except with Palestine. He would be honoured to give his "life and his blood so Palestine might return as it was—Arab, free, and dignified".

The Conference was attended by Mr. Hussein Ben Nasser, the Jordanian Prime Minister, the Ministers, the Arab League Secretary-General, Mr. Abdul Khalek Hassouna, Mr. Ahmed el Shukairy, the Representative of Palestine at the Arab League and Chairman of the Conference representatives of the Arab Kings and Presidents. In all, there were 242 representatives from Jordan and 146 from Syria, Lebanon, the Gaza Strip, Qatar, Kuwait and Iraq.

Mr. Abdul Khalek Hassouna followed King Hussein in addressing the Conference.

He described the meeting as an historical milestone in the Arab struggle for the liberation of Arab Palestine, for it was a meeting of the chosen representatives of the Arab people of Palestine seeking the best means for the organization of their people and making their voice heard in the national and international spheres. As such, it foiled Zionism's attempts to obliterate the Palestinian identity after having occupied Palestine and driven out its Arab people from their sacred soil and homes.

Mr. Shukairy explained the purpose of the Conference. He said the Conference was to create a "Palestine entity," which would organize the Palestine people, politically, militarily and economically.

He appealed to Arab countries to assist Jordan militarily and economically. "Any such assistance will be a big contribution towards restoring Palestine, because Jordan is a base for Palestine liberation."

The delegates repeated the following oath after Mr. Ahmed el Shukairy:

"Palestine is our homeland. Our return to it is our aim. Struggle is our way. Knowledge is our guide. Faith is our weapon. Sacrifice is our duty. Work is our Constitution. Discipline is our motto. Unity is our guide. Death does not frighten us. Palestine is ours... ours... ours. Palestine, we never forget you. Nor shall we accept any homeland but you. We pledge ourselves before God and history that we shall sacrifice our lives for the sake of the restoration of Palestine.

"Long live Palestine, and long live we ourselves, to take vengeance."

The delegates later in the day visited the front lines.

Recommendations:

The National Organization Committee of the Conference recommended on May 31 the immediate formation of a commandos organization and asked the United Arab Command to contact the Arab armies for the opening of training camps for Palestinians.

At the request of women members of the Conference, the Committee recommended that Palestinian girls be permitted to join the commandos organization.

Mr. Shukairy, Palestine's representative at the Arab League and the Chairman of the Conference, communicated the Conference's resolutions to the Arab countries as well as to the envoys of Arab Heads of State at the Follow-up Committee meeting held in Cairo on June 12.

The Charter and Regulations Committee approved the Charter submitted by Mr. Shukairy with some slight amendments. The Charter comprises 29 Articles defining the relationship between Palestine and the other Arab countries constituting the great Arab homeland, the Palestine entity, Palestinian nationality, the cause of the liberation of Palestine.

At its final meeting on June 2, the Conference recommended the establishment of a Palestine Liberation Organization to be set up by the Palestine people.

In a desire to have the people's formation capable of carrying out its task, the Conference recommended that all sectors of the Palestine people be represented on it and be prepared for the battle of restoration of Palestine by two means, a civilian formation which will consist of a people's professional formation and a military formation.

With regard to the civilian formation, the Conference recommended the establishment of committees and sub-committees in various Arab countries with a view to realizing the goals and the purpose of the establishment of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

To make the Palestinian "mobilization" comprehensive and strong, the Conference recommended that a survey be made of the abilities of the Palestine people and their man-power, and that this man-power be organized and concentrated so that it would play an effective part on a level of equality in the Arab and international fields.

The Conference appealed to all Palestinians who belong to the same profession and who are members of any Arab professional union to form one Palestinian formation which would be a member of such a union. The professional formations will be bound by the decisions taken by the Palestine Liberation Organization.

In the military field, it recommended the immediate setting up of camps for training all Palestinians of all classes, including men and women who were able to bear arms. The object is to have them prepared for the liberation battle "which will only be won in Palestine and with the force of arms".

It furthermore recommended that the number of Palestinians who joined military academies in Arab and friendly countries be increased.

It also recommended that a Palestine National Fund be established.

It recommended that a "Palestine Week" be held in Arab and Islamic countries during which such countries would collect contributions to the Fund. It was suggested that the Week be held as from May 15 of each year. For the current year, however, the Week would be held in accordance with a date to be fixed by the committee.

It also recommended that Arab countries be contacted with a view to levying taxes and dues on certain goods and products for the benefit of the Fund.

It approved of the recommendations made by its Political Committee which stated that the creation of Israel is considered as an imperialistic Zionist aggression contradicting the principles of the UN Charter; and that the creation of Israel by imperialism was aimed at dividing the Arab world, preventing its unification and wasting its energies so that its wealth could be exploited. "Hence the existence of Israel in this part of the Arab nation constitutes a direct menace to the entity of this nation and to world peace."

The recommendations made by the Political Committee stated that the Palestine people had the right to struggle for the liberation of their usurped homeland using all means and supported by Arab countries as well as peace-loving peoples.

The Conference hailed the UAR-Iraq Unity Agreement and regarded it as a step towards the realization of Arab unity and the liberation of Palestine.

It furthermore called for publicising the Palestine cause in all fields, including the home and foreign fields, by various methods; and for directing the Arab economy towards serving Arab interests, especially the Palestine problem.

It urged the Arab countries to adopt a unified economic and political attitude towards certain countries which support Israel, especially the member-States of the European Common Market, and at the same time, to develop economic co-operation among Arab countries and between these countries and the countries which support . goals of the Arab nation.

It also urged Arab countries to tighten the economic boycott imposed on Israel and to put an end to the infiltration of Israel into the developing countries.

It called for strengthening the ties of amity and brotherhood among the Arab and Islamic peoples and creating an awareness of the Palestine problem among them so that they would be able to combat the effect of Zionism and Zionist propaganda.

It also called for co-operation with the Afro-Asian countries, friendly and socialist countries and all peace-loving Powers.

Insofar as the Palestinian entity was concerned, the Conference's political recommendations emphasized the importance of having this entity represented in all the organizations of the Arab League and in Arab and international spheres.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It denounced the attitude of the imperialistic countries, foremost among which were Britain and USA, towards Arab problems in general and the Palestine problem in particular.

On the other hand, it recorded the honourable attitude of the socialist countries, especially China and USSR, towards such problems.

The Conference hailed the Arab "Summit" Conference and the efforts it made towards the purification of the Arab atmosphere and the support of Arab problems, foremost among which was the Palestine problem. It requested the Arab Unified Military Command to hasten to assume its jurisdiction and to train the Palestinians militarily so that they could be in the vanguard of the Army to liberate usurped Palestine.

Insofar as the diversion of the course of River Jordan was concerned, it recommended that a firm and radical attitude be adopted aimed at combating the Zionist expansionist aggression lying behind Israel's attempt to divert this River's course. It also recommended that the policy of racial discrimination followed by Israel in the occupied part of Palestine be exposed and the fact that such a policy did not accord with the principles of human rights be emphasized.

National Charter Proclaimed:

The Conference at its closing session also proclaimed the Palestine National Charter.

The 29 Articles in the Charter stated that Palestine was an Arab country; the Palestine people had the right of self-determination; Jews of Palestinian origin were to be regarded as Palestinians, provided they were willing to abide peacefully and loyally in Palestine; Palestinians would have three mottoes—national unity, national mobilization, and liberation; the Palestine people believed in Arab unity; the liberation of Palestine was a national mission to be shouldered by the entire Arab nation. Governments and peoples alike; therefore, the Arab nation had to mobilize all its military, material and spiritual energies for the liberation of Palestine and to offer every support and every possible aid to the Arab people of Palestine so that they may play their part in the liberation of their homeland; from the international point of view, the liberation of Palestine was a defensive action according to the UN Charter.

The Balfour Declaration and the Mandate Document were also to be regarded illegal; Zionism was an imperialist movement in origin; the Palestine people believed in peaceful co-existence.

KOREA (South)

A. Cabinet Changes: The Prime Minister, Mr. Mo Sun Choi announced on May 9 that his Cabinet had resigned en bloc.

The President, Mr. Park Chung Hee, named the Foreign Minister, Mr. Chung Ilk Won, as the new Prime Minister.

Mr. Chung, (47) was Foreign Minister in Mr. Choi's "non-partisan" Cabinet which resigned following pressure by the ruling Democratic Republican Party for a reorganization to include more Democratic Republicans.

On June 6, altogether 14 members of the ruling executive committee of the Democratic Party tendered their resignations en bloc to President Park.

The resignations came in the wake of the removal of Chairman Kim Chongpil of the Party.

Meanwhile, Mr. Kim told a news conference that he had resigned the party chairmanship assuming full responsibilities for all the trouble that had been created up to the moment of the Martial Law proclamation.

He offered an apology to the nation for the trouble he had created. But he emphasized that he would remain as a plain party member.

Anti-Government Demonstrations:

President Park proclaimed Martial Law over the entire Seoul area on June 3 in a drastic move to forestall university students' mounting attack on the Government.

The proclamation followed day-long street demonstrations by 10,000 students, which ended in a near-riot.

Gen. Min Kishik, Army Chief of the Staff, was appointed Martial Law commander.

He issued a decree banning all indoor and outdoor assemblies, imposing Press censorship, closing all educational institutions in Seoul from the university to the primary school level, and extending the curfew—which had been effective from midnight to 4.00 a.m.—from 9.00 p.m. to 4.00 a.m.

The decree said that violators would be arrested and imprisoned without court warrants.

The proclamation was made against the advice of the US Government.

President Park, faced with the severest crisis since he became President six months ago, said that the proclamation of Martial Law was unavoidable in view of the worsening student demonstrations.

The trouble began on March 24 when students staged their first demonstration against what they termed the Korean Government's "humiliating dealings" in attempting to normalize relations with Japan.

However, soon afterwards, the student protest took the expression of discontent with "current economic difficulties" and what was described as "rampant corruption in the Government."

Immediately after the proclamation of Martial Law, paratroopers broke up a sit-down demonstration by 1,500 students in front of the Capital building.

President Park said in a statement that he would allow political activity and the legislative work of the National Assembly to continue under Martial Law.

A spokesman for the Government, Mr. Suk Chan Noh, said Martial Law covered only Seoul.

There were reports of smaller clashes in three other cities—Suwon, south of Seoul and Teajon and Chongju in central Korea.

The US Ambassador, Mr. Samuel Berger, and the UN Commander, Gen. Hamilton H. Howze, summoned by the President for talks, had to fly to his official residence by helicopter because students had blocked the road.

The Opposition Democratic Party called on President Park to resign to pave the way for a new General Election.

Both the student demonstrations aimed at toppling the Government of President Park Chung Hee and the "emergency Martial Law" were in a way two sides of the same coin—an attempt to save the rapidly-deteriorating economic and political situation.

Ironically, neither the Government nor the students were aware of the measures to be taken next. While the Government was solely engaged in suppressing student mobs with military force without giving any indication of the measures to be taken after the violence subsides, the students were equally unprepared even to think of the steps they proposed to take after their success or failure in overthrowing the Government.

KUWAIT

A. Budget For 1964-65: Introducing the Budget for 1964-65 in the National Assembly on May 26, the Minister of Finance and Industry, Sheikh Jaber Al-Ahmed Al-Jaber Al-Sabah, said that total revenues for the financial year 1964-65 were estimated at KD205,000,000 (Kuwait Dinar = £)—an increase of KD9,000-000 over the previous year's figure of KD196,000,000.

Expenditure in the ordinary Budget was put at KD120,000,000—an increase of KD12,000,000 over the previous year's figure.

Sheikh Al-Sabah said that the Government had adopted economic planning policies "to some extent" in order to increase the country's revenue and to overcome some shortcomings in the private sector.

A comprehensive survey of mineral resources and their exploitation is to be undertaken with a view to increasing State revenue. Oil production accounts for 93.3 per cent of such revenue and the Government is to exert all possible efforts to develop the country's enormous potential as one of the foremost oil producing areas of the world.

He showed concern at the decline in the country's general reserve and at the trade recession which began last Autumn.

Reviewing Kuwait's economy, he said that in 1959 national income was estimated by the World Bank at KD296 million, and in 1962-63 at KD370 million—an average rise of 8 per cent a year. The country's per capita income is one of the highest in the world at KD1,000.

As far as the comparative distribution of national income is concerned, the public sector of the economy has registered a greater increase in consumption than the private sector since 1959. The relevant figures are: 1959—public sector KD62 million, private sector KD101 million; 1962-63—public sector KD93 million, private sector KD107 million. The positions are reversed, however, for national savings, the public sector accounting for 39.8 per cent (KD53 million in 1959 compared with 60.2 per cent (KD80 million) for the private sector, whereas in 1962-63 the figures were 36.5 per cent (KD62 million) and 63.5 per cent (KD108 million) respectively. About 45 per cent of total income is now "saved," but a large part of this money, particularly in the private sector, is deposited in Kuwaitl or foreign banks instead of being used to buy capital assets, such as industrial plant. During the 1962-63 financial year (which runs from April 1), national savings represented KD170 million out of a national income of KD370 million; the private sector used KD73 million for monetary investment and KD35 million in capital expenditure, while the public sector used KD35 million for monetary savings and KD27 million in capital expenditure.

In order, therefore, to promote national investment in fixed capital assets such as industrial plant and to develop the country's resources to maximize national income, a certain measure of economic planning is to be introduced. Development projects are to be spread over a long period in order to ensure continuous economic growth and the private sector is to be strengthened by large-scale Government participation in the capital of certain projects. Investment of the State's general reserve is to be stepped up through the medium of first-class stocks and bonds and short and medium-term loans with good interest rates and projects for which thorough studies have been made. Exhaustive surveys of the country's mineral resources and fishing grounds are to be made and surplus natural gas is to be utilized wherever possible for industrial development. The establishment of highly-automated industries requiring few workers is to be encouraged and a special survey is to be made of Arab markets.

Turning to sources of income, oil represents 93.3 per cent of total Government revenue; nevertheless, considering its importance to Kuwait, the Government is endeavouring to obtain better terms for the oil companies and is also campaigning, through the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) for the stabilisation of world oil prices.

Kuwait's monetary reserves now amount to about KD162.2 million, apart from current commitments which total KD129.2 million and comprise: KD73 million representing the balance of the capital of the Kuwaiti Fund for Arab Economic Development; KD9,746,000 representing the balance of the capital of Kuwait Airways; KD15,456,000 representing the balance of Kuwait's share in international organizations; KD25 million loan to UAR; KD5 million loan to Jordan; and KD1 million representing the balance of the loan to Beirut municipality. In addition, the Government has already paid out KD95.6 million from the State's general reserve, as follows: KD27 million towards the capital of the Kuwait Fund for Arab Economic Development; KD7.5 million for the capital of the Credit Bank; KD10 million loan to Algeria; KD30 million loan to Iraq; KD6,253,000 towards the capital of Kuwait Airways; KD6,047,000 for Kuwait's share in international organizations; KD3 million loan for the preservation of the Abu Simbel temples; KD4 million loan to Beirut municipality; KD300,000 loan to Dubai and KD1 million to Jordan.

On the recommendation of the World Bank and the Investment Advisory Board the general reserve is to be strengthened and, with this in view, 6.3 per cent of the total estimated revenue of KD205 million in the draft budget for 1964-65 is to be set aside for reserves. It must be remembered that this general reserve is the mainstay of Kuwait's financial position in the world community and that it would provide backing for the Kuwaiti dinar in the event of a break with sterling. A draft law is to be submitted to the National Assembly fixing the annual allocation for the general reserve in future at not less than 10 per cent of State revenue. Government policy as far as investment is concerned is to maintain a high liquidity ratio, to avoid concentrating investments in any one place (at present they are spread over Kuwait, the UK, USA, Switzerland, Germany, Austria, France, Italy, UAR, India, Algeria, Japan, Lebanon and Jordan), to avoid dependence on one form of investment and to reinvest funds in projects which would yield a higher return by direct participation in major projects. No new taxes are envisaged by the Government, the present income-tax law applying exclusively to foreign companies operating in Kuwait of which there were 28 in the fiscal year 1962-63. Eleven of these were oil companies who paid a total of KD118,350,619 in income-tax during 1962-63, the remaining 17 companies contributing KD321,409. The only tax levied on the local economy is a 4 per cent ad valorem duty on imports.

Bank notes and coins in circulation increased by 17 per cent during 1962-63 to KD35 million—an average of KD100 per inhabitant, with gold backing valued at KD18,493,109 (52 per cent). Foreign exchange holdings stood at KD17,815,125 comprising treasury bills worth KD14,582,755, foreign Government bonds worth KD3,033,327 and cash in hand worth KD200,123.

The continuous rise in Government spending, construction projects by the private sector, the increase in population and the rise in incomes have led to an increase in imports from KD30 million in 1954 to KD120 million in 1963. In the same period exports rose from KD2 million to KD11.5 million. Since September, 1963 there has been a decided recession in some sectors of business activity and a committee, headed by the Minister of Finance and Industry, has been set up to establish its cause.

Meanwhile, certain measures to stimulate the economy are to be introduced, including the allocation of KD15 million to enable workers to buy their own houses, KD30 million for the acquisition of land and real estate for development projects and the suspension for six months of licences for new commercial enterprises except to self-employed persons. As the amount of KD45 million needed for these measures amounts to KD20 million more than was estimated in the draft budget for the current year, the deficit will be met from the general reserve.

Finally, Sheikh Al-Sabah said that Kuwait's loans to other Arab States, both from the general reserve and from the KFAED over the past five years amounted to KD120.3 million. Of this sum, KD53,834,609 had been paid out by the end of April, 1964.

LAOS

A. New Military Moves By Pathet Lao: The situation in Laos became critical in the second week of May following new military moves by Pathet Lao forces.

The Pathet Lao forces occupied the Neutralist headquarters in the Plain of Jars. The situation first remained confused with the rival factions making allegations and counter-allegations. Attempts to patch up the coalition Government, headed by the Neutralist leader, Prince Souvanna Phouma, were frustrated by the fighting. Earlier, he had announced a merger of the Rightist and the Neutralist forces in the face of strong opposition by the Pathet Lao leader, Prince Souphanouvong.

On May 20, the last Neutralist position at Xieng Khouang fell to Pathet Lao forces. The Premier said that the Pathet Lao forces had, with North Viet-Namese support, launched a massive offensive.

The worsening situation in the Kingdom set off a series of diplomatic moves in Washington, London, Moscow, New Delhi and Peking.

Britain asked China to use its influence to dissuade the Pathet Lao from continuing the offensive.

Prince Souvanna Phouma on May 16 asked Britain and the Soviet Union as co-Chairmen of the 1962 Laos Conference to do what they could to stop the fighting in Laos.

The US Secretary of State, Mr. Dean Rusk called on the Soviet Ambassador, Mr. Anatoly Dobrynin, and a British Embassy Minister, Mr. Denis Greenhill, on May 17 to discuss the new outbreak of fighting in Laos.

Mr. Rusk appealed to Russia and Britain —co-Chairmen of the Geneva Conference on Laos—to do everything possible to stop the fighting.

Mr. Dobrynin was called to the extraordinary conference after Mr. Rusk had conferred with the British representative earlier. In the course of the afternoon and early evening, Mr. Rusk also conferred with representatives of India, Canada and Poland—the three countries which make up the International Control Commission for Laos.

Mr. Rusk also conferred separately with representatives of other member-nations of the South-East Asia Treaty Organization. Apart from Britain, these Governments are France, Australia, New Zealand, Pakistan, Thailand and the Philippines.

Polish Decision:

The Polish news agency announced on May 20 that the Polish Foreign Minister had informed the Ambassadors of Britain, USSR, India and Canada in Warsaw that the Polish representative on the International Truce Supervisory Commission had been recalled for discussions on "the possibilities of future activities by the Commission itself and Poland's future participation in the Commission's work."

It added that in the meantime the Polish representative's deputy on the Commission would take no part in the Commission's work until further notice.

The Polish decision was taken in view of the "provocation" against the Polish delegation at Vientiane on May 17 and 18 when Laotian units tried to beslege the Polish delegation.

It added: "This action proves that Prince Souvanna Phouma is no longer in a position to oppose the military junta."

Chinese Proposal:

China proposed on May 26 the reconvening of the 1962 Geneva Conference on Laos in Pnom Penh in June.

The proposal was made in a message from Marshal Chen Yi, Foreign Minister to the Chairmen of the Conference and the countries which took part in it.

In the message, Marshal Chen Yi said the situation was becoming "increasingly grave." He accused USA of using the Laotian Rightists to hold the Premier, Prince Souvanna Phouma, "under duress."

He said US reconnaissance flights over Laos were the first step to armed intervention. USA and its followers had intensified their attacks against Cambodia and were plotting to extend the war in South Viet-Nam. The peace and security of all Indo-China were "seriously endangered."

He said his Government hoped that the co-Chairmen of the Geneva Conference would convene a meeting of the three groups in Laos to form a delegation to attend the Conference.

Earlier, Marshal Chen Yi handed to Mr. Terence Garvey, British Charge d'Affaires, a reply to Britain's appeal to influence the Pathet Lao to halt its attacks in central Laos.

The reply, quoted by the New China news agency, said Britain had "misrepresented the rising of the neutralist troops" as an attack by the Pathet Lao.

It said the Chinese Government had, therefore, to refuse Britain's request.

It added that, "far from performing its duty, the British Government has echoed the United States in using the rising of the Laotian neutralist troops as a pretext for falsely accusing the Pathet Lao, and openly supported the dispatch by the US of its aircraft for direct aggression in Laos."

British Appeal:

Britain asked Russia on May 29 to join her in halting the fighting in Laos.

The British Government's appeal was contained in a message delivered to the Soviet Foreign Ministry in Moscow.

The British Government proposed that the Russians join in sending the following message to the 14 Governments which took part in the 1962 Geneva Conference:

It said: "The co-Chairmen of the Geneva Conference on the settlement of the Laotian question have received a message dated May 16 from Prince Souvanna Phouma, the Prime Minister of Laos, informing them of attacks launched that morning against the neutralist forces on the Plain of Jars by the Pathet Lao and Viet-Minh forces.

"The co-Chairmen express their grave concern at the situation caused by these unwarranted attacks, which are still continuing, in flagrant violation of the Geneva Agreement.

"The co-Chairmen decisively condemn these attacks which are causing untold suffering to thousands of innocent citizens of Laos and call upon Pathet Lao and their foreign supporters to put an end to these acts of aggression at once.

"The co-Chairmen further call upon Pathet Lao to withdraw their forces to their original positions on the Plain of Jars prior to launching their attacks on May 16.

"The co-Chairmen note that these acts of aggression by the Pathet Lao and North Viet-Namese forces, which are creating further obstacles for a peaceful settlement in Laos, are aggravating the situation not only in this country but also in the whole area of South-East Asia.

"By pursuing this dangerous path of open violation of the Geneva Agreements, Pathet Lao and the North Viet-Namese authorities must bear the responsibility for any resulting break-down in the peace and security of the area.

"The co-Chairmen therefore call on the Pathet Lao and the North Viet-Namese authorities to join the Governments of all the countries which participated in the Geneva Agreements to respect the sovereignty and neutrality of Laos and to desist from actions which could lead to a break-down of the Geneva settlement and the renewal of civil war in Laos."

Hopes for international talks on Laos getting started in Vientiane fell on May 30 after France rejected a British proposal to that effect.

France in a letter to Prince Souvanna Phouma said it was doubtful whether the 14 nations which signed the Geneva Agreement would attend the consultations.

It said the only practical way was to reconvene the 1962 Geneva Conference on Laos. The Conference should seek an effective cease-fire agreement, define the powers of the International Control Commission, prepare conditions for a coalition government to work properly, unify the armed forces and re-examine and strengthen the terms of the previous Geneva Agreement.

Sources close to Prince Souvanna said he would not attend any conference or consultations on Laos unless all the 14 nations were represented.

The United States, Thailand and South Viet-Nam had agreed to a British proposal for talks in Vientiane.

The sources said Prince Souvanna at the moment believed that consultations would be useless if all the signatory nations did not attend.

They said Prince Souvanna Phouma had rejected the Polish proposal for talks among Britain, Russia, India, Canada, Poland and representatives of the three Laotian factions because it excluded some nations.

The sources were inclined to tone down the significance of recent Pathet Lao statements that they no longer recognized Prince Souvanna as the Prime Minister. They noted that the Pathet Lao had made similar statements in the past.

The sources said that if the various proposals for international talks on Laos did not materialise, the problem might still be thrown into the hands of the UN Secretary-General, U Thant.

China also rejected Britain's proposal for Ambassadorial consultations in Vientiane on the Laotian situation.

It said Mr. Terence Garvey, British Charge d'Affaires in Peking, was called to the Foreign Ministry and told that the convocation of a Foreign Ministers' meeting of the 14 Geneva Powers was the only practical step to save the situation.

The Chinese reply said the purpose of Britain's proposal "is obviously to absolve the United States of its responsibility for violating the Geneva Agreements and impose the will of one group in Laos on another. This measure in our view will not help ease the situation in Laos but only aggravate it."

In the last week of May, Vientiane announced appointments to take over the Ministry of Economic Planning, formerly held by Prince Souphanouvong, and the Ministry of Information, formerly headed by Gen. Phoumi Vong Vichit.

Pathet Lao Withdraw Recognition Of Prince Souvanna Phouma As Premier:

The Pathet Lao announced on June 1 that it no longer recognized neutralist Prince Souvanna Phouma as Premier.

Prince Souphanouvong, the Pathet Lao chief, demanded a safe conduct for Pathet Lao officials still in Vientiane to communist headquarters in Khang Khay "so to avoid the harm that may come to them."

He cabled Prince Souvanna Phouma, "strongly protesting" against the elimination of his pro-communist Neo Lao Haksat Party (political wing of Pathet Lao) from the coalition Government.

The cable said the ousting of the Neo Lao Haksat from the coalition Government violated the Zurich and Plain of Jars Agreements "and particularly the principle of unanimity of the three factions."

Prince Souphanouvong also had talks with Western officials. He re-iterated the demand for the neutralization of Luang Prabang as a prerequisite for any Laotian summit talks there.

The French and Indian Ambassadors, Mr. Pierre Willet and Mr. Bikram Shah, and a British Embassy official flew to the Pathet Lao headquarters at Khang Khay to discuss various proposals to settle the Laotian crisis.

The French Ambassador, who had conferred with Prince Souphanouvong, told newsmen later that the Prince favoured a 14-Power conference on Laos but that a number of local problems should be settled first and that a new meeting of the representatives of the three political wings in Laos under conditions of appropriate security should be held prior to the international conference.

Prince Souphanouvong said such a meeting would be aimed at re-activizing a genuine tripartite central government and at appointing a tripartite delegation to the international conference.

Later, in letters to Britain and Russia—co-Chairmen of the 1962 Geneva Conference making Laos neutral—Prince Souphanouvong asked neutralist and Rightwing leaders to reply to his summit proposal. He claimed the recent fighting on the Plain of Jars was provoked by neutralist troops disgruntled over the Rightwing coup in Vientiane in April, 1963 and the merger between neutralists and Rightists.

He refused to recognize Prince Souvanna Phouma as Prime Minister, alleging that he was under Rightist pressure.

In a letter dated June 1, Prince Souphanouvong asked the International Control Commission to investigate alleged US violations of the Geneva Agreement, including the introduction of arms and jet planes to Laos.

Prince Souvanna Phouma said on June 3 that he was willing to meet Prince Souphanouvong without preconditions in Luang Prabang, the royal capital. But he did not consider such a meeting necessary before another Geneva Conference on Laos.

He said Laotian Air Force T-28 fighter bombers would continue bombing the Pathet Lao forces as long as the military situation required it. On a Polish proposal for talks among Britain, Russia, Canada, India, Poland and representatives of three Laotian factions Prince Souvanna Phouma said it was interesting, but he preferred to await Soviet reaction before replying to Poland.

MALAYSIA

A. New Cabinet Personnel: The new Malaysian Cabinet formed after the Government's victory in the General Elections was announced on May 3.

The Cabinet has been increased from 13 to 16 members and there are six Assistant Ministers instead of four. The newcomers were sworn-in on May 3. Almost all the Ministers have retained their portfolios.

The Ministers of the Interior and Internal Security have been merged, and will be known as the Ministry of Home Affairs. Four new Ministries have been created—Culture, Youth and Sports; Lands and Mines; Welfare Services; and Local Government and Housing.

Tengku Abdul Rehman, the Prime Minister, has retained the External Affairs portfolio because of Indonesia's threat to Malaysia, but has relinquished the Ministries of Information and Justice. However, he has taken over the responsibility for Culture, Youth and Sports because, he said jokingly later, "no other Minister loved sports". The Tengku is President of the Malaysian Football Association, plays golf and is fond of horses and racing.

The new Cabinet is as follows:

Prime Minister, External Affairs, Culture, Youth and Sports—Tengku Abdul Rehman;

Deputy Prime Minister, Defence, National and Rural Development, Lands and Mines—Tun Abdul Razak;

Home Affairs and Justice—Dato Ismail;

Finance—Mr. Tan Siew Sin;

Works, Posts and Communications—Dato V. T. Sabanthan;

B. Parliament Session Opened: The new Parliament was formally opened on May 19 by the Yang di-Pertuan Agong.

In his address, Yang di-Pertuan Agong said that the people of the confederation formed in September, 1963 were living in critical times because Indonesia had followed up her policy of confrontation by open aggression.

He announced plans for large-scale expansion of the Malaysian armed forces during the current year. He said that by the end of 1964 the Army would be double the strength it had been at the end of 1960.

For the Navy, a frigate, four more patrol craft, and a landing craft would be commissioned this year.

He said the militia had been expanded into an effective military reserve and there would be a call-out of territorials when it was considered necessary for the defence and security of Malaysia.

In an appendix to the royal address it was stated that the Central Government recognized with deep gratitude the defence aid and military assistance given by Britain, Australia and New Zealand. Confrontation was a result of the expansionist policy of Indonesia which hoped to overthrow the present Malaysian Government and set up a pro-Indonesian Cabinet to form a greater Indonesia.

The appendix said that Indonesia was being actively supported by its own communist party, the communist terrorists on the Malayan-Thailand border and the clandestine communist organization in Sarawak. It was most likely that Indonesia would increase the militant attack on Sabah and Sarawak and also send more infiltrators and saboteurs into Malaya and Singapore. It was hoped that Malaysians would continue to remain calm but vigilant and continue to cooperate with the authorities.

Security operations had continued against the communist terrorists in north Malaya and it was intended to negotiate an agreement with the Thailand Government on border arrangements and cooperation. The Government was determined to stamp out communist terrorism and subversion.

He added: "Nor do I entertain any doubt that friendship and good relations subsisting between Nepal and India will grow progressively stronger on the basis of equality and in keeping with our respective national policies."

Budget Speech:

Presenting the Budget, Mr. Shoaib said:

"The Budget this year will be significant for more than one reason. It will be the last Budget submitted to the present House. It will also mark the end of the Second Plan and lay the foundations of the Third. It should thus consolidate the economic and financial achievements of the country and pave the way for further the steps on the road of all-round advancement.

"The Basic Democracies have proved their suitability to the genius of our people. A new and healthy activity is taking shape around the principle of collective self-help and local responsibility.

"The works programme, which is very largely carried out by the Basic Democracies, is already making a visible impact on the rural economy. The Basic Democracies have won recognition as an institution and are already an indispensable part of our social fabric.

"In the international sphere, our policy of goodwill and friendship towards all nations, particularly those who are our neighbours, has paid dividends. An atmosphere of confidence and co-operation has been re-established with Afghanistan. The demarcation of our boundary with China is proceeding apace.

"Our relations with India have not in the past been what we would have liked them to be. We have seen from the communique recently issued in Washington and New Delhi that further massive military assistance has been promised to India. This will clearly jeopardize our security, aggravate our problems and make our task harder.

"Pandit Nehru's death has grieved us deeply. We share India's sorrow. We have once again extended a hand of friendship to India. The struggle of the people of Kashmir is the major irritant in our relations, and we sincerely hope that Sheikh Abdullah's efforts to find a solution to this problem will bear fruit.

"The fate of the Muslim minority in India is also of great concern to us and through the efforts of the two Home Ministers and otherwise, we are making every endeavour to assure the security and welfare of the minorities in both the countries. This is a human problem and its resolution is of paramount importance for the future well-being of this subcontinent.

"I would also like to refer briefly to a related question. The eviction of Muslims from India has created a serious problem for us. So far about 3,50,000 displaced persons have crossed the border to East Pakistan from Assam, Tripura and West Bengal. The Central Government has given substantial grants during the last two financial years for their relief and rehabilitation. The influx, however, continues unabated and the problem calls for very grave attention all round.

"In the economic sphere we can look back with a sense of satisfaction and pride to the remarkable progress made since 1958 in the acceleration of the growth rates, in the introduction of progressive structural changes in the economy, in the mobilization of additional domestic resources, in the improvement of the export performance, and indeed, in all sectors of the economy.

"We have laid the foundation of a sound economic base and are now ready for embarking on the Third Plan. The success of the Second Plan is in no small measure due to the inspired leadership and the political stability provided by the present regime.

"But it would be wise—and a true measure of the achievement of the nation—to look at the picture of 1958 and, then, at the one I can now present to the country. In 1958, prices were rising rapidly, economic growth hardly kept up with population growth, and the performance under the First Plan was substantially behind the relatively low targets. Deficit financing had resulted in inflation, exports were declining, a balance of payments crisis was imminent, and the confidence of the world in Pakistan was jeopardized by the country's failure to deal with its problems.

"There is now every reason to assume that the Second Plan target of growth will not only be attained but may be exceeded.

"Production in the manufacturing side of industry has increased by about 11 per cent a year since the beginning of the Second Plan. Industry has gradually assumed an important role not only in its contribution to the national income and employment but also in relation to the export and import substitution efforts of the country.

"Both industry and agriculture have been responsible for the substantial improvement in our export performance which has taken place since 1960. There has been, so far, an average annual increase in foreign exchange receipts of over 7 per cent a year which is more than three times the rate expected when the Second Plan was framed. Our total foreign exchange earnings which amounted to Rs. 241 crores in 1961-62 rose to Rs. 278 crores in 1962-63, mainly due to an increase in the export of cotton. Thus, the Second Plan target for 1964-65 was actually exceeded 2 years in advance, through the successful operation of the Export Bonus Scheme on the one hand and through encouraging increases in production of agricultural cash crops on the other.

"One of the most satisfying achievements has been our success in restoring and maintaining monetary stability after the inflation of the Pre-Revolution Fifties. In 1959-60 the Government imposed price controls and reduced deficit financing to nominal amounts while continuing to provide new incentives for increased production. The excess liquidity was thus absorbed in physical growth.

"Money supply which registered an increase of Rs. 88 crores during 1962-63 further rose by another Rs. 87 crores during the first nine months of the current financial year. The main expansionary influence was the rise in bank credit in the private sector. The banking sector had to respond to the tempo of development of the economy by providing for the diverse and increasing financial requirements of imports, and the industrial and agricultural sectors.

"One of the crucial problems that face us is the high rate of population growth, which nullifies part of our effort to improve the standard of living of our society, which is after all the chief objective of economic development, investment, and planning. I wish to draw the attention of the House to this fact, and I believe the House will agree that a greater effort will have to be made now and in the future to encourage the voluntary limitation of families and to do everything possible to create a greater consciousness of this important issue among our people. We have to try and take particular care of this problem from now on and through the Third Plan.

"I would now like to say something about the dimensions, which are being currently fixed for the Third Plan and for the perspective Plan covering the period up to 1965. We are talking in terms of nearly Rs. 5,000 crores for the Third Plan. This reflects both the enormous size of the requirements and the growing confidence flowing from the performance under the Second Plan. The details are presently being worked out under the orders of the National Economic Council and I expect the revised guidelines of the Third Plan to be issued shortly. The main objective of the Plan will be to increase national income by 30 per cent. The perspective Plan on which the Planning Commission is also now working aims at tripling the national income by 1985 and doubling the income per head in the same period.

"A major objective of the Third Plan will be to consolidate the infra-structure built up during the earlier Plan periods, particularly in East Pakistan. Certain departures will be made from the previous pattern of allocation. Higher priorities will be given to basic industries, technical education, transport and health. A number of studies have been taken in hand in the economic and technical spheres to provide the basis for the detailed framework of the Plan."

Defence Expenditure:

Pakistan's defence expenditure during 1964-65 will total Rs. 129.65 crores, which is 46.5 per cent of the estimated revenue expenditure of Rs. 278.56 crores and 43.5 per cent of the estimated revenue receipts of Rs. 297.37 crores.

Tax Proposals:

Mr. Shoaib made the following Budget proposals:

Corporate taxation: 5 per cent tax relief has been allowed to all industrial companies with a total income up to Rs. 50,000.

Tax holiday: The tax holiday, which was to expire on June 30, 1965 has been extended up to June 30, 1970. The exemption will be admissible for 2, 4 and 6 years in West Pakistan and 4 and 6 years in East Pakistan as against the present limit of 4, 6 and 8 years in West Pakistan and 6 and 8 years in East Pakistan.

Apart from industries based on indigenous raw material the following industries will qualify for tax holiday:

Drugs and pharmaceuticals (basic manufacture), fertilizers, insecticides and pesticides (basic manufacture), petrochemicals, wires and cables, agricultural machinery, boilers and compressors, tractors, machine tools and manufacture of other capital equipment, manufacture of trucks, cars, scooters and auto-rickshaws and bicycles, shipbuilding and repair, diesel engines and I.C. engines, textile machinery, including manufacture of looms and spindles, selected mineral production (coal, chromite), refractories, manufacture of radio components, ceramic and sanitary-wares, livestock feed, gas and electric appliances, gas and electric meters and water meters, canning and preservation of food, canning and processing of fish, components of above, footwear and leather goods, tanning and curing of leather, surgical instruments, sports goods, cutlery, carpets, other units which export at least 30 per cent of their production, poultry and dairy farming, and other industries notified later on.

Mining industry: The industry will get 10 per cent rebate in addition to the existing concessions (e.g., tax holiday, current expensing of capital expenditure, depletion allowances etc.)

Tax rebate: The rebate of 15 per cent will be allowed to Pakistani enterprises in respect of income from foreign operations remitted to Pakistan. In order to qualify as a public company, the criterion would now be that controlling shares of the company should be held by not less than 20 persons for the major part of the relevant previous year.

Personal taxation: Education allowance up to the maximum limit of Rs. 900 has been made admissible even in the case of one child or two children where expenditure in excess of the present limit of Rs. 300 per child has been incurred.

Interest on savings banks accounts: Up to Rs. 500 has been exempted. Income from small residential houses, with an annual rental value up to Rs. 6,000, and small housing estates has been extended in respect of houses and estates constructed up to the end of the Third Plan period.

Foreign technicians: Foreign technicians will enjoy exemption from tax for 3 years instead of 2 years.

Wealth tax: Wealth tax has been withdrawn from private companies and the rate of tax for individuals has been raised from 1½ to 2 per cent on the slab of net wealth exceeding Rs. 34,00,000, subject to a maximum of 15 per cent of the total income.

Stocks will be valued on their break-up value.

Gift tax: Income from property given away as gift will not be aggregated with the other income of the donor for income-tax purposes.

Capital gains tax: Where a capital asset is disposed of within six months, the gain will be treated as income and taxed accordingly. Where it is disposed of within six months to five years, tax will be levied at the current capital gains tax rates. On capital gains arising from the sale of assets after five years, tax would be levied at half the present rates. The last concession will also be available to regular dealers and brokers in stocks and shares.

Sales-tax: The standard rate of 15 per cent will apply to imported fruit. This will help the local fruit industry. Raw cotton (exports), furniture, toys, imported tennis and other balls and ink and other stationery used by students have been exempted from sales-tax.

Rehabilitation surcharge: This will be levied at the rate of one per cent on all goods liable to sales-tax. The tax will not be levied on goods exported abroad. The proceeds will go into a special fund exclusively earmarked for refugees.

Central excises: Cotton fabrics: (1) The present ad valorem excise duty on cotton fabrics is being converted into the specific rates as follows:

(A) Fine cotton fabrics 31 paisa per square yard; (B) Medium cotton fabrics 19 paisa per square yard; (C) Coarse cotton fabrics 6 paisa per square yard.

Concessional rates are being prescribed for saris and Dhotis. Mazri remains exempt. (These are the same rates as were in force in 1962-63.)

(2) As an incentive for higher production, manufacturers of cotton fabrics will be given an option to pay a fixed amount per loom in lieu of prescribed excise duty and sales-tax on actual production.

Companies which have given the undertaking that they would convert themselves into public companies within the specified period, would not be liable to pay Wealth Tax for the year 1963-64 if they fulfil their undertaking, while those companies which did not give such an undertaking and those who do not live up to their undertaking, will be liable to Wealth Tax for the year 1963-64.

Mr. Shoaib said: "The period of tax-holiday ends on June 30, 1965. Since it takes time to plan and implement industrial schemes, I would like to announce that we propose to continue this concession during the Third Plan up to June 30, 1970. With certain modifications, from July 1, 1965, the tax-holiday period would be reduced by two years and the holiday would be admissible for two, four or six years in West Pakistan and four or six years in East Pakistan.

"Last year's Budget introduced the concept of tax rebate on income attributable to exports. However, the existing provisions do not cover those who set up business undertakings in foreign countries and remit their profits to Pakistan.

"I now propose that the foreign income of such enterprises remitted to Pakistan would be entitled to a tax rebate of 15 per cent. This concession would apply to Pakistani professional and consulting firms working abroad as well as to banks, insurance companies and other Pakistani enterprises who operate in foreign countries and remit the income from their foreign operations to Pakistan.

"The rates of personal taxation in Pakistan compare favourably with most neighbouring countries and countries in the West. However, I propose to give some further relief to the middle class tax-payers.

"At present, education allowance is admissible to tax-payers with income up to Rs. 25,000 at the rate of Rs. 300 per child, subject to a maximum of Rs. 900. It has been represented that in certain cases one child's education may cost more than Rs. 300. In order to cover such cases, I propose that an amount up to a maximum of Rs. 900 may be claimed by any tax-payer with income up to Rs. 25,000 even in respect of the education expenses of one child or two children provided he furnishes an itemised account of the expenditure incurred by him.

"Interest on Post Office Savings Bank deposits is already exempt from income-tax. I propose to allow the same exemption to interest from other Savings Banks deposits subject to a maximum of Rs. 500. Where a tax-payer receives interests from these sources in excess of Rs. 500 the first Rs. 500 would, in any case, be exempt from income-tax and not added to his other income.

"The existing tax exemption given in respect of residential houses up to an annual rental value of Rs. 6,000 and to certain types of residential estates expires on June 30, 1965. We propose to extend these concessions up to June 30, 1970.

"Foreign technicians employed by industrial undertakings in Pakistan enjoy exemption from tax for a period of two years. It often becomes necessary to continue the employment of foreign technicians for a period longer than two years. We propose to extend the tax exemption to three years.

"Under the existing law, income from assets gifted away by a tax-payer is still liable to income-tax in his hands. It is proposed that once an asset has been gifted and the appropriate amount of gift tax has been paid on it, income derived from it will be taxed in the hands of the recipient of the gift and not in the hands of the donor with effect from the year following that in which the gift was made.

"A large number of representations have been made in respect of the administration of the capital gains tax since it was introduced last year. After carefully considering these representations, I propose that where a capital asset is disposed of by a tax-payer within six months of its acquisition, the profit from such disposal should be treated as ordinary income and subjected to tax at the appropriate rate after adding it to his other income.

"I have already referred to the displacement of Muslims from India and the fact that an increasing number of displaced persons are finding shelter in Pakistan. This has entailed a very heavy expenditure on the part of the Government. We are desirous and hopeful that these evictees would be restored to their rightful homes where they belong but pending this desirable and humane solution of the problem Government have to incur expenditure on their maintenance and settlement in Pakistan.

"We have already spent a sizable amount from our existing resources, but in order to meet further expenditure on this account, I have no option but to propose a tax for rehabilitation purposes and I am sure no tax-payer will grudge this.

"The tax will be in the form of a surcharge which will be levied at the rate of 1 per cent on all goods liable to sales-tax. The proceeds of this surcharge shall not be merged with other Government revenues but would go into a special rehabilitation fund which will be used exclusively for the maintenance and rehabilitation of refugees.

"The surcharge will not be levied on goods which are exported. I expect an yield of Rs. 4 crores.

"Excise duties are at present contributing about 25 per cent of the total revenues and it is expected that with the increasing industrialization of the country, the contribution from this source will increase further in the coming year.

"However, to begin with, I am giving three concessions this year in excise duties. First, the duty on syrups, squashes and fruit juices is proposed to be withdrawn. This should enable the industry to absorb a greater amount of fresh fruits which cannot be consumed during the season and are likely to go waste or be sold at uneconomic prices.

"I also propose to withdraw the excise duty on laundry soap produced without the aid of power to give relief to the smaller manufacturer as well as to the consumer in the lower income brackets.

"The third concession aims at increasing the production of tea which has not kept pace with developments in other fields. There has been an immense increase in the consumption of tea in the country and I fear that unless appropriate steps are taken, we may be compelled to import tea from abroad in the not too distant future.

"I propose to allow a rebate of excise duty for increased production. In the case of small gardens with less than 500 acres under tea cultivation, excise duty will be levied at the rate of 50 per cent of the normal rate in respect of additional production as determined with reference to the highest production during the preceding four years.

"In the case of gardens with more than 500 acres under cultivation, duty in respect of additional production will be charged at the rate of 75 per cent of the normal rate. The new tea gardens as well as expansion of the existing gardens will, in addition, continue to be treated as industrial undertakings for tax-holiday purposes.

"The honourable members will remember that in my last Budget speech, I had announced the Government's intention to simplify excise procedures. In selected industrial centres, resident excise staff was withdrawn from factories on an experimental basis and manufacturers were permitted to clear goods at their own convenience, assess the duty themselves and enter it in their accounts. This experiment has proved to be successful and it is now intended to extend it to more industrial centres.

"I also propose making further use of the basic idea underlying this experiment, though in a slightly different manner. In the case of cotton textiles, I propose that there should be an alternative method of compounding excise duty. Standard rates can be worked out on a per loom basis for each factory after taking into account its past production. Mills that adopt this option will pay this fixed rate throughout the financial year, irrespective of changes in production.

"In such cases, sales-tax would also be merged with the excise duty. This measure will further eliminate the physical presence of revenue staff on the premises of industrial undertakings. For factories which do not exercise this option, it is proposed that the specific rates which were applicable in 1962-63 should be restored. These were 31 paisa per square yard for fine fabrics, 19 paisa for medium fabrics and six paisa for coarse fabrics. Reduced rates would continue in respect of saris and Dhotis and Mazri will continue to be free.

"A similar experiment was made last year in respect of art silk factories which had up to 20 looms and they were given the option of paying excise duty on a per loom basis. Since this experiment has also proved successful I now propose that art silk factories with up to 50 looms may also exercise the option to pay excise duty on a loomage basis.

"Similarly, Vanaspati factories may exercise the option to pay excise duty and sales-tax on the basis of capacity is being worked out and would be announced shortly. Factories which do not exercise the option will continue to pay excise duty and sales-tax at the existing rates.

"I propose to raise additional excise revenue from cigarettes, as also from tobacco. A surcharge of 25 per cent is proposed on cigarette excise duty but it will not be levied on cheaper cigarettes which fall under the three lower duty scales.

"In other words, cigarettes which now sell at up to 30 paisa for a packet of ten should not be affected by the proposed surcharge. The increase proposed in the duty on tobacco, other than cigarette tobacco, is ten paisa per lb. which would raise the total duty to 60 per lb.

"Last year tobacco stalks were totally exempted from the excise duty. It has been found that stalks are being freely mixed with tobacco, thus leading to considerable tax evasion. It is now proposed that stalks so used should be taxed at the new standard rate of 60 paisa per lb.

"At present the excise duty rates have been prescribed only for cycle tyres and tubes and no rates have been determined for motor tyres and tubes. I, therefore, propose to impose excise duty on motor tyres and tubes at the rate of 30 per cent ad valorem while the existing rates on cycle tyres and tubes would remain unchanged.

"Tyres, other than motor tyres and cycle tyres, will pay excise duty at 15 per cent.

"At present there is no excise duty on unhydrogenated edible oils. As hydrogenated oils are liable to excise duty of Rs. 7 per cwt. and the same manufacturers usually produce both types the exemption is not logical and leads to certain undesirable practices. I, therefore, propose to impose a duty of Rs. 7 per cwt. on unhydrogenated edible oils also. The new duty will not, however, apply to such oil produced without the aid of power or produced on a cottage industry basis.

"I would now turn to duties of customs. The import of Bidi leaves which are at present subject to a customs duty of 8 per cent fetches a very high margin of profit. It is intended to absorb the excess profit by raising the duty to 150 per cent.

"The most effective rate of customs duty on coaltar dyes is 15 per cent. It is proposed to raise it to the full statutory level of 25 per cent.

"Vegetable oil is presently liable to 25 per cent. Customs duty through soyabean and cotton seed oils which are imported under US AID enjoy complete exemption. I now propose to raise the existing rate to 40 per cent. The distinction between modified and unmodified oils is also being simultaneously abolished so that both will be subject to the enhanced duty of 40 per cent. On soyabean oil and cotton seed oil, a duty of 20 per cent will be levied.

"I have earlier referred to the levy of excise duty on motor tyres and tubes. I also propose to increase the Customs duty on imported tyres and tubes from 40 per cent to 50 per cent.

"As mentioned by me a little while ago, the policy of liberalization of imports will also necessitate review of Customs duties on a number of items. Part of this review has been carried out and some of the items are hardware and ironmongery other than domestic, dyeing and tanning substances, cotton yarn of higher counts, raw rubber, accumulators and batteries and wood and timber. These will be subjected to increased duties, the increase generally being from 5 to 10 per cent, though in certain cases it will be higher.

"Side by side, I have not forgotten to provide relief in duties wherever such a measure is called for. It is proposed to abolish the existing duties on food for infants and invalids and on fountain pen nibs. The benefit of these exemptions should be passed on to the consumer for whom they are intended. Similarly, to assist educational institutions and to promote scientific research, it is proposed to grant complete exemption from duty on laboratory glassware, likewise, to encourage sports and help raising the standard of our players to the international level, it is proposed to abolish customs duty on such sports goods as are not indigenously manufactured like tennis balls, squash balls etc. I also propose to reduce the existing duty of 50 per cent on toys for children to 25 per cent.

"My proposals to grant exemption from customs duty extend to the major field of exports also. Both jute and cotton which are our principal cash crops and account for the bulk of our export earnings carry export duties. Cotton is subject to sales-tax also. The levy of export duty and sales-tax tends to adversely affect the interests of the grower. Since the grower must not be denied his due share in the fruits of his labour, it has been decided to reduce the duty by 50 per cent on both cotton and jute and to completely reduce the sales-tax on the former at a sacrifice of Rs. 375,00,000 on jute and Rs. 155,00,000 on cotton. This measure, I trust, will help the grower and promote production.

"The process of tariff rationalization has also continued and this too has resulted in certain reductions of duties.

"In addition to the abolition of sales-tax on cotton, I intend to give relief from this levy to a number of other cases. I propose to remove sales-tax from locally made furniture, sport seat sticks, tennis and table tennis balls, squash and golf balls and other sports goods not manufactured within the country, writing ink, pen holders, geometry boxes, paint and colour boxes used by students and laboratory glass equipment.

"I propose to maintain the status quo in respect of sales-tax on all other items except one. Fresh imported fruit is liable to sales-tax at the concessional rate of 2-1/8 per cent. This has adversely affected indigenous fruit production. I, therefore, propose to withdraw the concessional rate on fresh imported fruit and impose the standard rate.

"Leaving aside the effect of reduction in the export duties on cotton and jute, there would be a revenue loss of Rs. 35,00,000 on account of income-tax and wealth tax, a gain of Rs. 25,00,000 from sales-tax, a gain of Rs. 4.9 crores from excise duties and a gain of Rs. 3.85 crores from import duties. The net revenue yield from additional taxation other than the rehabilitation surcharge will thus amount to Rs. 8.65 crores. Of this, the Provincial share will be Rs. 1.35 crores, leaving a balance of Rs. 7.30 crores for the Centre. This will go to narrow down the gap of Rs. 10.27 crores between the estimated expenditure and the available resources to Rs. 2.97 crores. I intend to meet the remaining gap by utilization of the cash balance to the extent of the exercise of powers to impose regulatory duties of customs and excise and sales-tax, for the assumption of which I am about to make a request, does not generate additional resources during the course of the year."

B. "Aid-Pakistan" Consortium's Commitments For Second Plan: The Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission, Mr. Said Hasan, announced in Rawalpindi on June 11 that the "Aid-Pakistan" Consortium would give $450 million for implementing the fifth year of the Second Five-Year Plan (1964-65).

Th Consortium had announced for 1963-64, the fourth year of the Plan, commitments totalling $430 million.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Mr. Said Hasan told a news conference that the most important feature of the commitment made by the pre-Consortium meeting in Washington now was that the member-countries had agreed to provide Pakistan $200 million in the form of "Commodity Aid", unrelated to projects, to give Pakistan a free hand in importing her requirements of raw material, requirements for balancing equipment and other plant and machinery according to the country's needs.

He said Pakistan had asked for a total commitment of $500 million for the fifth year of the Plan, and the figure was endorsed by the World Bank. The Consortium members agreed to provide $450 million. All countries were expected to contribute about the same, but not less, amount which they provided for the fourth year of the Plan—1963-64.

He said that with the help of $200 million worth of aid which would be unrelated to projects, Pakistan would be in a position to make full utilization of the existing capacity in industrial and other sectors, besides its other advantages. The growth rate in the GNP could be maintained between six to seven per cent with a fuller capacity utilization.

He said the World Bank had also recommended to the Consortium members that Pakistan should be given commodity aid, unrelated to projects, on a "continuous basis." The World Bank had expressed "great satisfaction" with Pakistan's progress in development and these feelings were shared by Consortium members.

Replying to questions about individual shares of the members of "Aid-Pakistan" Club he said the United States was expected to contribute around $260 million—compared to 1963-64 figure of $212 million—the World Bank would give $80 million and other countries would provide "not less than last year's share."

He said the World Bank, supported by USA had asked members of the Consortium to soften the terms of loans for Pakistan. Some of the loans by members could not be utilized so far because they were of tied nature, and as soon as Pakistan went into their market for making purchases with the loan, the prices went up. "Because of this problem," he said, "we are going to be very selective in getting loans on competitive prices even if they are of tied nature."

Commitment made by Italy, Holland and France had not so far been utilized because of stiff terms. Pakistan might use offers of loans from Belgium and Holland in 1965.

He said discussions had started in Karachi with a visiting Russian group for buying earth-moving machinery including tractors. The machinery would be purchased out of the proposed $10 million Soviet loan to Pakistan.

About the attitude of aid-giving nations, he said the World Bank, USA and the United Kingdom stood for Pakistan because they thought this country could be described as "a model for other developing nations—and a country where foreign assistance was well used." These countries thought that having brought Pakistan to her present stage of development, they wanted to take her to the stage of a self-sustaining growth.

Pakistan could make rapid progress, he said, because of the foreign assistance matched by her domestic effort. The country had been contributing over Rs. 30 crores a year in foreign exchange for this purpose, and this was "an unexpected contribution."

With the fresh commitment of $450 million for 1964-65, the actual amount available would be around $600 million after adding the carry-over of $150 million from the current fiscal year.

Talking about the resources which would be available for the Third Plan, he estimated that around $1,000 million would be coming out of the "pipeline" which was being rapidly enlarged.

Members of the Consortium had made the following commitments for the year 1963-64 (the amount is in dollars):

Belgium 10 million; Canada 19 million; France 10 million; West Germany 27.5 million; Italy 10 million; Japan 30 million; Holland 8.8 million; United Kingdom 23.2 million; United States 212.5 million; and the World Bank and International Development Association 80 million.

C. Constitution (Second Amendment) Bill Passed: After week-long stormy proceedings, the National Assembly approved on June 11 the Constitution (Second Amendment) Bill by 106 votes to 26.

The Bill, among other things, advances the President's election by five months and fixes the life of the electoral college at five years.

The President's election will now be held in February to enable him to assume office on March 23—the day when 24 years ago the Pakistan resolution was adopted at Lahore in 1940.

The most controversial provision that attracted bitter criticism from the Opposition pertained to continuation of the President in office until his successor assumed office. Opposition members alleged that this was being done "to perpetuate the present incumbent in the Presidential chair till eternity". This, they said, would deprive an East Pakistani from becoming the President.

Originally, the Constitution provided for the President to remain in office for five years and 60 days. If elections were not complete by that time, the Speaker of the National Assembly would assume Presidentship as a stop-gap arrangement.

Under the Constitution, amendments can be carried only by a two-thirds majority in a House of 156. The ruling Party managed to secure 103 votes (against the minimum of 104). The passage of the Bill was, however, possible only after nine Opposition members crossed the floor.

Earlier, speaking on the Bill, Mr. Yusuf Khattak, leader of the Opposition, declared that his party would continue the struggle against the Bill.

Winding up the general debate, the Law Minister, Mr. Khursheed Ahmed, dealt with the Opposition criticism point by point. He said the Assembly was fully competent to amend the Constitution to any length. Those who had taken the oath had no right to doubt the representative character of the Assembly. "This will not be permissible."

He said all those who could convince public opinion had a right to bring their partymen in the House. He knew of no Constitution which debarred a chief executive from contesting election while in office. "If you can trust him while in office, why not during the elections?" he asked.

Parliamentary Secretary Resigns:

Mr. Ziaul Amin sprang a surprise among Treasury benches on June 8 by announcing his resignation both from the post of Parliamentary Secretary for Communications and from membership of the Muslim League Parliamentary Party.

He said: "Parliamentary Secretaries have no function, nor do they deserve facilities and privileges allowed to them."

He sent his resignation to the President and simultaneously released it to the Press to make his defection complete and final.

Just as the Government Party moved for closure on general discussion of the Constitution (Second Amendment) Bill, he rose in his seat, pulled out a folded paper from his pocket and waving it in the air announced his decision to leave the Party and go over to the Opposition. He said after resigning from Parliamentary Secretaryship: "I do not deserve to occupy these benches" and went to the Opposition where he was very warmly received amidst thundering applause and "zindabad" slogans.

The ruling Party members were taken aback by this unexpected defection from their ranks.

Mr. Ziaul Amin in his resignation letter recalled his role in formation of Cabinet in 1962 and formation of Muslim League Parliamentary Party. "This I did because I thought the country will benefit by our leadership."

"It is also not unknown to different members of the Assembly how much trouble I had to undergo to get Khan A. Sabur elected as Leader of the House. Now I find Lal Mian is the actual leader and Mr. Sabur is there only in name.

"My experience of these two years as Parliamentary Secretary and as member has led me to realise that I was not on many occasions doing justice to my conscience with regard to the interest of my country, particularly East Pakistan.

"I am grateful to you that you appointed me as one of your Parliamentary Secretaries. But it is a fact that Parliamentary Secretaries practically have no function, nor do they deserve facilities and privileges allowed by you. What I wanted is to have more responsibility by which I could do more service to the people of my country. But under the present system it is not possible.

"Many Bills have been introduced by the Law Minister without previous discussion and approval of the Parliamentary Party and ultimately we had to accede to these only for consideration of your prestige. Many changes have been made in the Muslim League constitution without our knowledge. The Muslim League has been formed in different places about which many of us were not consulted or made part of the same.

"The greatest bottle-neck for me to continue as your Parliamentary Secretary has now become this present second amendment of the Constitution. For the last few nights I could not sleep at all to think what I am to do. Ultimately I got a reply only last afternoon when I was slumbering in East Pakistan House. I am convinced that I should not vote for this Bill. In my opinion this will be a death knell for people of this country. I could not in any way reconcile the Government policies particularly of this Bill with my morality. So I beg to apologise to you that I cannot support this Bill, though I have the highest regard for you. I know my abstaining may not stop getting through of this Bill but I am undone.

"I will cherish the highest regard for you as I think that you are the fittest person at present to hold this office of President of the country. By my resignation I am not going to join Opposition. I shall still be willing to be in Government Parliamentary Party if you allow and shall co-operate with the right cause of the country the Government brings forth in the Assembly. I am a Muslim Leaguer since the beginning of my political career and shall remain so."

H. West Pakistan Budget For 1964-65: The West Pakistan Finance Minister, Mr. Masud Sadiq, presented on June 11 the Provincial Budget for 1964-65, showing a surplus of Rs. 9.96 crores.

Revenue receipts are estimated at Rs. 164.72 crores, while expenditure charged to revenue is estimated at Rs. 154.76 crores.

Although the revenue account shows a surplus of about Rs. 10 crores, the overall Budget based on capital account shows a deficit of Rs. 5 crores. The surplus in the revenue account will be transferred to capital account and the net deficit of Rs. 5 crores will be met by additional taxation amounting to Rs. 77,00,000 and prospective increase in Provincial share in the Central taxation. A sum of Rs. 210.45 crores is to be spent on development programme during the next year.

The total provision made for education and training in the next year, both development and non-development sectors is Rs. 42.17 crores as against the current year's revised estimate of Rs. 35.94 crores.

The University of Karachi has been allowed a grant of Rs. 74,00,000 which is substantially higher than the pre-merger period. The University has also been allocated a capital grant of Rs. 43,50,000 as against the current year's figure of Rs. 36,00,000.

In the health sector Rs. 14.49 crores have been provided both for development and non-development sectors as compared to Rs. 10.79 crores utilized during the current year.

The Rural Work programme gets 50 per cent increase—from Rs. 10 crores to Rs. 15 crores.

In his Budget speech Mr. Sadiq referred to higher allocation for the development of under-developed areas of the Province. "The allocation made for regional schemes in the Budget under consideration reflected Government's determination to step up by the maximum extent practicable the pace of development in the relatively less developed regions."

Th position with regard to region-wise allocation is as follows:

Former N-WFP—Rs. 9.15 crores as against the previous year's Budget estimate of Rs. 7.98 crores; former Punjab—Rs. 111.63 crores as against Rs. 37.85 crores; former Bahawalpur—Rs. 4.46 crores against the previous year's Rs. 3.47 crores; former Sind—Rs. 34.68 crores as against Rs. 32.45 crores; and Baluchistan—Rs. 6.52 crores as against Rs. 5.70 crores.

According to Mr. Sadiq, in Karachi region the expenditure reached in 1963-64 will be maintained in the next financial year. During the next year, for the development schemes of the region a sum of Rs. 11.69 crores is being provided as against Rs. 11.70 crores provided this year.

Excluding development grants amounting to Rs. 30.26 crores, the receipts from taxes and other sources of income are expected to improve by Rs. 8 crores.

The assignments from Central taxes will increase to Rs. 46.42 crores next year from Rs. 43.57 crores in the current year.

The growth in the Provincial tax receipts will increase to Rs. 37.66 crores from Rs. 34.76 crores.

The miscellaneous receipts will improve from Rs. 39.28 crores to Rs. 41.13 crores.

The principal increase in revenue expenditure is on account of development expenditure included in the revenue Budget; the expenditure on development, debited to revenues, will rise from Rs. 33.83 crores in the revised estimates to Rs. 46.15 crores in the Budget for the next financial year.

The debt charges on loans incurred for development are expected to go up by Rs. 3 crores next year; the public debt on the Province is expected to rise from Rs. 225.74 crores at the commencement of the Plan period to Rs. 450.20 crores by the end of the next financial year.

The percentage of expenditure connected with development is 74 per cent of the total revenue expenditure while the provision for administrative expenditure is 26 per cent.

The capital receipts during the next financial year, including the surplus in revenue account, are estimated at Rs. 152.36 crores; as compared to the current year the revenue surplus is estimated to be Rs. 9.96 crores as against Rs. 22.65 crores in the revised estimates.

Loans from the Central Government are estimated at Rs. 100.46 crores as compared to Rs. 108.63 crores in the revised estimates.

A sum of over Rs. 40,64,000 has been provided for grants-in-aid to various social welfare and literary organizations in West Pakistan for 1964-65.

Mr. Sadiq claimed that for the first time the growth rate of national income had outstripped the growth rate of population in the Province.

He said the national income had risen by an average of 4.2 per cent as against the increase of 2.7 per cent in the population during the same period. He said greater emphasis had been laid on the development of communications, irrigation, power, agriculture, industries and housing and settlement and for the reclamation of water-logged and salinity-affected lands.

The sector-wise break-down of the total Development Programme of Rs. 210.45 crores is as follows:

Agriculture—31.98; Water and Power—72.78; Industries—11.03; Transport and Communications—36.00; Housing and Settlement—19.60; Education and Training—15.16; Health—7.28; Man-power and Social Welfare—72; Works Programme—15.00.

Total Plan Allocation (West Pakistan): Rs. 623.00 crores.

On the basis of the above figures, next year's Development Programme shows an increase of nearly 41 per cent as compared to the Revised Estimates of the current year.

Water and Power: The highest allocation made in the Development Programme is to the Water and Power Sector—(Rs. 72.78 crores).

Besides, the above, Rs. 500,00,000 has been provided for general investigation. The purpose of these operations is the development of additional water resources, generation of power, control of water-logging and salinity etc. Studies are being made for construction of Pilot Wind Mills for pumping water and generation of electricity; Rs. 108,90,000 has been provided for WAPDA House.

I. East Pakistan Budget For 1964-65: The East Pakistan Finance Minister, Mr. Hafizur Rahman, presented in the Provincial Assembly on June 10 the Civil Budget for 1964-65, showing a surplus of Rs. 16.63 crores which will be utilized for financing the development programme.

Revenue receipts have been shown at Rs. 91.85 crores. The total revenue expenditure is estimated at Rs. 75.22 crores (inclusive of a contingency provision of Rs. 5 crores).

Presenting the Budget, Mr. Rahman said the revenue receipts for 1964-65 showed a rise of about Rs. 3.42 crores over the current year's (1963-64) revised estimate of Rs. 88.43 crores.

He announced that for the year 1964-65 a sum of Rs. 205 crores (gross) had been earmarked for the development programme in the Province. This included an element of shortfall to the tune of Rs. 40 crores and the net expenditure was proposed to the tune of Rs. 165 crores. The programme would be financed in the following manner: (a) Central assistance including foreign aid—Rs. 128 crores; (b) contribution from Provincial resources in the form of revenue surplus, capital receipts, market loan and recoveries from schemes Rs. 37 crores.

The Budget, however, did not make any proposal for fresh taxation.

He said, the World Bank has also remade calamities, the East Pakistan economy recorded considerable growth during 1963-64. Production of agricultural commodities and industrial goods increased substantially. The average annual investment in all the sectors (including the private sector) during the Second Plan period was likely to be of the order of Rs. 174 crores as against the average of Rs. 57 crores during the First Plan period.

Industrial production in 1963-64 increased by 10 per cent over that of the year 1962-63. This was mainly due to the higher growth rate in large-scale industries, where the increase was about 17 per cent over the previous year's production. In the agriculture sector there had been an increase of 3.7 per cent in the acreage under the rice crop and 17.8 per cent in the total yield.

Referring to the payment of compensation according to the provisions of the East Pakistan Estate Acquisition and Tenancy Act, cash was payable only to those whose compensation did not exceed Rs. 500. It was decided in December, 1963 that all rent receivers should be paid in cash, in the course of five years commencing from 1963-64 irrespective of the amount of compensation due to each.

A total of Rs. 35 crores had been assessed as final compensation to be paid under the Estate Acquisition and Tenancy Act for the whole Province. Deducting from it the compensation payable to non-resident rent receivers and the amount already paid in cash, it was estimated that a sum of Rs. 20 crores would be required to be paid during the five years starting from the current financial year. A sum of Rs. 4 crores had been provided in this year's Budget for this purpose. Considerable provision had also been made in the next year's Budget to meet the obligation. In order to channel this money to productive use, the Government had been doing its best to help the rent receivers to receive these sums in profitable securities.

He then dealt with sector-wise allocations. He said that an amount of Rs. 15.15 crores had been provided in the next year's Budget for the improvement of general and technical education indicating a rise of 14 per cent. The money will be distributed in the following spheres:

Primary education—Rs. 2.23 crores; secondary education—Rs. 2.38 crores; teacher education—Rs. 48,00,000; college education—Rs. 54,00,000; other institutions, scholarships and special projects—Rs. 1.56 crores; technical education—Rs. 5.78 crores; university education—Rs. 2.63 crores; survey and studies for Third Plan Rs. 15,00,000.

He pointed out that a sum of Rs. 2 crores had been earmarked for the development of the Dacca and Rajshahi University. A provision had also been made for a residential university at Faizabad near Dacca.

Referring to Health and Social Welfare sector, he said it was proposed to spend a sum of Rs. 7.10 crores on the health sector and Rs. 60,00,000 for the social welfare sector, making a total of about Rs. 7.70 crores. Proper and adequate stress had been laid on both the preventive and curative sides. In 1962-63 a batch of 55 doctors was sent abroad under the Provincial training programme. In the current year also a similar number of doctors was being sent abroad for post-graduate training and degrees.

He said a sum of Rs. 56.08 crores for the development of water and power resources of the Province had been allocated. A sum of Rs. 34.68 crores was earmarked for water development as against Rs. 29.40 crores. Among the new schemes to be taken up next year in this sector were small electric pump irrigation, Gumti flood control and irrigation project, Southern—Rajshahi irrigation, Manu river and Brahmaputra flood control survey.

For the power sector, a sum of Rs. 21.40 crores had been allocated and the total provision, about Rs. 20 crores would be spent on on-going schemes and the balance on new schemes. Important projects on power generation are (A) 120-M.W. Ashuganj thermal plant, (B) Siddhirganj 50-MW thermal plant and (C) the emergency power scheme for which a provision of about Rs. 50,00,000 has been kept in the next year.

He said that an amount of Rs. 31 crores had been provided in the Budget for the next financial year for the East Pakistan Industrial Development Corporation as against Rs. 20.57 crores in the current year's revised Budget. Of this amount Rs. 24 crores roughly would be spent on on-going schemes and Rs. 7 crores roughly on new schemes.

Regarding the works programme, he said that the programme had achieved satisfactory results and hence a sum of Rs. 25 crores had been allocated to the works programme during the coming financial year.

A sum of Rs. 21.03 crores had been provided for the agriculture sector. This included expenditure on agriculture (including work under the operational activities of the Agricultural Development Corporation, fisheries, forest, livestock, co-operation and agricultural marketing.)

A sum of Rs. 14.03 crores had been provided in the next year's Budget for the continuance of the schemes now under implementation by the Agricultural Development Corporation. These included, besides procurement and distribution of seeds, fertilizers etc., operation of mechanised cultivation and power pump irrigation as also the running of selected farms for improved seed multiplication. Under the scheme for mechanized cultivation and power pump irrigation, satisfactory progress had been achieved, he added, and said the cultivators had realised the utility of power pump, particularly for Winter crops, and the demand for such pumps on hire had considerably increased. Up to the end of April, 1964, 2,550 power pumps and 160 tractors were placed in the fields.

J. Eastern Railway Budget For 1964-65: The East Pakistan Railway Minister, Khwaja Hassan Askari, presented in the Provincial Assembly in Dacca on June 8 a Rs. 25,30,00,000 Budget for 1964-65 for the Eastern Railway.

The Budget, which provides an estimated expenditure of Rs. 21,31,00,000, leaves a net surplus of Rs. 33,00,000 after meeting obligations to the Central and Provincial Governments amounting to Rs. 3,66,00,000.

The development programme, which accounts for more than Rs. 20 crores expenditure, includes a new feature of opening a railway line to the district of Barisal for the first time.

Khwaja Askari said that the budgeted expenditure had been increased by Rs. 86,00,000 over 1963-64 provisions due to normal increments of the staff, increase of cost of stores, implementation of Government orders on Pay and Services Commission's recommendations in respect of Gazetted officers and creation of a larger number of new posts to cope with extra traffic.

He said the tempo of progress in the implementation of the development plan of the Railways continued unabated. This would be evident from the fact that development expenditure during the entire First Plan period was only Rs. 18,16,00,000. Revised estimates for 1964-65 alone showed a development expenditure of Rs. 18,49,00,000. Similarly the proposed expenditure on development during 1964-65 amounted to Rs. 20,20,00,000.

On the earning side, he added, it was a matter of gratification to note that 1963-64 was likely to close with a net surplus of Rs. 2,60,000 despite the fact that an extra expenditure of Rs. 63,00,000 during the year was anticipated on account of increased excise duty on fuel, sales-tax on consumable stores, increase in price of Indian coal and repair of damage caused by cyclones and floods in the Chittagong area.

He told the House that traffic and engineering surveys of four new lines had been completed. These are: Santahar-

Rohanpur, 77 miles; Ishurdi-Nagar Bari, 45 miles; Aricha Tangi-Dacca, 58 miles; and Kurigram-Bhurangamarid, 30 miles. The preliminary reconnaissance surveys had also been undertaken in respect of (1) Chatak Sunamgunj-Akergahat, 40 miles; and (2) Feni Harjigunj, 75 miles.

He said a sum of Rs. 1,20,000 had been provided in the budget estimates for 1964-65 for new surveys to be carried out during the coming year.

He said it was proposed to provide amenities during the coming financial year. These included platform sheds at 13 stations, over bridges at Daulatpur and Mahimagunj, sitting benches in Third Class waiting halls at 50 railway stations, electrification of 14 stations, installation of water coolers at 15 stations, Inter and Third class waiting rooms for ladies and gents at 70 stations and opening of new stations at four places.

For the welfare of the staff, 100 semi-pucca quarters for Class III staff and and 2,000 semi-pucca quarters for Class IV staff would be constructed. Besides, water taps would be provided in Class III and Class IV staff quarters.

K. Western Railway Budget For 1964-65: The Western Railway Budget for 1964-65 was presented in the West Pakistan Assembly on June 9. It showed a surplus of Rs. 6.65 crores, with revenue receipts estimated at Rs. 58.5 crores and expenditure at Rs. 51.85 crores.

Presenting the Budget, the Railway Minister, Mr. Mohammed Khan Junejo, said that after paying interest on the Central and Provincial investments which would amount to Rs. 5.17 crores, the net profit or surplus would stand at Rs. 1.48 crores.

He announced an increase in passenger fares at the rate of 5 per cent in the case of lower class (Third and Inter) and 7½ per cent and 10 per cent in the case of Second and First Class respectively. These increases, which had become necessary in view of the additional expenditure caused by taxes on fuel oils and wage increases allowed to the non-gazetted staff, would yield an additional income of Rs. 1.5 crores. Similarly, increase in freight rates which originally was to be enforced from January, 1964, but would now come into force from July 1, 1964, would yield another Rs. 1.5 crores.

The revenue estimates for 1964-65 showed an improvement of Rs. 4.5 crores over the revised estimates for the current year. This increase was expected as a result of normal increase in traffic at the rate of 3 per cent which was expected to yield Rs. 1.5 crores. The remaining Rs. 3 crores would be earned by way of increase in freight rates and passenger fares.

The revised estimates on the revenue side for 1963-64 showed an increase of Rs. 4.24 crores over the original budgeted figures—the total income is Rs. 54 crores as against the budgeted figure of Rs. 49.76 crores. Similarly, the revised estimates of expenditure were placed at Rs. 48.33 crores against the budgeted figure of Rs. 43.32 crores, showing an increase of Rs. 5.01 crores.

The excess expenditure was mainly on account of excise duty of fuel oil which alone resulted in an increase of Rs. 3 crores. On the other hand, the increase in the income was mainly due to heavier goods traffic which brought to the Railway exchequer Rs. 3.10 crores.

The bulk of development expenditure will go towards providing more amenities to the passengers and railway staff. The expenditure on amenities to the passengers during the next year will cost Rs. 21,00,000, while the cost of new schemes of staff welfare to be started in 1965 will be Rs. 162,00,000, of which the expenditure to be incurred during the next year will be Rs. 25,00,000.

Dealing with the development programmes, Mr. Junejo said that under the engineering and structural works programme the main emphasis was being placed on modernization of signalling, while improvement and expansion of line capacity works were designed to enhance operational efficiency. There was also a programme for the rehabilitation and expansion of workshop facilities.

He said the track renewal programme envisaged 324 miles of rail renewals and 490 miles of sleeper renewals. This included the work of renewal and strengthening of track between Karachi and Lalamusa by providing 100-lb rails in place of 90-lb rails.

He said a scheme for the installation of a factory for the manufacture of prestressed concrete sleepers, which was initiated in 1962, and which had recently been finally allocated to the Railways, was progressing. This factory was expected to be installed by the middle of 1965, with technical assistance from West Germany and would be capable of producing 200,000 sleepers per year.

He said the new scheme of passenger amenities which would be taken up during the next year would cost Rs. 46,00,000 out of which the expenditure to be incurred during the next year would be Rs. 21,00,000. The amenities included shelters on station platforms, waiting halls and rooms, electric fans and flush type latrines at certain stations.

The revised expenditure for development expenditure stands at Rs. 23.70 crores, showing an increase of Rs. 2,00,00,000 on the budget etimates of Rs. 21.70 crores.

The increased expenditure is mainly on account of rolling stock and engineering and structural works partly offset by short-fall due to less expenditure on plant and machinery and bridge works.

The budget estimates for the next year provide for an outlay of Rs. 25 crores out of which about Rs. 23 crores would be spent on the schemes under execution.

The new development expenditure includes new constructions (Rs. 1,21,000); rolling stock (Rs. 13,14,000); engineering and structural works (Rs. 2,96,000); plant and machinery (Rs. 78,00,000); bridge works (Rs. 76,00,000); track renewals (Rs. 4,14,000); passenger and other public amenities (Rs. 43,00,000); staff welfare works (Rs. 95,00,000); and unremunerative works (Rs. 63,00,000).

Under the new construction Rs. 60,00,000 would be spent on Karachi Circular Railway; Rs. 30,00,000 on each of the two other schemes under execution -(a) Kot Addu-Dera Ghazi Khan railway line, and (b) Hyderabad-Mirpurkhas conversions from metre-gauge to broad-gauge.

A sum of Rs. 1,00,000 will also be spent on the old scheme—Jacobabad-Kashmore railway conversion from metre-gauge to broad-gauge.

Under the rolling stock programme five new shunting locomotives, 196 new coaches, and 1,650 wagons will be procured. Among 196 new coaches, 70 will be third class coaches having three berths for providing sleeping accommodation.

L. Nationalization Of Trade In Burma—Effect On Pakistan Nationals: The Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, said in the National Assembly in Rawalpindi on June 6 that about 4,000 Pakistani nationals had been affected by the Burmese Government's policy of socialism and nationalization of trade.

He assured that the Pakistan Government was providing all facilities for repatriation of its nationals. Besides the scheduled PIA service, a Super-Constellation will regularly fly to Rangoon to pick up Pakistanis who want to migrate.

During question hour, he had to face a barrage of supplementaries from the Opposition Members who expressed concern about the future of Pakistanis affected in Burma.

Mr. Bhutto said some 500 shops run by Pakistanis had so far been nationalized in Burma. He said it was difficult at this stage to give the exact figure invested by Pakistanis involved in nationalization because the Burmese Government had not yet completed stock-taking. The amount may run into about Rs. 2 crores, but the figure had yet to be verified.

He assured the Government's best efforts to assist Pakistanis with the "friendly co-operation" of the Burmese Government for evaluation of their assets, payment of compensation and provision of necessary foreign exchange for repatriation of capital.

He said that at present on an average 50 Pakistanis were leaving Burma by air every week. A rush, however, was anticipated from June when the Burmese Government would start clearing 200 to 300 applications of foreigners daily.

The number of Pakistanis in Burma was estimated to be in the vicinity of 75,000.

Mr. Bhutto said Burmese law of nationalization was not discriminatory as it affected everyone, including Indians and Britons.

He said the Pakistan Embassy had taken all possible steps for repatriation of investment by Pakistanis. But, he added, "we cannot interfere in implementation of Burmese objectives."

He said negotiations on the issue were in progress.

M. Curbs On Foreign Firms: The Minister of Commerce, Mr. Wahiduzzaman, announced in Rawalpindi on May 19 that foreign commercial importers would be eliminated within a few years and import facilities in future would be confined to foreign firms having industries and interests in Pakistan.

He said that the process of elimination had already begun. The intention was that the foreign interests in commercial trade should be persuaded to invest earnings in the industrial sector.

The Government's decision will hit mainly those British businessmen who have been engaged in commercial imports for many years. The position of foreign oil companies exclusively engaged in commercial imports had not yet been examined in the context of this policy, but eventually, Pakistani interests would take precedence.

The Government did not in any manner intend to discourage foreign investments. The aim, he said, was for commercial trade to be undertaken as far as possible by Pakistanis. Foreign firms engaged in commercial business had earned substantial profits, and it was fair to expect them to participate in the industrial growth of the country.

N. Economic Survey Report For 1963-64: The Economic Survey report for 1963-64, released in Karachi on June 4, said that the year (April-March) had been remarkable for the economy of Pakistan.

In spite of a record increase in money supply and bank credit of Rs. 110.24 crores (14 per cent) and Rs. 104.08 crores

(10 per cent) respectively in the course of the year, the increase in wholesale prices had been only marginal—0.9 per cent.

The following is the official summary of the report:

"The growth rate has been accelerated, exceeding the Plan's annual average of 4.8 per cent by 1.2 per cent. The index of industrial production (base: 1959-60) rose from 133.6 in 1962-63 to 156.3 during the second half of 1963 and still higher during the first half of 1964. The industries which recorded marked increases in production were sugar, jute manufactures, fertilizers, petroleum manufactures and cement.

"In the agricultural sector, the production index for all crops (base: average of 1949-50 to 1952-53=100) set a new record of 136 in 1963-64. The index of food crops rose to 134 in 1963-64 compared to 103 in 1958-59. The index for non-food crops, (which rose from 154 in 1961-62 to 172 in 1963-64), showed a still marked progress.

"The production of large and medium industries during the first three years of the Second Plan period increased by 34 per cent and that of small industries by 15 per cent against 60 per cent and 25 per cent respectively aimed at during the five-year Plan period. During these three years production of sugar increased by 67 per cent, cigarettes by 62 per cent, cotton cloth by 16 per cent, cement by 32 per cent, tyres and tubes by 58 per cent and fertilizers by 424 per cent.

"In absolute figures, the production of cotton yarn increased from 43.22 crores lbs in 1962 to 47.16 crores lbs in 1963, jute manufactures from 2,86,000 tons to 3,15,000 tons, sugar from 1,91,000 tons to 2,43,000 tons, hydrogenated vegetable oil from 62,700 tons to 77,100 tons, cigarettes from 1,370 crores to 1,617 crores and fertilizers from 1,56,000 tons to 2,54,000 tons.

"The private sector over-fulfilled its targets. The Investment Schedule of Rs. 284 crores, laid down in 1960 for the Second Plan period, having been over-implemented by Rs. 123 crores by the end of 1962, a revised schedule of Rs. 153 crores was announced in February, 1963. Sanctions for Rs. 62.3 crores under the revised schedule have already been obtained and it is expected that during the next financial year, last year of the Plan, the amount would be exhausted, the private sector thus achieving almost 100 per cent over-fulfilment.

"In the public sector, the Industrial Development Corporation continued to make significant contribution to industrial development. The goods produced in 1963-64 by projects under the management of the two Corporations were valued at Rs. 56.9 crores. The capital outlay of the West Pakistan Industrial Development Corporation (WPIDC) in its 34 completed projects now stands at Rs. 80.3 crores. The East Pakistan Industrial Development Corporation (EPIDC) completed four projects at a cost of Rs. 6.85 crores and Rs. 28 crores with an estimated cost of Rs. 64.18 crores are under different stages of execution. The two Corporations have now started working on projects involving establishment of heavy industrial complexes.

"In addition, the Department of Investment Promotion and Supplies accorded sanction to 313 industrial units, involving a total investment of Rs. 88.93 crores of which Rs. 39.15 crores involves foreign private capital. This is apart from foreign loans amounting to Rs. 43.26 crores which were associated with foreign equity capital.

"In the field of agriculture, some of the major crops such as rice, sugarcane and cotton set new production records and exceeded the Plan targets by significant margins a year ahead of schedule. Tea which had received a major setback in 1962-63 recovered some of the ground lost during 1963-64.

"The sugarcane crop which was only 141,10,000 tons in 1959-60 rose to 229,00,000 tons in 1962-63, an increase of 62.3 per cent in three years. The cotton crop, having remained stagnant around 17,00,000 bales for a number of years, achieved a break-through in 1961-62 when production rose to 18,40,000 bales. Production increased still more in 1962-63 to 20,76,000 bales —an increase of 21.3 per cent over 1960-61.

"Although final crop estimates for 1963-64 are not yet available, preliminary estimates suggest bumper crops in rice, sugar-cane and cotton. There is shortfall in the production of jute mainly because of the down-swing in raw jute prices received by the growers during the 1962-63 season.

"The rice crop during the last five years has increased very rapidly. From 79,00,000 tons in 1958-59, it rose sharply to 105,30,000 tons in 1960-61, 105,80,000 tons in 1961-62 and 116,00,000 tons in 1963-64. There was a slight setback in 1962-63 due to bad weather conditions when the production had fallen to 98,10,000 tons.

"Production of wheat during 1962-63 was estimated at 41,50,000 tons against 40,00,000 tons in 1961-62 and 37,90,000 tons in 1960-61. The increase was, however, largely the result of increased acreage. During the period 1960-61 to 1962-63, while the acreage increased by 8.5 per cent, production was higher by 9.5 per cent.

"In the field of water and power development, significant progress continued to be achieved. The index of power generation in terms of capacity rose from 103.5 in 1958 (base: 1957-100) to 257.3 in 1961 and to 313.8 in 1962; 1963 will reveal a more impressive picture when data are available.

"The generation of power by EPWAPDA rose from 74,000 kw in 1959-60 to 185,000 kw by February, 1964 and the number of consumers rose during the same period from 38,600 to 79,247. In West Pakistan the installed capacity had risen to 604,000 kw as against 119,000 kw in 1958-59. Revenues of WPWAPDA almost doubled in three years from Rs. 9.3 crores in 1960-61 to Rs. 17.4 crores in 1963-64 (estimates).

"Apart from tapping the conventional sources of energy the Government have taken steps to develop nuclear power. Construction of one nuclear plant for each Province is under way and by the end of 1968 both of them are expected to be in operation. The East Pakistan nuclear station with an installed capacity of 70 megawatt will be located at Roopur in Pabna and that of West Pakistan with an installed capacity of 132 mw at Karachi.

"Large volumes of development expenditure necessarily give rise to inflationary pressure which operate from more than one direction. Their complete elimination is neither practicable nor desirable, but to keep them in check and use them only as lever to higher production is the objective of sound economic policies. In Pakistan, the Government, through financial and fiscal devices has succeeded in maintaining reasonable stability in price level and the increase has been much less than in many other developing countries. Over the last five years the index number of wholesale prices has shown an average annual increase of only 1.9 points. While the price of rice showed a considerable decline during 1963-64, the price of wheat has been generally high in comparison with the previous season.

"On the whole, prices of manufactured consumers goods tended to rise. The increase was more marked for imported consumer goods than for local manufactured goods.

"Development in the social sector has been quite impressive. In the field of education, 4,000 new primary schools and 400 new secondary schools were established. The number of engineering and agricultural universities has risen from six to ten. The number of polytechnics is being raised from 16 in 1962-63 to 35 by the end of 1965—17 in East Pakistan and 18 in West Pakistan. New engineering colleges are also being established at Rajshahi and Hyderabad.

"Three new medical colleges have been established, one each at Dacca, Sylhet and Mymensingh. Increase in the number of doctors has exceeded the Plan target while increase in the number of nurses was about 50 per cent. The number of lady health visitors increased to 600 of family planning centres to 1970. Seventy-two rural health centres and 32 school health clinics were set up. The number of hospital beds rose to 32,000 as against the Plan target of 38,000.

"The year 1963 witnessed an unprecedented expansion in money supply and bank credit, touching a new peak at Rs. 748.95 crores and Rs. 416.10 crores respectively and showing increases of Rs. 95.74 crores and Rs. 79.05 crores over 1962.

"The expansive trend continued during the first quarter of 1964. At the end of March, 1964, money supply stood at Rs. 786.10 crores compared to Rs. 676.10 crores in March, 1963—a rise of Rs. 110 crores.

"The most important measure in the field of bank credit is the opening of the People's Credit Department by the National Bank of Pakistan which caters for the financial requirements of small business and industry.

"The branches of the Scheduled banks continued to increase. In the course of the year 299 new branches were opened and reached a total of 1,130 as against 831 at the end of 1962."

C. Agricultural Plans For East Wing: A sum of Rs. 295.44 million has been allocated in the agricultural sector for a total of 150 schemes in the East Pakistan Budget for 1964-65 presented in the Provincial Assembly on June 10.

On the total 150 schemes, the number of on-going schemes is 142 costing Rs. 288.34 million. Eight new schemes would cost Rs. 7.10 million.

Most of the schemes in the agriculture sector relate to the research and training programme which had been already undertaken.

One major new scheme is to cover 20 Thana of Comilla district in integrated rural development, initiated by the Academy for Rural Development to awaken rural enthusiasm.

The Agricultural Development Corporation's development programme costing Rs. 14.3 crores aims at distribution 1,63,000 tons of fertilizers, operation of about 4,117 power pumps to irrigate an area of 3,81,000 acres, introduction of 200 power tillers, procurement of exotic seeds and multiplication farms.

The livestock programme in the Budget covered completion of on-going schemes, like veterinary hospitals, artificial insemination centres, milk toning plant and veterinary research centres.

The programme for raising output of fish, in addition to the completion of on-going schemes, aims at setting up a Fisheries Development Corporation.

By the end of 1965, five new fish seed farms will be completed, bringing the total of such farms to 51. In addition, 5,000 acres of derelict fisheries will be reclaimed and stocked with quality fish.

A scheme for plantation and regeneration of forests over an area of 19,000 acres had been taken up in the next year's afforestation programme.

The programme of the Food Department aims at completion of the schemes for providing storage facilities which had already been undertaken.

The schemes executed in the agricultural sector in the last four years of the Second Plan period had made a good impact in achieving the physical targets in major fields.

To-date rice production in East Pakistan is about 104,00,000 tons against the Plan target of 86,65,000 tons; wheat 32,000 tons against 22,000 tons, oil seeds 1,95,000 tons against the Second Plan target of 1,77,000 tons.

The present sugarcane output is 50,60,000 tons against the target of 54,60,000 tons, tobacco 29,000 tons against 14,000 tons, jute 60,00,000 bales against the target of 73,90,000 bales, cotton 17,000 bales against 70,000 bales.

The present fish output of East Pakistan is 13,60,000 tons against the Second Plan target of 2,60,000 tons; fertilizer output is 1,15,000 tons against the target of 8,46,000 tons; irrigated area is 1,40,000 acres against the Plan target of 3,60,000 acres including WAPDA programme; and timber extraction 230,00,000 tons against the Plan target of 504,00,000 tons.

The necessary infrastructure for achieving increased agricultural output are being built up. For this a number of research and experiment institutes had been set up.

P. Factories To Make Railway Wagons For East Wing: Mr. Abdul Rahman, Parliamentary Secretary for Railways, said on June 10 that it was proposed to set up a factory on the Pakistan Eastern Railway for the manufacture of carriages and wagons, and tenders had been invited from reputed firms for a feasibility report.

He was replying to a question from Mr. Abdul Mannan on the floor of the East Pakistan Assembly.

In his original question, Mr. Abdul Mannan wanted to know if there was any wagon manufacturing workshop in East Pakistan.

Replying in the negative, Mr. Rahman said that certain facilities had been developed in mechanical workshops for undertaking assembly of wagons which were being received in knock-down condition from foreign countries. Daily capacity for assembly of such wagons was eight units for for Pahartali shops and four units for Saidpur shops.

SYRIA

A. Arab Union—Government's Policy Statement: The Prime Minister, Mr. Salah Bitar, pledged on May 24 that his newly-formed Government would renew efforts to bring about union among Arab countries with revolutionary regimes.

Outlining the policies of his Baathist Government, he said it would strive to create a clear atmosphere with Arab countries in a bid to create better chances for the realization of a union among countries which are conditioned to join such a union.

He did not name these Arab countries, but left no doubt that he meant the United Arab Republic, Iraq, Algeria and Yemen.

Among the first moves by the Syrian Government to this end, he announced that he had called off Syria's current "war of radios" with UAR and Iraq.

He pledged to steer Syria in a moderate course between the extreme Right and the fanatical Left on a basis of "phased socialization".

He said his Government set its ultimate objective in striving for Arab unity, bringing about socialism as the only solution for Syria's economic difficulties and ensuring public freedom.

He pledged to speed up the formation of Syria's National Assembly which will exercise legislative authority in the country under the recently announced interim Constitution.

He said various sections of the people would be represented in the Assembly, but 50 per cent of its seats would go to representatives of the peasantry.

Mr. Bitar formed the new Government—a coalition Cabinet composed of 19 Ministers, equally divided between the Arab Socialist Baath Party and Independents—on May 13.

Also a five-man Presidential Council had been set up under the chairmanship of General Amin Al Hafez. It will act as the highest executive authority in Syria.

These changes were brought about within the frame-work of the new "Provisional" Constitution of the country.

TURKEY

A. Consortium Aid For Development Programme: A despatch on June 5 said that Prof. Jan Tinbergen, the Dutch economist who has been Chief Adviser to the State Planning Organization since its foundation, had begun studies in connexion with the development programme for 1965 and the drawing up of the Second Five-Year Plan (1968-73).

After examining the results of the 1963 programme Professor Tinbergen decided that an annual growth rate of 7 per cent should remain the target throughout the period of the present Plan. He stressed that the effectiveness of future programmes will depend on the fiscal reforms which the Government is now attempting to accomplish in order to raise the necessary internal revenue to meet budget commitments.

He confirmed reports that some members of the "Aid-Turkey Consortium" had stipulated that further aid should be suspended until all fiscal legislation has been passed, but his own view was that Consortium aid should continue at all costs. In order to fulfil the present Plan, estimated to cost $6,000 million, Turkey needs some $300 million a year in foreign aid. At the last Consortium meeting on May 12, the member-countries studied a report on Turkey's economy drawn up by Professor Berrill of Cambridge University and a further meeting was to take place in the first half of June when Turkey's request for $250 million for the current year was to be considered. Of this sum, $124 million has so far been agreed upon, as to USA $70 million, UK $10.8 million, Denmark $0.5 million, Sweden $1 million, the International Monetary Fund $21.5 million and the OECD $20 million. The West German contribution of $40 million is expected to be passed by the Government shortly.

A further measure aimed at increasing revenue came into force in Turkey on May 25 with the introduction of a new customs tariff designed to raise an additional £T240 million this year and to protect local industries. A wide range of goods was said to be affected by the increased duties, which average over 30 per cent, and the concessions applicable to "most-favoured-nations" have been drastically reduced. The list of goods subject to the new tariff has not yet been published, but a Government spokesman said that motor cars were not involved.

A decree authorizing the payment of duty, turn-over tax, municipal tax and wharf dues in instalments over a period of up to five years is expected to be issued by the Cabinet in the near future. This method of payment will apply only to goods and equipment needed for the implementation of investment projects.

A. Mr. Ngo Dinh Can Executed: Mr. Ngo Dinh Can, brother of former President Ngo Dinh Diem, was executed by firing squad in a Saigon prison on May 9.

The execution followed the rejection of his appeal for clemency by the acting Chief of State, Major-General Duong Van Minh.

Gen. Minh's decision to go ahead with the execution was taken despite requests by Catholic and Buddhist leaders and by the United States Government for a reprieve.

YEMEN

A. President A. Sallal's Visit To China: The President, Field-Marshal Abdullah Sallal, arrived in Peking on June 1 on a State visit at the invitation of President Liu Shao-chi and the Premier, Mr. Chou En-lai.

A 21-gun salute was fired and full military honours were accorded to him at the airport.

On June 2, Dr. Liu Shao-chi gave a banquet in honour of President Sallal.

In a speech on the occasion, Dr. Liu Shao-chi praised the Yemeni people for their love of freedom. The Chinese people consistently supported the Arab people in their struggle to win and safeguard national independence.

He said: "We strongly condemn the US scheme of instigating Israel to provoke the Arab countries. We support the legitimate demand of the Palestine people to recover their proper rights and return to their homeland. We support the people of Aden and South Yemen in their struggle against colonialism. We support the stand of the Arab countries in demanding the dismantling of all the foreign military bases."

President Sallal praised the Chinese Government and people for consistently supporting the Arab people's cause and legitimate demands and their fight against "the imperialist schemes and aggression against Arab countries."

Referring to the speedy recognition of the Republic of Yemen by the Chinese Government, he said: "In giving such support, the Chinese Government has faithfully implemented its policy towards the struggle of the Arab people who are striving to shake off the shackles imposed by the reactionaries and various forms of colonial rule."

He said that his Government had proclaimed a policy of positive neutrality and non-alignment, devotion to the solidarity of the Arab and Asian-African peoples' opposition to old and new colonialism and sincere and selfless support to all people who devote themselves to world peace, liberation of peoples and peaceful co-existence.

He added that together with other Arab countries, Yemen supported China's legitimate right to its seat in United Nations.

On June 3, Mr. Chou En-lai gave a banquet in honour of President Sallal and on June 4 a rally was held in Peking to welcome the Yemeni President.

In Hanchow:

President Sallal arrived in Hanchow from Peking on June 6.

In the evening the Governor of the Province gave a banquet in his honour. Mr. Chou En-lai and the Vice-Premier, Marshal Chen Yi, who were accompanying President Sallal, attended the banquet.

On June 7, President Sallal arrived in Shanghai, where he received a big welcome.

President A. Sallal's Banquet To Chinese Leaders:

On June 10, President Sallal gave a banquet in honour of the Chinese leaders.

Present at the banquet were Dr. Liu Shao-chi, Vice-Chairman Tung Pi Wu, Marshal Chu Teh of the National People's Congress Standing Committee and Mr. Chou En-lai.

President Sallal and Mr. Chou En-lai warmly greeted the signing of the Sino-Yemeni Treaty of Friendship and the new development of the friendly relations between the two countries.

President Sallal spoke highly of the spectacular developments in China following the Revolution. As he put it, the Chinese people had created many miracles within the short span of a few years. He added that China was making its contribution together with all other peoples of the world for the promotion of human wellbeing and the civilization of the East based on the right of all peoples for freedom.

In his speech, Mr. Chou En-lai said that President Sallal's visit had made an important contribution to the relations of friendship and co-operation between the two countries.

Treaty Of Friendship Signed:

It was announced on June 15 that Yemen and China had signed a 10-year Treaty of Friendship with the desire "to consolidate and further develop the profound friendship" between the two countries.

The Treaty was signed by President Sallal and President Liu Shao-chi in Peking on June 9.

It will replace the old Treaty of Friendship signed on January 12, 1958.

The two countries also signed an Economic and Technical Co-operation Agreement and a Cultural Co-operation Agreement, but no details were disclosed.

Joint Communique:

A joint communique was also signed on June 9.

It said that the two parties "had a full exchange of views on international questions of common interest and on the question of further strengthening relations of friendship between China and Yemen, and identical views were reached on all the questions discussed."

In relation to Arab issues, it said: "The two parties strongly condemned the imperialist policy of aggression against Arab countries and expressed resolute opposition to the imperialists' criminal activities in instigating and using Israel to harm the Arab national interests.

"The two parties expressed firm support for the Arab peoples in their just struggle for the dismantling of all foreign military bases on Arab territory.

"The two parties expressed firm support for the Arab people of Palestine in their just struggle for the recovery of the legitimate rights and for a return to their homeland.

"The two parties strongly condemned the fresh crimes of military aggression committed by imperialists in Aden, the other occupied areas of South Yemen and Oman."

On the South-East Asian situation it said: "The two parties condemned imperialism for its recent creation of renewed tension in Indo-China and its execution of war plots there. They agreed that it is necessary quickly to convene a conference of the participants of the Geneva Agreements in order to save this region from the ominous situation and to preserve peace in Asia and the world."

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. Disarmament Conference: The 17-nation Disarmament Conference in Geneva adjourned on April 28 to meet again on June 9. In this series of discussions, no appreciable progress was made, but outside the Conference, USA and USSR announced further cuts in their production of fissile materials.

On February 18, the Soviet delegate, Mr. S. Tsarapkin, warned in the Disarmament Conference that there could be no progress on general disarmament until USA accepted the principle that all nuclear missiles should be destroyed.

He said: "We would be ready to sit down with the Americans immediately—today if necessary—to work out an agreement if they first accept as the first stage disarmament the principle of eliminating all nuclear vehicles."

He added that the US proposal for percentage cuts of nuclear vehicles "would only lead us into a stalemate".

The main problem of the Conference was to eliminate the threat of thermonuclear war as soon as possible. He said this was the basis of the Russian proposals. "The concern of States for their security would be covered by the balanced limited nuclear deterrent that both sides would maintain until the final stage of disarmament was completed."

British Proposals:

The British Foreign Secretary, Mr. R. A. Butler, on February 25 outlined six points upon which East and West should build if the Conference was to make any practical progress.

He also suggested three further points worthy of special attention and study, including proposals for streamlining the efficiency of conference procedures, new proposals in the field of inspection and verification, and new ideas for building up the peace-keeping effectiveness of United Nations.

He said that although earlier disarmament negotiations had not been fruitful, the world was now entering a new era in which nuclear war could not be contemplated.

He said that his Government had made a contribution to the agreements reached in 1963. "But general and complete disarmament cannot be easily or quickly achieved." Progress in this field must be matched by progress in other fields towards reducing tension. Disarmament was inextricably intertwined with foreign policy, and the general policies of all Governments were the key to success.

He listed six "cardinal points upon which we should try to reach agreement if we are to make practical progress":

(1) An agreement on observation posts in the NATO and Warsaw Pact areas. Even in advance of agreement there were many technical details which had to be settled, and these should be explored. Britain was discussing with her NATO allies proposals which might be put to the Conference.

(2) A comprehensive nuclear test ban Treaty. A very small and "really quite painless" degree of inspection was required.

(3) An agreement to ban the further dissemination of nuclear weapons or knowledge. "We should be able to do it now." Nothing in the proposed NATO multilateral force was contrary to the principle, and the existence of a formal agreement on non-dissemination would ensure that a multilateral force could not be set up in a form which permitted of dissemination of nuclear weapons.

(4) The increased use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes. This would be a valuable step towards non-dissemination. Britain welcomed the new US proposals, including submission by the nuclear Powers of some of their peaceful nuclear activities to the "same inspection that we recommend for other States".

(5) A "freeze" of strategic nuclear delivery vehicles. Britain welcomed this new American proposal. It was perhaps the most important of all.

(6) The early physical destruction of some armaments. Britain had frequently urged this, particularly in regard to nuclear delivery vehicles. Mr. Butler warmly welcomed the "bomber bonfire" proposals and was encouraged by Soviet interest. Once the first step had been taken, he hoped that substantial destruction might follow. A second round might include tanks and some of the more modern delivery vehicles—missiles as well as bombers. Looking ahead, it might be advisable to consider how it would be possible to counter-balance certain categories of weapons in which one side had superiority against those in which the other had a lead. Britain would want to contribute on an appropriate scale.

He then outlined three other fresh proposals which he considered worthy of study:

(1) An improved procedure for the Disarmament Conference. Less time should be spent on principles and general discussions, more on details. A proliferation of disarmament plans could easily become a substitute for constructive work. Hard, factual examination of individual measures was needed. The British delegation was prepared to provide working papers to the Conference and to any committees or study groups it might set up, for example, on observation posts.

(2) New proposals for verification. Similarly, the problems of verification should be subjected to detailed study now. The principle should be agreed that as disarmament advances, the degree of inspection advances hand-in-hand with it.

If this principle could be applied to the first stage of general disarmament, it might be worthwhile approaching the problem from new angles—for example, on a "functional" rather than a "regional" (inspection zones) basis.

(3) Proposals for international peace-keeping. It was essential to build up the peace-keeping role and capabilities of United Nations. At Geneva, Britain was prepared to discuss the problems of building up international peace-keeping forces in the second and third stages of disarmament. This might be for the more distant future. In the immediate future, much could be done to help United Nations. Mr. Butler enumerated three principles:

(i) The collective responsibility of all members to contribute to all UN activities, including peace-keeping operations;

(ii) The need to take account of any excessive burden which the costs of an expensive operation might impose on the economies of the developing countries; and

(iii) The special position of the larger countries and permanent members of the Security Council.

On the military side, Britain was encouraging the UN Secretary-General to build up his headquarters staff, to digest the experiences of Congo and other peace-keeping operations, to draw on the expertise of national forces, and thus to plan ahead.

Britain was also ready to discuss these ideas, or others designed for the same end, with all those who were interested. The degree of support for such peace-keeping arrangements was a good measure of the true desire of States to adhere to general disarmament.

Soviet Rejection:

Russia rejected on February 25 the British proposal to strengthen the UN peace-keeping machinery.

The Soviet delegate, Mr. Semyon Tsarapkin, said that such a force would only "create difficulties and complications".

He said that Russia had already proposed an international peace-keeping machinery as part of its disarmament plan.

Mr. Butler said Britain was ready to look ahead and discuss the problems of building up international peace-keeping forces in the second and third stages of disarmament.

Mr. William C. Foster, the US delegate, describing the speech as an "important contribution to the work of the Conference", welcomed Mr. Butler's support for President Johnson's proposed "freeze" of the numbers and characteristics of strategic nuclear delivery vehicles.

Failure To Agree On Agenda:

East-West disagreement on the agenda for collateral measures—those to ease tension and clear the way for general disarmament—came into the open on February 27.

The US delegate, Mr. W. Foster, announced that he and the Russian delegate, Mr. S. Tsarapkin, had been unable to reach accord on what the agenda should include.

The United States, he said, believed that progress could be be made by selecting subjects "which are possible of agreement" but so far he and Mr. Tsarapkin had been unable in their private meetings to identify a topic or a group of topics which both regarded as "offering sufficient prospect for early agreement to warrant their being placed in an agenda to the exclusion of other topics".

Mr. Tsarapkin said that in many of these meetings the Soviet Union had put forward two items—a 10 to 15 per cent cut in military budgets and measures to secure the non-dissemination of nuclear weapons. Mr. Foster said the Russian budget proposal as it now stood was not conducive to agreement.

Creation Of Special Development Fund—India Supports Brazilian Proposal:

On February 27, the Indian delegate, Mr. R. K. Nehru, supported a Brazilian proposal for creating a special development fund from the money saved from reduction of armaments.

He also suggested that developing countries should cut down their own expenditure on armaments and contribute the savings to the special fund.

He called for a spirit of accommodation from USA and the Soviet Union in considering disarmament measures. He underlined the need for an early agreement on a comprehensive treaty banning all nuclear tests. Nothing should be done about the disposition of existing nuclear weapons which would come in the way of an agreement on preventing the spread of nuclear armaments.

Seven Points Of Agreement:

Britain told the Conference on March 3 that there were seven points on which East and West seemed to agree.

They were: a balance of power of sorts exists, however unsatisfactorily, this balance helped maintain peace; it was in the interests of all to see that a stable balance was kept during the whole disarmament process; the level of the balance should be progressively reduced during disarmament; two methods could be used: first, by the retention of nuclear deterrents on both sides and, secondly, by effective peace-keeping machinery; both sides were closer regarding the situation that would obtain towards the end of disarmament when the nuclear deterrents would be removed and their place taken by the peace-keeping machinery and there must be some form of control of nuclear deterrents during the process of disarmament.

The British delegate said these points provided a basis for the Conference to get down to business, but added that the West awaited word from Russia regarding the size of the nuclear deterrent to be retained by both sides, and why nuclear vehicles such as submarines had been omitted from her proposal.

Reactor For Inspection—US Offer:

The USA announced on March 5 that it would place one of its largest nuclear power reactors under international inspection in the hope that other countries—particularly the Soviet Union—would follow suit.

The US delegate, Mr. Adrian Fisher, told the Conference that the huge Yankee reactor plant at Rowe, Massachusetts, would be placed under inspection of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA).

He said USA hoped that this step would encourage the Soviet Union and other countries to join in a worldwide system to prevent the misuse of civil reactors for clandestine production of nuclear weapons. The IAEA would be invited to undertake permanent inspection of the Yankee reactor "whether or not other States reciprocate. But if they did reciprocate, it would be one of the most significant developments of the Conference."

Three smaller US reactors were already under IAEA inspection to help it develop its procedure to safeguard the peaceful uses of atomic energy.

The privately-owned Yankee reactor is the largest yet to come under IAEA surveillance. It is rated at a power level of 600,000 thermal kw and produced over one billion kw hours of electricity in 1963.

Soviet Plan For Retention Of Nuclear Umbrella—Indian Support:

On March 24, India supported in principle the disarmament plan put forward by the Soviet Foreign Minister, Mr. Andrei Gromyko, for the retention of a nuclear umbrella by both sides during the final stage of disarmament.

The Gromyko proposal envisages a substantial reduction of the existing nuclear arms potential in the world in the initial stage of the actual process of disarmament and the maintenance of a balance of nuclear security with the retention under control by USA and Russia of a strictly limited number of agreed types of missiles till the end of disarmament.

Indirectly referring to China's recent attack on India, the Indian delegate, Mr. V. C. Trivedi said the Conference should examine how the Gromyko plan could cover aggression by conventional arms as well as nuclear weapons.

He said the Conference's work would be facilitated if it accepted in principle the Soviet thesis of a nuclear umbrella. "It appears to me that our work could be speeded up significantly and without affecting any one's position if we could say that we view the nuclear umbrella proposal favourably in principle. We would then go on to a detailed examination of the plan."

He urged that all nations, especially all militarily powerful States, should adhere to a Treaty on general and complete disarmament and implement its provisions right from the start of the process of disarmament.

The US delegate, Mr. Adrian Fisher, told the Conference USA could not accept Mr. Gromyko's proposal as it stood and could not agree with Mr. Trivedi's views.

Russia Approves Poland's "Freeze" Plan:

For the first time, on March 26, the Soviet Union gave official approval to the plan by the Polish Prime Minister, Mr. Wladislaw Gomulka, for a "freeze" of nuclear weapons in Central Europe.

The Soviet delegate, Mr. Semyon Tsarapkin, stressed that the plan had a "particularly positive aspect" in that it would "prevent West Germany from getting atomic weapons".

He said the British paper on observation posts contained nothing new and that it "established control without disarmament" which was unacceptable to the Soviet Union.

But after the session, a British spokesman made it clear that Britain in no way excluded other steps, which, according to the Soviet Union, should accompany the creation of observation posts, such as the reduction of military strength in the zones where the posts were established.

The Canadian Minister for External Affairs, Mr. Paul Martin, said that despite objections to the Gomulka plan, there were points in them that were "worthy of study".

Vol. X No. 29

BURMA

A. Socialist Labour Corps: With effect from May 1, an organization called the Socialist Labour Corps has been formed for the execution of the "Burmese Way" of socialism.

It will be para-military in nature. While it will devote itself to nation-building tasks in peace-time, it will turn into a defence force in times of war.

It has been formed with three main objectives in view:

(1) Better organization of workers now employed in various industries and establishments.

(2) Improved labour productivity through effective supervision of workers.

(3) Protection of workers from exploitation, and at the same time protection of public funds from wastage or leakage.

The principles to be observed by the Corps have also been laid down on the basis of the labour policy contained in the "Burmese way to socialism". One of these principles is that the remuneration of a worker must be commensurate with his work, that no remuneration can be claimed for no work, and that equal remuneration should be enjoyed by workers for equal work.

The main functions of the Corps are:

(1) To work for the success of the Burmese Way socialist programme and thereby help in the creation of a socialist society for workers;

(2) To carry out whatever nation-building tasks the Revolutionary Government might assign to them in co-operation with personnel of the Government Departments concerned; and

(3) To change itself quickly into a military force in times of war and take on the duty of defending the country against the enemy.

A. New Minister Appointed: The Governor-General, Sir William Gopallawa, has appointed Mr. R. S. Pelpola, former Speaker of the House of Representatives, to be Minister of Posts and Tele-communications.

The appointment followed the resignation of Mr. Mahanama Samaraweera, who was sworn-in as Minister of Posts and Tele-communications on June 4 with other members of the coalition Cabinet.

Mr. Pelpola resigned from the office of Speaker in January—two months after a vote of no-confidence in him was narrowly defeated.

CHINA

A. Aid To East Africa: Chinese assistance to East Africa now totals over £22 million. This includes £16 million of aid to the United Republic of Tanganyika and Zanzibar, announced on June 21.

Uganda is the only East African territory which has so far not received Chinese aid. Nevertheless even there, Peking, displacing India in 1963 became Uganda's biggest purchaser of cotton, the country's principal foreign exchange earner.

The offer to the United Republic comprises £10 million interest-free loan with "no conditions attached" for economic and technical assistance and £1 million as gift in addition to another interest-free loan of £5 million to Zanzibar which had been announced before the merger.

The details of the aid were announced in Dar-es-Salaam by the Vice-President, Mr. Rashidi Kawawa, who led a goodwill mission to China and described the agreement as "excellent."

The repayment of the £10 million loan will be in annual instalments from 1965 to 1984 in the form of exports or convertible sterling or any other currency agreed on by the two countries.

B. Purchase Of Soviet Aircraft: China has bought five Soviet Ilyushin-18 V airliners in preference to Caravelles, and may use them for flights to France.

The Chinese concluded the 10,500,000-rouble (£4,200,000) deal with the Soviet Union after negotiating with French representatives for Caravelles and then "changing their minds".

Both the Ilyushin-18 and the Caravelle jet are medium-range airliners.

Officials of Aviaeksport, the Russian selling firm, believed that the Soviet aircraft would be used for the new Peking-Paris and Peking-Havana routes.

The Chinese company also bought from Russia 30 aircraft engines worth 3,500,000 roubles (£1,400,000). China's civil air fleet already has two Ilyushin-18 and at least 20 Ilyushin-14 aircraft.

According to the Aeronautical Correspondent of The Times (London), China's selection of the turbo-prop engined Il-18 instead of the twin-jet Caravelle is interesting. It may be that in their present stage of development the Chinese airlines prefer to gain more operating experience with a propeller-turbine before embarking on their first jet airliner.

There are, however, certain advantages in buying more of a type that they already possess. It simplifies maintenance work on air frames and engines.

Although the Chinese intend to extend their international routes, they have made it clear that this will be done gradually. When they do, they will need jet airliners instead of the slower turbo-props, so that the possibility of buying Caravelles later for medium-range operations cannot be excluded.

INDIA

SUMMARY: State Chief Ministers' Conference; Pakistan Firing Across Jammu Cease-fire Line; UNICEF Grant; Longest Road Bridge.

A. Steps To Bring Down Food Prices—State Chief Ministers' Conference: The Government announced on June 24 a series of short-term steps to bring down the prices of foodgrains and proposed the setting up of a Foodgrains Trading Corporation as one of the long-term measures to keep prices in check in future.

The immediate remedial action included the removal of all restrictions on the movement of rice from Madhya Pradesh to Maharashtra and Gujerat, discontinuance of Government-to-Government trading between these States, termination of the procurement and levy system in Andhra and Madras, withdrawal of restrictions on the movement of rice from Andhra and Madras to other States in the Southern Zone and arrangements for the import of rice from USA and Pakistan.

The Government's plan to meet the situation created by the rise in prices was placed before the State Chief Ministers' meeting in New Delhi on June 24 by the Prime Minister, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, who inaugurated it and Mr. C. Subramaniam, the Central Food and Agriculture Minister.

[But, these steps were later modified as the result of discussions at the Conference, and new decisions were announced—see below.]

In his opening speech, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri stressed the importance of fixing a proper price for the producer as well as the maximum price that the consumer should be called upon to pay. He felt that there was no shortage of grain in the country and prices could be kept in check through a firm and judicious handling of the situation.

Creation of buffer stocks should be a permanent policy of the Government, but procurement should be made without causing any hardship to the producer. He was not opposed to State trading in grain, but at the same time he felt that any major steps in this field should be taken only after adequate preparation.

He laid emphasis on increasing the production of grain and suggested that the Fourth Five-Year Plan should give greater emphasis to small industries and agriculture.

An important suggestion he made was that Ministers and officials should tour the villages and stay there for some time to come in direct contact with cultivators and their problems. On his part he would make it a point to spend a few days whenever possible in some villages. He would go there without the pomp and show that is attached to the office of Prime Minister.

The largest number of complaints from cultivators, he said, related to the Irrigation Department. Even when water was there it was not being properly utilized because officials had got into the habit of dealing with a problem "in a routine manner".

He stressed the need for greater attention to the package programme, which was to serve as a model to the rest of the country.

He also advised the Department of Community Development to devote its entire attention to agriculture for at least a year.

Explaining the proposal for the establishment of a Foodgrains Trading Corporation, Mr. Subramaniam said that it would buy from the producers at prices announced ahead of the season and sell to the retailers also at specified prices. To begin with it should deal only in rice. In the initial stages this Government-owned agency should take a licence like any other private food trader. The Government would reserve the right to call upon any wholesaler to hand over to the Corporation such portions of their stocks as might be necessary in the public interest but at prices which had already been declared and subject to allowed margins.

The demand for the abolition of wheat zones was referred to in his speech earlier by Mr. Subramaniam. He said that it would not be proper to disturb the zonal restrictions. The Government had adequate supplies to meet the demands of the States. The USA had agreed to step up the despatch of wheat considerably so that every month the country would be receiving more than 4,00,000 tonnes. The Government was confident that with these arrivals and with the stocks in hand, it should be possible to meet the demand for wheat.

He also stressed the importance of enforcing the licensing regulations recently introduced. He said that the Government would always be willing to review these controls if they should stand in the way of the smooth functioning of the trade. But subject to that, existing rules and regulations would have to be enforced strictly. For this purpose the Government would have to build up an adequate machinery. The Central Finance Minister had agreed to the Central Government sharing this cost with the State Governments.

Decisions:

The Chief Ministers' Conference, which ended on June 26, decided to set up immediately adequate machinery for the proper enforcement of control measures and to prevent profiteering, blackmarketing, hoarding and other anti-social practices.

It also agreed to sponsor a scientific study to fix the maximum prices of rice and wheat in different States.

Another important decision was to withdraw all restrictions, formal or informal, on the movement of coarse grains or pulses from one State to another or within a State.

The movement of gram from certain States, regulated with the approval of the Central Government, would, however, continue to be so regulated. Adequate quantities of imported wheat would be made available by the Centre to such States where coarse grains are grown to meet shortages caused by unusual movement of such grains to other States.

Addressing the concluding session the Prime Minister, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, gave the assurance that for the next two months there would be absolutely no difficulty in the supply of wheat and rice to needy States.

He said that the quantities offered by the Central Food and Agriculture Minister to the Chief Ministers were generally acceptable to the latter. It was possible to be satisfied on this score because quick imports were expected.

A notable feature of his address was his appeal to traders to play fair coupled with the warning that misdeeds would be sternly dealt with.

The most important of the long-term measures, the setting up of a Food Trading Corporation proposed by Mr. Subramaniam on the opening day, did not find direct mention in any of the major speeches on June 26. Mr. Shastri merely said that apart from the short-term measures, "we will be failing in our duty if we do not take long-term measures at the earliest possible time."

Mr. Subramaniam appeared to have the proposal for a Corporation in mind when he observed: "We hope to draw up a detailed programme for food trading with reference to the public sector and the private sector and I hope by these methods it will be possible for us to control the trade in such a way that it gives satisfaction to producers and at the same time the consumers are enabled to get the grains at reasonable prices."

The Conference took the following other decisions:

(1) Procurement of rice in Andhra Pradesh and Madras would be stopped immediately and all restrictions on the movement of rice and paddy within the Southern Zone would be withdrawn forthwith.

(2) Maximum control prices and distribution of foodgrains in West Bengal would continue as at present.

(3) Wheat zones as constituted at present would be maintained. The Central Government would, however, make arrangements for supply of adequate stocks of wheat to deficit States.

B. Pakistan Firing Across Cease-fire Line In Jammu And Kashmir: Pakistani raiders fired at Indian troops in four sectors of the cease-fire line in Jammu and Kashmir on June 21.

The raiders withdrew after sustaining casualties in the clashes with Indian troops.

A foreign news agency message from Rawalpindi that Indian troops had suffered more than 100 casualties was contradicted by an official spokesman in New Delhi.

It was officially stated that in the early hours of June 21, Pakistani troops fired at Indian posts in the Uri, Naushera, Poonch and Mendhar sectors. The fire was returned by Indian troops.

"In the Uri sector, Pakistani troops withdrew, leaving the body of a soldier, two sten magazines, some cartridges and one loaded bren magazine. Subsequently marks of bodies having been dragged were observed, indicating that the raiders must have suffered more casualties."

Two constables of the Central Reserve Police were killed in the Poonch sector while two other CRP constables were wounded in the Mendhar sector.

"Cease-fire violation complaints have been lodged with the UN Observers by the Government of India."

There was further firing by Pakistan troops across the cease-fire line on June 23 and on subsequent days.

C. West German Loan: West Germany gave on June 26 a further DM40 million (about £3,600,000) development aid loan to India.

The loan is tied to purchases of some 25 commodities, mainly industrial machinery, from West German firms.

An Indian Embassy spokesman in Bonn said the loan was the first agreed under the total of DM308 million promised by West Germany for India's Third Five-Year Plan.

Negotiations for allocation of the rest of this sum committed to the third year of the Plan will begin shortly.

D. UNICEF Grant For Indian Schemes: The Executive Board of UNICEF approved on June 24 fresh commitments to a number of Indian schemes in the fields of education, nutrition help and disease control.

Of the total commitment of nearly $30,000,000 sanctioned by the Board, over $7,000,000 is for the Indian schemes. The largest of these is a fresh commitment of $3,700,000 for improving the nutrition of rural households and $1,890,000 for help in establishing and expanding a comprehensive scheme of rural health service.

Besides the new commitments, two projects which were approved in 1963 and for which commitments were sanctioned, have received allocations for this year. The Ludhiana Milk Scheme gets $200,000 and the pre-vocational training scheme $178,000.

E. Shipyard At Cochin—Agreement With Japanese Firm: The Mitsubishi Heavy Industries announced on June 22 that it had signed an Agreement with the Indian Government for the building of a shipyard at Cochin, as a joint concern.

Details of investment and technical aid by Mitsubishi will be decided in future negotiations with the Indian Government.

The shipyard will be built as part of India's Third Five-Year Plan and will comprise among other things a dock of 30,000 deadweight tons and a slipway of 15,000 deadweight tons.

The cost of the project is estimated at about $18,000,000 (about Rs. 85 million).

F. Tele-communications Agreement With Nepal: A Tele-communications Agreement between India and Nepal was signed in New Delhi on June 25.

The Agreement provides for the opening of a direct wireless circuit between Delhi and Khatmandu and a direct radio-telephone circuit between Calcutta and Khatmandu.

The equipment for operating the circuits has been supplied by USA under the Tripartite Agreement between the Governments of India, Nepal and USA, which was signed in 1958.

Under the Agreement, India will provide full transit facilities for telegrams and telephone calls between Nepal and all other countries.

The Agreement was signed by Mr. S. K. Kanpilal, Member, Posts and Telegraphs Board on behalf of India and by Mr. H. P. Upadhyaya, Nepal's Chief Engineer (Tele-communications) signed it on behalf of the Nepal Government.

The Indian Minister for Communications, Mr. Satya Narayan Sinha, speaking at the ceremony, thanked the Nepalese delegation and said the Agreement was another example of the co-operative endeavours of the two countries.

Reciprocating the sentiment, Mr. Upadhyaya said the Agreement would strengthen relations between India and Nepal.

G. Longest Road Bridge Opened: The Central Minister for Steel and Mines, Mr. N. Sanjiva Reddi, opened on June 28 a road bridge—the longest so far in the country—over the Mahanadi River.

A vital link in the Calcutta-Madras national highway, the bridge is about 1.5 miles long. It has 45 main spans and two end spans. The roadway is 24 feet wide with a five-feet-wide footpath on either side.

Along with it was opened a bridge across the Birupa—a tributary of the Mahanadi. It is 1,800 feet long and has 15 spans.

The entire project, comprising these two bridges and approach roads, cost Rs. 3 crores. The Mahanadi bridge cost Rs. 1.65 crores. It was financed with credit from the International Development Association and built by the Hindustan Construction Company.

With the construction of the new bridges, the State Capital has been connected by all-weather roads to the western districts which hitherto were inaccessible for nearly six months every year.

Mr. Reddi, in a brief speech at the ceremony, said the bridge had a "national purpose and importance" because all eastern States, including West Bengal, Orissa, Andhra and Madras, would benefit from it. He disagreed with those who singled out Orissa as a backward State because many States were in the "same boat." Industrially developed States were deficit in food but Orissa was among those States which had the good fortune to produce enough food not only for its own requirements but also to spare some for its neighbours.

He said the Central Government had assigned top priority to food production because it wanted to dispense with food imports in four or five years from now.

The Orissa Governor, Dr. A. N. Khosla, while stressing the importance of this bridge on the Calcutta-Madras national highway, also stressed the importance of navigational canals "which provide the cheapest means of transport in coastal areas".

He said the Calcutta-Madras and Calcutta-Bombay national highways passed through Orissa and these two were connected through a number of State highways and district roads. All these taken together, even after all the streams had been bridged, would provide relatively poor road coverage in Orissa, leaving vast areas still without communication facilities.

He added: "Despite its immense resources, Orissa continues to be about the most backward State in India in respect of communications and mainly, therefore, in respect of all aspects of development. It has close to 50 per cent of the mineral wealth of India and 10 per cent of its water wealth.

"Of the total 38 million acres area in the State, about 14 million acres are cultivated and more areas can be brought under cultivation. Most of them are potentially rich and fertile, but the present yields per acre are about the lowest in India."

H. Nehru Memorial To Be Set Up: The Prime Minister, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, announced in New Delhi on June 27 that the Teen Murti house of the late Mr. Nehru would be converted into a memorial to the departed leader.

All available material connected with Mr. Nehru's life and activities—letters, manuscripts, photographs and other personalia—would be exhibited in the house to enable the visitors to have a full glimpse of his personality.

Mr. Nehru, he said, had lived in this house for 16 years and it had come to be identified with his life and work.

"Panditji, however, had wide contacts and had travelled widely. In order that all facets of his rich life may find full expression in this memorial, I appeal to all persons in India and abroad to send to Mrs. Indira Gandhi at Teen Murti House, New Delhi, any letters received by them from Panditji or any special photographs that they may have in their possession. Many people must have such mementos with them.

"People may also wish to recount anecdotes relating to Panditji which reveal something characteristic or significant about him. Anything, indeed, which would enrich the memorial and give it a living quality would be most welcome. Newspapers, periodicals and journals, as well as professional photographers would also have valuable material with them and their generosity in this matter would be highly appreciated.

"All contributions would be gratefully acknowledged."

He issued this appeal on behalf of the Steering Committee set up to co-ordinate action to commemorate the memory of Mr. Nehru.

ISRAEL

A. De-salination Project: It was reported on June 19 that the US-Israeli Agreement to embark on a joint water de-salination project is to be implemented in four stages.

They are: a joint technological, hydrological, agricultural and economic study by a panel of three Israeli and three American specialists to be concluded in six weeks; the construction of scale models of the reactor and still by both Israeli and American engineers; invitation to tender for the full-scale plant; and the actual construction of the plant.

The International Atomic Energy Agency is to be invited to participate in the programme from the outset and knowledge and experience obtained from the implementation of the project will be made available to all countries with water deficiencies.

A preliminary report puts the optimum size of a still at 200 million cubic metres a year but suggests linking several in a series with a 1,500-megawatt capacity reactor to produce 1,000 million cubic metres a year, which is about Israel's present total water consumption. The development of a single still is estimated to take 10 to 15 years and cost $70 million. The cost of water from a large reactor linked with several stills is estimated at about 6d a cubic metre, which is competitive with present costs of irrigation in several parts of Israel. This, however, is simply the cost of producing the sweet water and does not take into account the cost of conveying it to where it is needed.

JAPAN

A. Mr. R. A. Butler's Visit: The British Foreign Secretary, Mr. Richard A. Butler, visited Tokyo in the first week of May when he had discussions with Japanese leaders.

The discussions covered a wide range of topics, with particular reference to the Federation of Malaysia, Indonesia, Viet-Nam, Laos, Cambodia and developments with regard to China.

A communique issued on May 4 noted a close similarity of views and understanding of each other's position during the talks.

The communique said: "The Rt. Hon. Mr. R. A. Butler, British Foreign Secretary, accompanied by Mrs. Butler, visited Japan from May 1 to 5 for the second round of the regular Anglo-Japanese consultations agreed between the two Governments following the visit to Tokyo of Sir Alec Douglas-Home in the Spring of 1963. The first of these consultations was held when Mr. Masayoshi Ohira, Foreign Minister of Japan, visited Britain in September, 1963.

"Mr. Butler and Mr. Ohira had talks on a wide range of topics including South-East Asian questions with particular reference to the Federation of Malaysia, Indonesia, Viet-Nam, Laos and Cambodia, and developments with regard to China. These subjects were also discussed when Mr. Butler called on Mr. Hayato Ikeda, Prime Minister of Japan. Other topics, including East-West relations, disarmament, events in Cyprus and economic questions were taken up between Mr. Butler and Mr. Ohira.

"These exchanges promoted the understanding of each other's position on all problems of mutual interest and confirmed that a close similarity of view on various questions existed between the two Governments. They also re-emphasized the value of these regular consultations for the maintenance and further development of good relations between Britain and Japan.

"Mr. Butler and Mr. Ohira signed today the Consular Convention between Britain and Japan.

"It was agreed that the next round of regular consultations should take place in London some time towards the end of this year."

B. Earthquake: Earth tremors shook several parts of northern Japan on June 16, leaving at least 25 dead and vast areas desolate.

The worst hit area was Niigata, on the north-west of Honshu island. One-third of Niigata city, which has a population of 290,000, was damaged and firemen and troops throughout northern Japan were mobilized to take part in the emergency rescue and evacuation operations.

The earthquake, which lasted just over two minutes took place soon after 1 p.m. and was felt throughout northern Honshu from Kanazawa on the coast of the Sea of Japan to Tokyo, where great buildings shuddered for an uncomfortably long time.

In Niigata, however, the earthquake brought terror. Wide breaches appeared in the streets, buildings lurched, bridges collapsed, oil tanks ignited spectacularly, and the River Shinano flooded the lower town. Frightened people flocked to the open space of the university campus.

Gas and electricity supplies were immediately switched off, which probably averted a greater disaster, as most of the water mains burst. Four spans of a long road bridge, completed only a week before, collapsed into the river, and another fell across and stopped all traffic beyond a 90-mile arc north-west of Tokyo.

C. Conspirators Sentenced: The trial of 12 men accused of plotting a coup d'etat in Japan, the first of its kind uncovered since the War, has ended after nearly two years.

The Tokyo district court has passed prison sentences on three extreme Right-wing conspirators and suspended sentences on five others.

All the accused were arrested in December, 1961, just before the plot was due to be put into effect. The plan, it was alleged, was to assassinate Ministers and members of the Diet in order to seize power and install a Government of Sammu, an organization which is pledged to a creed of three noes—no taxes, no war, no unemployment—and which would be a safeguard against a Japanese communist revolution.

The ringleader, Toyosaku Kawanami (62), former president of Kawanami shipbuilding company, was sentenced to two years' imprisonment; Eigo Shinoda (41), chairman of the Japan Reformist Student Association, and Kazuomi Koike (37), director of the extremist Kokushikai (Japanese History Association) and former Military Academy cadet, were both given 18 months. Five others, three of whom were in their twenties, were given eight months' suspended sentences. Four were acquitted. Ten other suspects, including prominent former members of the Imperial Army, had been released in 1963.

Police said they stumbled on the plot after seizing a fishing boat in which Kawanami was alleged to be attempting to smuggle weapons from South Korea. Weapons, helmets, and gas masks were subsequently seized.

A. Dismissal Of Corrupt Officials: Addressing his first news conference since Martial Law was imposed in Seoul, the Prime Minister, Mr. Ching Il Kwon, announced on June 8 that 576 Government officials including at least one Deputy Minister would be dismissed for misbehaviour and corruption.

[The Martial Law was imposed on June 3 to combat student rioting.]

Mr. Chung, the former Foreign Minister who formed a new Government only a month before, said that to combat official dishonesty, all higher Government officials would be asked voluntarily to declare all properties and holdings.

He opened his news conference by reading a message to public officials appealing for harder work and more discipline. Widespread alleged official misdeeds had been the prime target for the wrath of discontented students and other members of the public.

President Park Chung Hee ordered the publication of the names of all persons arrested under Martial Law conditions, together with details of charges against them, to counter rumours circulating through the Capital. The arrests of prominent journalists and teachers, including the publisher of the leading opposition newspaper, have deeply disturbed many Koreans and foreign observers.

On June 23, the Cabinet approved a draft Bill to authorize the Martial Law Commander to censor the Press under "precautionary Martial Law." This was interpreted as an indication that the Government was planning to replace the present emergency Martial Law—including Press censorship—imposed in Seoul on June 3 following anti-Government student demonstrations, with precautionary Martial Law, which has less restrictions, and at present excludes censorship.

MALAYSIA

A. Collapse Of "Summit" Talks: It was officially announced in Kuala Lumpur on May 30, that agreement had been reached between Malaysia, Indonesia and the Philippines to hold fresh "summit" discussions in Tokyo.

The "summit" meeting was to be preceded by a meeting of Foreign Ministers.

Agreement to such discussions was reached at the initiative of the Philippine Foreign Minister, Mr. Salvador Lopez.

The official statement said that Indonesia had accepted the principle of withdrawal of its forces, both regular and irregular, from Sabah (North Borneo) and Sarawak. Their removal would be simultaneous with the meeting of the Foreign Ministers. The Thai Government would be asked to send observers to verify the withdrawal. As soon as this was confirmed and the agenda agreed upon, the three Heads of State would meet.

to arrange another "summit" almost failed over the question of withdrawal.

The Prime Minister, Tengku Abdul Rehman, would not budge from his stand that he could not negotiate so long as foreign troops were on Malaysian soil, as the nation's dignity and sovereignty were involved. President Sukarno proposed a token withdrawal, but this was rejected.

The second meeting of the Heads of Indonesia, Malaysia and Philippines was held in Tokyo on June 20. The conference failed to produce any results. [For earlier "summit" meeting please see page 5426].

Though an agreement of kinds was reached to establish an Afro-Asian Conciliation Commission to recommend solutions for existing problems, this was no more than a polite parting gesture to the Philippine efforts. In the present deadlock the Commission could not be formed.

Tengku Abdul Rehman accepted the principle of a Commission on the proviso that all acts of hostility against Malaysia should cease forthwith. President Su-

The attempts since May 12 by Mr. Lopez karno, while agreeing to establish a Commission and abide by its recommendations, refused to give any such undertaking.

From the start, according to participants, President Sukarno, or more precisely his Foreign Minister, Dr. Subandrio insisted that Indonesia had never accepted the existence of "this Malaysia". The Indonesians maintained that the procedure of its formation had violated last year's Manila accord.

The Indonesian stand was: Back to the position before the formation of Malaysia and remove the humiliation and insult inflicted on Indonesia by Britain.

The Tengku and Tun Abdul Razak, his Foreign Minister, retorted that the Manila accord had been fully implemented. Confrontation, aggression, and interference in their internal affairs must cease before the Commission discussed political matters.

The Malaysians said in effect: "You may oppose our formation, but you cannot justify military action against us, either under the United Nations Charter or the Bandung declaration. You may put your objections to the Commission, but there is no point in having it if you seek a settlement militarily."

To this the Indonesians retorted that they were not committing aggression, because they did not recognize Malaysia. The guerrillas were not fighting Malaysia but helping to liberate the peoples of those territories.

And so it went on with occasional Indonesian broadsides against Britain. President Sukarno was reported as saying that he was not blaming the Tengku, but when United Nations investigated Sabah and Sarawak last Autumn the British had humiliated Indonesia. It was not so much the result as the procedure which was important. Indonesia had since been made the laughing stock of the world. Malaysia had been imposed on them by British bayonets and the Federation would collapse when the bayonets were withdrawn.

Tun Abdul Razak contradicted, saying that Indonesia was fighting against a sovereign, independent Asian country and was aiding dissidents.

Dr. Subandrio then accused Britain of thinking that she could undertake military action whenever she wanted. Indonesia did not want a sudden British attack. Indonesia had British documents showing that the British planned surprise attacks in Sumatra, but Indonesia would be no walk-over.

The final deadlock came when the Philippines suggested that the Commission should begin work anyway. The Malaysians, however, were not to be moved.

President Sukarno stuck by phased withdrawal.

In an interview later, Dr. Subandrio took a more flexible line. He said in a reference to the United Nations survey of opinion in the Borneo territories: "How can we think that the assessment of opinion for Malaysia in North Kalimantan could be made in nine days? Implementation of the agreement was a farce. How can you expect people to say what they are for in front of a microphone and surrounded by soldiers? I am deeply impressed by the few who said they were against.

"And what about the detainees and absentees who are the real leaders of the people? How can you say this was a democratic process? It was tearing down the Manila Agreement."

Asked whether Indonesia thought that the Commission's team should include a further review of opinion in the Borneo territories and if Indonesia would accept a conclusion favourable to Malaysia, he said: "Yes, we have agreed to abide by their decision, but we do not know yet what their terms of reference will be."

He thought that perhaps the Commission would have some better idea than a new review. Dr. Subandrio, asked what he thought of United Nations sponsorship of the Commission, replied: "I don't know that the United Nations should be involved at this time. The United Nations has already been involved and once you get to the Security Council it will become Big Power politics."

On relations with Britain, he replied: "It depends. We have all to restrain ourselves and try to preserve as much as possible of our normal relationship."

Supposing there were an eventual agreement, would Indonesia be happy to see Malaysia keep her defence agreement with Britain in connexion with her bases? Dr. Subandrio replied: "We are not so far yet. The bases are there and we want to coexist with them. We get the impression however that the British bases are there against Indonesia and not against communism."

Asked about a deadline for crushing Malysia, he replied: "We did not say 'crush'; we said there would be a solution by 1965. You see Ganjang Malaysia is not so harsh as the English 'Crush Malaysia'. It really means no more than 'confront'. We have no desire to swallow up Malaysia. We have no claim, no territorial claim. We feel ourselves humiliated by the formation of Malaysia."

The talks broke down, the Tengku said, because of Indonesia's refusal. It was the least he could ask Indonesia. "I have given in a lot, but they must not expect me to give in any more. The meeting has shown beyond any doubt President Sukarno's attitude towards us and towards peace in this region. Acceptance of the proposed Commission is tantamount to a compromise on our sovereignty." Yet Malaysia was prepared to accept if only Indonesia ceased hostilities and honoured pledges to withdraw guerrillas.

Further Recruitment Of Armed Forces:

Earlier, on June 4, the Malaysian Government, which has already expanded its armed forces to meet Indonesian confrontation, announced that between 12,000 and 15,000 men aged between 21 and 29 would be called up for military or civil defence training.

A Government statement said that more than 400,000 people in Malaya and more than 77,000 in Singapore aged between 21 and 29 had registered for national service.

Those called up for military service would be given full training, after which they would be either posted to regular units of the Royal Malaysian Army or placed on a five-year reserve list. During the reserve period they would train with the Regular Army for a fortnight every year.

The statement said that those called up for civil defence would perform part-time duties for the present. It was stated that conscription would be extended to Singapore, Sarawak and Sabah (North Borneo).

Mr. R. A. Butler's Statement In House Of Commons:

The British Foreign Secretary, Mr. R. A. Butler, re-affirmed on June 25 that Britain was in close touch with the Malaysian Government over Indonesia's campaign of hostility. However, it was for the Malaysian Government to decide whether the matter should be brought before United Nations.

He was replying to a Parliamentary question asking if he would instruct the British Representative at United Nations to bring the present situation to the attention of the Security Council as a threat to world peace.

In a written answer, he said: "The Indonesian guerrillas are operating on Malaysian territory. It is therefore for Malaysia to take the decision and the initiative over action in the United Nations.

"We are naturally in close touch with the Malaysian Government on this as on all other aspects of the situation arising from Indonesia's hostility, which has obliged us to commit our forces under our defence agreement."

A. Talks On Independence: The British Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations and the Colonies, Mr. Duncan Sandys, announced in the House of Commons on June 23 that negotiations between the British and Maldivian Governments were taking place on the revision of the Agreement of 1960 so as "to enable the Maldive Islands to become a fully independent, sovereign State."

He was replying to a question by Mr. Arthur Bottomley, who had asked whether he would make a statement on the future of Britain's relations with the Maldives.

In a written reply, Mr. Sandys said: "When I visited Male last September the Maldivian Prime Minister expressed the desire that the Agreement of 1960 between his Government and the British Government should be revised so as to enable the Maldive Islands to become a fully independent, sovereign State, on the understanding that the rights and facilities enjoyed at present by the British Government in Addu Atoll would be confirmed, and that no military rights and facilities would be accorded in the Maldives to any other country.

"The British Government have informed the Government of the Maldive Islands that they are willing to revise the agreement on the lines proposed. Detailed negotiations are now proceeding."

PAKISTAN

A. President Ayub Khan Criticises US Policy On India And China: In an interview with the British paper Daily Mail on June 23, President Ayub Khan spoke of "lavish US aid to India" and said that in contrast to the Dulles-Eisenhower era, "now the Americans do not hesitate to let down their friends".

He said of the new attitude of the US Administration: "Today their policy is based on opportunism and is devoid of moral quality."

Referring to what he called the "confrontation" in the Far East between USA and China, he warned that "this American agglomeration of power on the periphery of China increases the risk of another Korean-type war".

He opposed the military build-up in India against Chinese or other penetration. "Now American, Soviet and British policy regarding India is virtually the same—to build up that nation against the Chinese or other penetration. This is a fallacy. No nation in its senses would try to occupy India. It just can't be done. But the effect of giving arms to India will be to enable her to threaten her neighbours, of whom Pakistan is top on the list."

According to the interviewer, Mr. Mair, F-M Ayub Khan "calmly ripped US foreign policy apart" in what was probably his most outspoken criticism so far of the "lavish US aid to India."

Complaining that America's "lavish aid to India was not merely injustice to Pakistan, but was also based on misconception of Chinese intentions" he declared: "China has no intention of invading the sub-continent and never had. The situation could have been avoided had India negotiated a border settlement after China occupied Tibet.

"Instead India increased her military budget by 300 per cent. This resulted in increased prices for food and clothing." In a vast country where so many people are already hungry the effect actually was to promote communism.

He also criticised the present polarisation of world power between Washington and Moscow. Arguing as to "why should the developing countries be dependent on either Power bloc", he called for "the creation of an economic and cultural group taking in Islam, Western Europe, Britain and the Commonwealth."

Adjournment Motion In National Assembly On US Aid To India Talked Out:

A motion in the National Assembly which sought adjournment of the House to discuss the situation arising out of the US decision to provide long-term military assistance to India and the impending visit of the Indian Defence Minister to UK and USSR to negotiate further arms aid was talked out on June 22.

Winding up the debate on the motion, the Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto said: "The time has come for Pakistan to undertake a re-appraisal of its foreign policy and review her political and military commitments."

These commitments, he said, were made under a particular situation which had now changed with the Washington decision to give "massive" long-term aid to India.

He told the House that his Government had made every endeavour to express concern over aid to India at the highest level. The direct consequences of the American decision were pointed out but without the desired effect. Consequently, the time had come for a re-appraisal of the country's foreign policy.

He said there was a basic difference in concept of the American aid to India and Pakistan. Pakistan, he said, received arms in lieu of certain commitments and obligations she had undertaken. India had no such commitment or obligation. This made a fundamental difference in the situation.

If American aid was guided by her global interests she must also take into consideration the interests of her allies.

The Western Powers' decision to give long-term aid to the tune of about $100 million annually to India, he pointed out, had made the solution of Kashmir more delicate and difficult. Kashmir, was most fundamental for Pakistan. "We have to look afresh on our responsibilities in view of the changed conditions."

He said at the time when the solution of disputes with India looked possible, the American decision on massive aid had complicated the issue. Arms aid to India was bound to "retard our efforts to ameliorate the lot of our masses economically and cause further tension in Asia at large. It is bound to aggravate the situation further."

Briefly recounting Pakistan's efforts to settle differences with New Delhi, he said there were elements in India which had not yet reconciled to partition of the subcontinent. They were still trying for reunification. "We have to contain such elements."

B. US Loan For Reclamation Of Land: The US acting Director of AID, Mr. Maurice J. Williams, announced in Karachi on June 26 a US loan of $18,100,000 to help reclaim 1,300,000 acres of the Chaj Doab in West Pakistan.

This brings the total of US loans for reclamation projects in the Province to more than $44.8 million and the total of US economic assistance to Pakistan to $2.93 billion.

American loans for reclamation are financing the construction of more than 3,800 tubewells and the desalinization, drainage and irrigation of more than 3 million acres of the upper Indus plain.

An AID loan of $15.2 million has already helped reclaim nearly 1.2 million acres in the Rechna Doab and a subsequent AID loan of $10.8 million is now assisting in the reclamation of an additional 6,23,000 acres in the Chaj Doab.

In announcing the loan, Mr. Williams noted that the terms were the most generous of any lending country to any borrowing country. This loan is repayable in US dollars in 40 years, including a 10-year grace period, during which no repayment is required. Interest on the loan is at a rate of three quarters of 1 per cent per year during the first 10 years and 2 per cent per annum thereafter.

The credit Agreement was reached after five days of intensive negotiations. Repayment is to be made within five years after the receipt of the first consignment, which is expected within three months. A two-year grace has been allowed for the repayment of the first instalment. Interest is at 3 per cent.

About two dozen young engineers, technicians, electricians, and field supervisors will be sent to Russia for training in handling Soviet-made machinery.

D. Accord With USSR On Radio Programmes: According to a Press release from the Soviet Embassy in Karachi on June 18, Pakistan and USSR will exchange radio programmes on cultural and scientific subjects and musical compositions under the Cultural and Scientific Exchange Programme signed at Rawalpindi.

The Exchange Agreement, the Press release said, was "bound to bring the people of the two countries still closer to each other." In continuation of their efforts to further develop closer cultural and scientific co-operation between the two countries, an agreement on Cultural and Scientific Exchange Programme for 1964 was signed between Pakistan and USSR at Rawalpindi on June 11.

"Relations between Pakistan and USSR are improving with each passing day. A number of Pakistani post-graduates are already studying in Soviet universities and institutes and several scientists and specialists from USSR have participated in scientific conferences in Pakistan.

"Last October, a delegation of Pakistani film and radio artistes won the hearts of Soviet lovers of art in many Soviet cities and were highly praised everywhere in USSR.

"The new Agreement is bound to bring the people of the two countries still nearer to each other as many exchanges in the fields of science, culture and education are envisaged under the Agreement.

"The Pakistani public would get acquainted with the Soviet stage artistes and a Soviet film festival will also be organized in Karachi. Moscow citizens will in return get an opportunity of enjoying the premiere of a Pakistani film.

"The Programme signed at Rawalpindi includes the exchange of scientists working in the fields of science vital for both the countries. Steps will also be taken to establish scientific contacts between Tashkent State University and a Pakistani university. A team of Pakistani specialists will also leave for the Soviet Union to study the Soviet system of public education.

"The two countries will also exchange radio programmes on cultural and scientific subjects and musical recordings.

"The first of its kind, the Agreement of goodwill between Pakistan and the Soviet Union will surely help our peoples to better understand each other and to strengthen good neighbourly relations."

A. General Maxwell Taylor Appointed US Ambassador—US Policy In S-E Asia: President L. B. Johnson of USA announced on June 23 that General Maxwell Taylor, Chairman of the US Joint Chiefs of Staff, would succeed Mr. Henry Cabot Lodge as US Ambassador to South Viet-Nam. Mr. Lodge had resigned for personal reasons.

The appointment of General Taylor, the country's most senior officer, is a further indication of the Administration's determination to defend South-East Asia against communist incursions.

General Taylor will be assisted by Mr. Alexis Johnson, the Deputy Under-Secretary of State for Political Affairs, who has been appointed Deputy Ambassador. He is the fourth in seniority of the State Department officials and is a career officer.

General Taylor's appointment was considered more significant after President Johnson spoke at an impromptu news conference of his policy in South-East Asia.

This policy, he said, could still be summarized in four simple propositions which he gave on June 2:

"(1) America keeps her word.

"(2) The issue is the future of South-East Asia as a whole.

"(3) Our purpose is peace.

"(4) This is not just a jungle war but a struggle for freedom on every front of human activity."

At that news conference he had re-affirmed his country's determinatios to stand by its commitments to help defend South-East Asia against communist encroachment, but said that he knew of no plans being made to carry the war into North Viet-Nam.

He declined to say that the dispatch of American troops to Thailand was being considered, but his remarks indicated that the increased apprehension which led to the Honolulu conference had not yet persuaded him that communist encroachment could be stopped only by force.

He sought the bipartisan support by saying that the present commitment was no less and no more than that made by President D. D. Eisenhower in 1954 to South Viet-Nam—a commitment to help people help themselves. "But we are concerned for a whole great geographic area, not simply for specific complex problems in specific countries. We have one single central purpose in all that we do in South-East Asia, and that is to help build a stable peace.

"It is others and not we who have brought terror to small countries and peaceful peasants...who have preached and practised the use of force to establish dictatorial control over their neighbours ...who have refused to honour international agreements that aim at reasonable settlement of deep-seated differences.

"The United States cannot fail to do its full share to meet the challenge which is posed by those who disturb the peace of South-East Asia, but the purpose of America will not change. We stand for peace."

He said that American soldiers were doing great work in South Viet-Nam, but it was only part of the job to be done. The issues were political as well as military, economic as well as strategic.

He recalled that more than half of the recent extra appropriations for South Viet-Nam was for economic help, and said that the Honolulu conference was concerned with plans for progress as well as programmes against terror. "It is others who make war, and we who seek peace."

He said: "I have said before that there is danger in South-East Asia. It is a danger brought on by the terrorism and aggression so clearly, if secretly, directed from Hanoi. The United States intends no rashness, and seeks no wider war. But the United States is determined to use its strength to help those who are defending themselves against terror and aggression. We are a people of peace, but not of weakness and timidity.

"I repeat again that our purpose is peace. Our people in South Viet-Nam are helping to protect people against terror; they are also helping—and they will help more—in increasing agricultural production, in expanding medical help and building a sense of hope.

"They are helping—and they will help more—to give confidence to those who seek to help themselves, and modern equipment to those who can use it, and friendly counsel to those who are giving leadership. These are proud people, and the task of building their peace and progress is their own—but they can count on our help for as long as they need and want it."

He also felt that the American position was now well understood by North Viet-Nam and China. "I think I would say we believe they are aware of our attitude and they have no doubt about our policy or position."

General Taylor has been closely connected with South Viet-Nam since the late President Kennedy decided to fight communist insurgency with similar weapons. Indeed, he was a party to that decision and has frequently visited the country with Mr. Robert McNamara, the Secretary of Defence. In recent Congressional evidence he said that the war could be won with the necessary determination and effort.

B. Council Of Notables Dissolved: It was officially announced in Saigon on April 5 that the Government had decided to dissolve immediately the Council of Notables.

A new group of law-makers would be chosen by the people in four to six months to draw up a new Constitution.

It was further announced that all men between the ages of 20 and 45 who were not members of the armed forces would be required to serve in a "Civil Defence Service". They would be organized for such tasks as self-defence against Viet-Cong guerrillas and emergency work against natural disasters.

The announcement of these decisions was made by General Do Mau, Vice-Premier in charge of social and cultural questions.

The Council of Notables was an advisory body created after the overthrow of the late President Ngo Dinh Diem in November, 1963.

YEMEN

A. Telephone Link With World: Yemen established a long-distance telephone link with the rest of the world on June 7. A radio-telephone connexion with Cairo is to operate for two hours a day.

To inaugurate the service, the Prime Minister, Mr. Hamud El Jaefy phoned his two children at school in Cairo.

The Ministry of Communications also announced that an East German firm had signed a contract to double the number of telephones in the Capital of Sanaa from 500 to 1,000.

The Ministry said that West Germany, too, had offered to increase telephone facilities in the southern city of Taez, where a US aid programme is installing telephone lines to the seaport of Mocha.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

SUMMARY: Kennedy Round Of Trade Negotiations; ITU Administrative Council Meeting; Expansion Of UN Security Council; Blue Streak Rocket Launched.

A. "Kennedy Round" Of Negotiations To Reduce Trade Barriers: The "Kennedy Round" of negotiations to reduce trade barriers began in Geneva on May 4. Ministers and delegates of 37 countries of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) took part in the negotiations.

The United States representative, Mr. C. Herter, read a message to the conference from President Lyndon B. Johnson. It said that USA looked upon the negotiations as an important development for a better world. All countries of the world had a right to expect success from the endeavours.

The British representative, Mr. E. Heath, said his country was ready to negotiate the proposed 50 per cent tariff cuts over a wide field.

The Japanese delegate said that continued trade discrimination would prevent his country from offering tariff reductions.

The discord among the leading countries in the Kennedy Round came into the open again on May 5. Differences between the European Common Market and USA on the terms of the communique, though they were described by officials as largely semantic, somewhat soured the ministerial meeting.

The intention of the communique, which had been agreed by the United States, Britain, and other members of GATT, was to set the negotiations on a new and more intensive course. The Common Market accepted this general idea but had, on French insistence, tabled various alterations to the text. In particular it did not accept that an offer of a 50 per cent tariff cut was the goal of the negotiations, but regarded it only as a working hypothesis.

A report in the London Times said that in practice what the "Six" were maintaining was that a 50 per cent cut was only one aspect of the Kennedy Round, to be weighed in conjunction with the other elements such as the treatment for disparities, removal of non-tariff obstacles to trade, and the inclusion of agricultural products. The second main point on which the Common Market differed from USA was on fixing a firm date for exchanging exceptions lists, that is, items excluded from the linear tariff cut.

The Common Market wanted September 10 to be agreed as the final date, in order to ensure that countries did not hold back their exceptions while waiting to see what happened on disparities. Britain was ready to table her exceptions list in July, but there were evidently fears that USA might delay its own offer because of the proximity of the Presidential election.

"We must know what the exceptions will be before we can bind ourselves on disparities", Mr. Rey, for the Brussels Commission, said on May 5. "Provided there is satisfaction on this and other points, we shall work in the hope that a 50 per cent cut will be a reality in the end."

Statement Of Principles And Procedures:

The talks ended on May 6 with the adoption of a Statement of Principles and Procedures which was generally regarded as a victory for the French and Common Market point of view.

The negotiations were proposed by the late US President, Mr. J. F. Kennedy with the aim of halving industrial customs duties among the members of the GATT organization who between them handle four-fifths of the world trade. But there is already a feeling among officials and others that the hoped-for "across the board" cut of 50 per cent will never materialise.

The main issue during the previous few days in Geneva had been whether, as the Americans wanted, the GATT nations should formally accept the 50 per cent reduction as the target to be aimed at—even though the final agreed figure may be considerably less.

This proposal was firmly, and successfully, opposed by the French who insisted that the 50 per cent cut should only be treated as a "working hypothesis", not as any sort of commitment, and that definite decisions could only be reached later in the light of various other considerations.

The French argument was that a simple agreement to slash tariffs by a uniform percentage when the tariffs themselves stand at different levels would be of unequal benefit to different countries.

In order to secure balanced advantage to all, the French maintained that other relevant factors should also be taken into account—such as the exceptions that will be claimed, the proposals for agriculture, the discrepancies in existing tariff rates, and measures for dealing with non-tariff barriers to trade in the form of taxes and quotas.

In short, the French and their Common Market partners made it plain that the tariff-cut proposal could only be discussed in the context of other complex trade problems, and they would not make up their minds finally until they were able to see the "package" as a whole.

This approach has had to be accepted by the others, but they have done so with considerable reluctance and in the hope that the talks will go more smoothly in the future.

French spokesmen are confident that the "package" can be worked out by the middle of 1965, but the view in British and American circles is that the negotiations will take much longer, and perhaps drag on into 1966, "especially if the French insist on having their own way at every stage."

B. ITU Administrative Council Meeting: The 19th session of the Administrative Council of the International Tele-communications Union (ITU) met in May under the chairmanship of Mr. Mohammed Mili at ITU headquarters in Geneva.

Apart from its normal functions of supervising administration and approving the ITU's annual budget, the Council took several decisions affecting the Union's immediate future. In particular, it discussed the plans for the celebration of the ITU Centenary in 1965 in a special Centenary Working Party under the chairmanship of Mr. Alfred Langenberger of Switzerland.

It was decided to ask ITU member-administrations to contribute to a centenary gift, which would take the form of some decorative monument to be set up on the north face of the Union's headquarters building or close to it (facing towards the Palais des Nations), the cost of which was estimated at about 300,000 Swiss francs.

In view of the fact that the original Convention creating the ITU was signed on May 17, 1865 at the Quai d'Orsay in Paris, the possibility of holding a special commemorative ceremony in the same room on May 17, 1965 was discussed, and Mr. Gustave Terras, the French representative, said that the matter would be studied by the French Ministry of Posts and Tele-communications. Other aspects of the centenary celebrations, including the publication of the ITU's centenary book and the issue of commemorative postage stamps were discussed by the Council, which also welcomed offers of participation by United Nations and its specialized agencies in the form of special publications, films, and radio and television programmes.

One of the most important features of the ITU's centenary year will be the holding of a Plenipotentiary Conference, the Union's supreme authority, which meets at intervals of normally not less than five years. In view of the invitation by the Swiss Government for the 1965 Conference to meet in Switzerland, it was agreed that it should be held in Montreux for a period of nine weeks from September 14, 1965.

Decisions were also taken concerning two other conferences.

First, on a proposal by the Council, the members of the Union in the European and African broadcasting areas agreed that the African LF|MF Broadcasting Conference should open in Geneva on October 12, 1964, with a maximum duration of four weeks and with the following agenda:

(1) Preparation of an up-to-date broadcasting plan for the band 525-1605 kc/s for the African countries outside the European broadcasting area, taking into account the increase already recorded in the Master International Frequency Register and on the basis of the technical parameters and planning methods recommended by the Preparatory Meeting of Experts held in Geneva in January-February, 1964;

(2) Examination of the existing situation in the bands 150-285 kc/s and 525-1605 kc/s for the African countries which are included in the European broadcasting area;

(3) Determination of all measures, bearing in mind Article 9 of the Radio Regulations, which might prove essential in the light of this examination but which would not involve revision of the Copenhagen Plan, 1948.

Secondly, for reasons of economy the Council also obtained the approval of the majority of ITU member-countries to the postponement of the second and main session of the Aeronautical Conference originally envisaged for 1965, to early 1966.

C. UN Expanded Programme Of Technical Assistance For 1963: A UN Press release on June 19 said that 122 countries and territories had received assistance amounting to $47,600,000 during 1963 under the UN Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance (EPTA).

The number of expert assignments during the year, according to the annual report of the Technical Assistance Board to the Technical Assistance Committee for 1963 reached 3,037, compared to 2,894 in 1962 and 2,443 in 1961.

In addition to experts serving under the Expanded Programme, the UN Special Fund as of March 31, 1964 had 1,300 experts in the field.

The technical assistance experts, sent at the request of developing nations for periods ranging from a few weeks to one year or more, represented 79 different nationalities. However, more than half the total were recruited from eight countries: the United Kingdom, which supplied 426 experts; France, 329; the United States 246; India, 136; USSR, 123; the Netherlands, 121; West Germany, 95; and Canada, 90.

At the same time, the Expanded Programme during the year awarded some 2,545 fellowships for study and training to the nationals of 126 developing countries and territories.

The report was prepared by the Technical Assistance Board for submission to the Technical Assistance Committee of the Economic and Social Council, which was to meet in Vienna from June 22 to July 3. The Technical Assistance Board is composed of the executive heads, or their representatives, of the 10 international organizations participating in the Expanded Programme.

Participating organizations are United Nations, the International Labour Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization, the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the World Health Organization, the International Tele-communications Union, the World Meteorological Organization, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the Universal Postal Union.

Because the years 1963-64 form the second two-year programming period for the Expanded Programme, the report, as explained in an introductory note, was in the nature of an interim report on progress made in a period not yet completed. To commemorate 15 years of UN technical assistance—the Expanded Programme was brought into existence under the terms of an Economic and Social Council resolution of August 15, 1949—the next annual report is expected to include a review of the whole life of the programme, as well as a detailed survey of the present two-year programme period.

The introduction noted that the Programme, modest in its beginnings, had expanded over the years "to provide a technical service, unique in its professional range and multilateral comprehensiveness, to over 100 countries and territories throughout the developing world". Its expenditures had grown from $6.5 million in 1950 to almost $48 million in 1963, and its work was re-inforced with the establishment, five years ago, of the UN Special Fund. The combined income of the two programmes of technical co-operation had risen to a total of $140 million in 1964.

In addition, a world-wide net-work of 52 field offices had been established to serve the two programmes, as well as other UN undertakings, such as the World Food Programme, which share their common purpose. In 1963, new field offices were established in Algeria, Kenya, the Republic of Korea and Uganda. The experience gained in both operations and administration, "has already established a sound basis for whatever structural changes Governments may decide to suggest in the relationships of the two programmes".

More than 26 per cent of the 1963 programme was devoted to basic surveys, administration services, power, transport and communications—important items of the basic infra-structure for development. There was heavy expenditure, amounting to 9.3 per cent of all assistance given, on basic surveys and administrative services in Africa. This was almost exactly 25 per cent of the total programme for the region.

Another large part of the programme for the year, 21.2 per cent, was in the form of assistance to agriculture, again with a high figure for Africa, at 7.1 per cent. Health services accounted for 17.4 per cent of the field expenditure with Africa benefiting from the largest share at 6.1 per cent of the total.

Of the services rendered the countries of Asia and the Far East, 15.8 per cent went to education. The proportion in Africa was the same, although the absolute figure was higher, while in Latin America 12.4 per cent of the programme in that region was devoted to education.

As for the distribution of field programme expenditures among the various participating organizations, FAO accounted for the largest share with a total expenditure of $10.4 million, or 26.4 per cent of the total programme. Next was United Nations itself, with expenditures of $8.1 million, or 20.7 per cent of the total; WHO, $7.0 million or 17.9 per cent; and UNESCO, $5.9 million or 15.1 per cent.

Contributions, local costs assessments and total resources available for the financing of programmes were all at record high levels in 1963. Contributions pledged by 105 Governments crossed the $50 million mark for the first time, and the actual resources available for the 1963 programme, including local costs assessments, totalled $57,083,000. There was also improvements in the level of payments by host Governments towards the cost of the Technical Assistance Board|Special Fund field officers, in the percentage of contribution which was fully or partially convertible, in the utilization of currencies and in the collection of local costs assessments.

Against these encouraging indicators, however, "little or no progress was made in 1963 towards the solution of the persisting difficulties of timely collection of pledged contributions and, in fact, a somewhat lower percentage of current pledges had been paid at the end of the year than at the end of 1962".

Special Fund Approves Aid For 50 Projects:

The UN Special Fund Council, which had been meeting since June 15 at Schenveningue near The Hague, approved 50 development projects concerning 39 developing countries and representing a total value of $85,200,000.

Of the $85.2 million, $39.9 million will be covered by the Fund and $45.3 million by the beneficiary countries.

In the past five years, the Fund had approved 421 development projects in favour of developing countries. The total cost reached $919 million including $374 million supplied by the Fund.

For 1965 the Fund expects a demand of $140 million, and taking into account the regular increase, it can be estimated that in 1970 the Fund's development budget will reach $1,000 million.

The 50 projects approved by the Special Fund Council break down as follows: Africa 26, Asia 11, South and Central America 8, Europe 3 and West Asia one.

Among the beneficiary countries are: Afghanistan and India 2 projects each; Nepal, Pakistan, Philippines, Thailand, Ceylon and Cambodia one each.

The Council also approved three projects with a regional character; one concerns Cambodia and South Viet-Nam and deals with the study of the Mekong River region, the two others concern African countries.

The projects approved by the Council are divided into four main categories: (1) Preliminary study of the soil and subsoil resources (including fishing). (2) Training of specialists. (3) Research in the fields of culture and industry. (4) Plans for demographic development, including territory equipping and town planning.

D. Expansion Of UN Security Council: Informed sources at UN Headquarters said on June 11 that the Soviet Union had agreed to increase the number of members of the UN Security Council from 11 to 15, according to a resolution which was approved by the UN General Assembly in December, 1963 following Afro-Asian initiative.

This change in the San Francisco Charter for UN cannot come into effect, however, before being approved by two-thirds of the member-States of UN including the five Powers—USSR, USA, Britain, France and Formosa.

The USSR, which informed the Secretary-General, U Thant, about its decision, was the first of the five permanent members of the Council to announce a decision.

African countries played a leading part in the move to enlarge the Council, in view of the large number of African States which have entered UN since it was formed.

The amendments to the Charter were approved by the General Assembly over Soviet objections, and circulated to the 112 member-nations for ratification.

Under the proposed plan, the 11-nation Council would be expanded to 15 members and the 18-nation Economic and Social Council to 27 members. The purpose is to give wider representation to the newly independent Asian and African countries admitted to the world Organization in recent years.

In the December vote France voted with 10 Communist countries against the amendments, while USA and Britain were among the four abstainers.

Countries which already have deposited their formal ratifications with UN are Jamaica, Thailand, Algeria, Ghana and Tunisia. There was no doubt, however, that the amendments would get the necessary two-thirds majority since 97 countries voted for the plan in the Assembly.

E. Southern Rhodesia And Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference—Sir Alec Douglas-Home's Statement: The British Prime Minister, Sir Alec Douglas-Home, told the House of Commons on June 9 that nearly all the Commonwealth Prime Ministers had agreed that their joint conferences in future should be confined to representatives of fully independent States.

He was replying to Mr. Arthur Bottomley (Labour), who asked for a statement about the discussion Sir Alec had with Commonwealth Prime Ministers on whether an invitation to the forthcoming London Conference should be extended to Southern Rhodesia, and if he would give details of the communication he had sent to the Southern Rhodesian Prime Minister, Mr. Ian Smith.

Sir Alec said: "I have now completed my consultations with other Commonwealth Governments on whether the Premier of Southern Rhodesia should be invited to attend our meeting next month. I have informed Mr. Ian Smith that the consensus of opinion is conclusive that, in view of the size of the modern Commonwealth, the meetings of Prime Ministers should be confined in future to the representatives of fully independent States."

He added that he had told Mr. Smith he would welcome a general talk with him in London before or after the Conference. "Mr. Smith has thanked me for this invitation, but has asked that it should be left over pending further correspondence between us."

Answering a supplementary question, he said: "I used my phrase 'consensus of opinion is conclusive', and I think Mr. Bottomley would be right, therefore, in assuming this was the feeling of the very large majority—indeed nearly all."

Mr. Robin Turton (Conservative) asked Sir Alec to repeat the assurance he had given the House on April 30 that it would not be the practice of a Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference to discuss the internal affairs of Southern Rhodesia at any formal meeting.

Sir Alec replied: "I never disclose to anybody the agenda of a Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference, but I affirm that we do not discuss each others' internal affairs at formal meetings. But of course, there are many occasions on which these matters are discussed outside."

Mr. Jo Grimond, leader of the Liberal Party, said Mr. Smith had alleged this was a breach of precedent and Southern Rhodesia had some right to be present. Could the Prime Minister, he asked, say this was not so, and that the consultations he had with the other Prime Ministers raised a new precedent but not a contradictory one.

Sir Alec replied: "Yes. I can confirm that."

Replying to a suggestion that the exclusion of Southern Rhodesia might lead to a growing intolerance in the Commonwealth which would endanger its survival, Sir Alec said: "I hope there will be no evidence of intolerance when the Prime Ministers meet—in fact, I am sure there will not be."

South Rhodesian Reaction:

In a despatch from Salisbury (South Rhodesia) on June 7, The Times, London said that the political situation in Southern Rhodesia appeared to be boiling up to yet another crisis—this time over independence—with news at the weekend that the country had not been invited to the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference.

The news, although expected, had caused Mr. Ian Smith, the Prime Minister, to react violently.

In two statements at the weekend he gave vent to his annoyance. The first was a considered official statement issued on receipt of Sir Alec Douglas-Home's letter informing him of the refusal. The second was an outburst delivered at a banquet of the Sons of England Society (a typical settler organization, mainly Right-wing).

In the first statement, Mr. Smith said: "I have been informed I am not to be invited to the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' talks and I am naturally extremely disappointed. This country has always been proud of its British heritage and has given of its best in support of British ideals in two World Wars and in Commonwealth defence since 1945. If any country deserves to be called a loyal member of the Commonwealth I think I am entitled to say that Southern Rhodesia does. Our position in the Commonwealth has been recognized for well over 30 years, and our Prime Minister and subsequently the Prime Minister of the Federation attended Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conferences from their inception.

"We are excluded now not because we are no longer loyal to the Crown or to the ideals on which the Commonwealth was founded. Nor was our case judged on its merits. We are excluded because the Commonwealth has outgrown itself and there is no room for us amongst the motley of small countries which have recently acceded to independence and have been admitted to the Commonwealth without regard to their adherence to the ideals and concepts on which it was founded.

"Another reason is that one of the standards of judgment today in this sort of thing appears to be that of expediency. I, as all Rhodesians will regret this move against us and I dare say that there are far beyond the borders of our country great numbers of people who will share our feelings of disgust."

He refused to comment further, but later he electrified the Sons of England banquet in Salisbury with an attack on Britain, including a reference to the Queen. In blunt language he said precisely what he thought, and the Sons of England (more than 100 strong) rose to their feet and cheered him to the echo.

Mr. Smith began by congratulating the Sons of England on obtaining their "freedom" from the rest of Africa by inaugurating the Grand Lodge of Southern Rhodesia at the banquet. "I was always brought up to be a good sport and always taught to concede when someone beat me", he said. "But I would say we won't be far behind." There were cries of "Shame!" and "Not to worry, Smittie" when he told them of Sir Alec Douglas-Home's letter. Mr. Smith said it was a sad day for Southern Rhodesia. "It might be a happy day for some other members of the Commonwealth... Southern Rhodesia has had to take a step backwards.

"I wondered—I don't think ever before in my life I wondered as seriously as I did this afternoon—if we are really wanted in the Commonwealth any longer and if we can serve any purpose by remaining in the Commonwealth any longer. We have to consider whether the Union Jack and the Queen mean the same to us today as they have meant to us in the past."

He said people at public meetings had asked him why Southern Rhodesia continued to keep the Union Jack in the Rhodesian flag in view of the behaviour of people overseas. "My reply has been that I have very pleasant memories of the Union Jack and always associated it with very high standards and fine principles.

"I would go so far as to say that if because other people have let their principles fall and have gone back on their word and have reneged on their promises and as a result of this we find ourselves no longer in the Commonwealth we should continue to have the Union Jack in our flag and others should relinquish it."

He said that so far as the Queen was concerned he still had tremendous respect, admiration, loyalty, and love for her, but, he added: "Of course, she is no longer Queen as we used to know her in the past. We have to come to earth and realize this. She can no longer speak in her own right. The Queen of Great Britain today is the mouthpiece of party politicians and can't speak her own mind and heart—only what the party politicians wish her to speak. And if the Government changes tomorrow to some other type of Government she will have to speak their words and even if the Government went so far as to be for example, communist, she would still have to speak their words."

To ask to move up the Commonwealth table and make room for a new member would be reasonable, "but because there are some members who have been responsible for a couple of years and because some have been responsible for only a couple of months we have been told to go back to the nursery and make room for these people."

Southern Rhodesia had to face the fact that it would not get any respect if it were prepared to lie down and let people trample over it. "We will only lose if half get cold feet and decide to have out. The rest will be left holding the baby."

He said that Australia was now coming under the eyes of the Afro-Asian bloc, and he described how Sir Learie Constantine, the West Indian cricketer, was "beamed upon" there until he suggested that the "white-Australia" policy should be relaxed. "As far as we are concerned", he said, "if any one thinks they can interfere in our affairs and tell us how to run our country and how to lower our standards to appease outside opinion and the Afro-Asian bloc, then I will say—that will be the bloody day."

F. Britain's "Blue Streak" Rocket Launched: Britain's Blue Streak rocket successfully completed its first test flight on June 5 at the Woomera range in South Australia.

Launched in the morning, it travelled 1,000 miles (1,600 kilometres) across the Australian interior, reaching a height of 150 miles (230 kilometres) and a speed of 8,500 miles per hour (12,000 kph) before burning up on re-entering the atmosphere near the north-west coast.

The rocket's two Rolls-Royce engines gave it a total thrust of 270,000 lbs at blast off. Blue Streak carried 85 tons of liquid oxygen and kerosene fuel; it used up half-a-ton of fuel every second. Nine minutes after launching it was announced that the rocket's telemetry signals had stopped.

Blue Streak is the first stage of the first European satellite-launching rocket, Europa, whose second stage is being built by France while West Germany builds the third and final stage. Europa, which is to develop a total thrust of 166 tons, is to be operational in 1966 or 1967.

Blue Streak was conceived by the British Government originally as a military rocket. The military plan was dropped and it was decided to develop the rocket for peaceful purposes in co-operation with the European centre for the construction of space vehicle launchers, which is in charge of the Europa project.

In the meantime, work on the second stage is said to be going ahead according to schedule, and its first firing trial, at Colomb-Bechar in Algeria, is planned for the end of 1965. It will first be fired on its own, and later together with the third stage.

Blue Streak is being fired by itself in its three tests this year. In 1965, however, there will be three firings in which it will be given dummy upper stages, to see how it operates under more realistic conditions.

The European Launcher Development Organization (ELDO) is concentrating on its plans for a complete launch at the moment. It does, however, have plans for further development when that has been achieved. It has decided that alterations to the upper stages are likely to be the most productive, and one idea is to incorporate a fourth stage, which would give a higher orbit. Blue Streak is seen as a fairly conventional first stage, but the Organization is emphasizing that it is efficient, and far from being obsolete.

Mr. Julian Amery, British Minister of Aviation, announced in the House of Commons that Blue Streak was launched successfully at 09.14 local time (00.44

British time). The weather conditions were ideal. The count-down proceeded smoothly, without any hold-up or malfunction in the vehicle or the range equipment, and led to a textbook launching.

"So far as we know", he said, "all systems operated as planned, but thrust was terminated after 147 seconds, that is, six seconds earlier than intended. The reason for this should be established in the course of detailed analysis of the telemetry records. As a result of thrust ending six seconds early, the maximum velocity was somewhat less than intended and the point of impact was about 625 statute miles from the launching site, instead of 950 miles. The maximum height reached was about 110 miles. The maximum speed attained was 6,400 mpa.

"The trajectory was on the centre line of the range corridor but slightly higher in angle than planned. Telemetry, radar, and other range equipment worked successfully. They have given a mass of useful information which will now be analysed.

"A team is flying to the impact point to effect recovery. Technically the launching was a success and the trial's objectives were achieved.

"Further tests will be necessary before the launcher can be regarded as fully proven. This trial, however, has demonstrated the soundness of the Hawker Siddeley structural design, the Rolls Royce propulsion system and the many sub-systems. We have thus confirmed that Britain and Australia can meet their obligations under the first ELDO programme. The way is now open for us and our partners in ELDO to embark on the exploration and exploitation of space."

G. Russia Launches "Cosmos XXXI": The official Soviet news agency Tass reported on June 6 that the Soviet Union had launched its Cosmos XXXI satellite.

The Agency said that the satellite contained equipment designed to continue the space exploration programme announced by the Soviet Government on March 16, 1962.

"Cosmos XXXII" Launched:

The Soviet Union launched on June 10 a new unmanned satellite—Cosmos XXXII.

It carried scientific apparatus to probe conditions in outer space.

H. US Unmanned Moon-ship Launched: An unmanned model of America's Apollo Moon-ship was launched into space for the first time on May 28 on top of a giant Saturn I rocket from Cape Kennedy (Florida).

The 8½-ton Apollo space-craft, called "Boiler Plate 13", was a simplified model of the spaceship in which three American astronauts are to be launched to the Moon by the end of the decade, perhaps in 1969.

Consisting of a cone-shaped command module and a cylinder-shaped service module, the spacecraft headed towards an orbit 110 to 140 miles out in space.

The temperature was in the 90's and officials had a clear view as the rocket climbed into a clear, blue sky, spewing fire from its eight engines. As it met the cold layers of the upper atmosphere, a white contrail formed behind it. After two minutes officials announced that the engines of the second stage had ignited as planned.

The Moon-craft went into orbit about 10½ minutes after lift-off.

One of the primary missions of the flight test was to check how well the design of the Apollo spacecraft held up under the severe pressures placed upon it. Another objective was to see how the escape system performed.

Breaks Up:

The US Space Agency said on June 1 that the Apollo Moon-ship fell back into the atmosphere and disintegrated on its 50th orbit.

The Agency also disclosed that the film ejected from the Saturn launch vehicle after the lift-off showed that one of the eight engines in the rocket's main stage shut down 24 seconds early during the Cape Kennedy launching.

Nevertheless, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said, the spacecraft's performance was so close to plan that engineers at first questioned indications of an early engine cutoff.

The 80-foot long, 37,300-lb satellite—an unmanned model of the Apollo Moon-ship with the burned-out second stage of the Saturn still attached—re-entered the Earth's atmosphere over the Western Pacific.

I. US Nuclear-Powered Merchant Ship Crosses Atlantic: The world's first nuclear-powered merchant vessel, the Savannah (13,599 tons), entered New York harbour on June 2.

She sailed again on her maiden trans-Atlantic voyage on June 8, visited West Germany, Ireland and Britain before returning to New York.

The Savannah, a sleek, white passenger cargo ship with the lines of a yacht, called at Bremerhaven, Hamburg and Dublin before arriving at Southampton on July 7. She spent five days at Southampton and was open to the public.

Included in the ship's complement of 110 (many of whom are nuclear engineers) were four former Britons who used to work for the Cunard Line, and are now in the ship's catering department.

On her first Atlantic voyage the Savannah carried her full quota of 36 passengers who had paid fares ranging from $450 (£161) each.

Launched in 1959, the Savannah cruised between American ports on the east and west coasts, passing through the Panama Canal, before she was immobilized in 1963 by labour troubles, when the crew demanded a 25 per cent increase on their basic wages for the extra risk involved in serving on a nuclear vessel.

An entirely new crew had to be recruited and trained, and after being laid up for nearly a year, the ship is now in commission again, operated by American Export Isbrandtsen Lines. To date she has cost a total of $83 million (£29,643,000), of which $50 million (£17,857,000) went on building and fitting out, and the rest on operating expenses.

J. US Satellite Disintegrates: The US Atomic Energy Commission revealed in Washington on May 23 that a satellite carrying one kilogram of radio-active plutonium, launched in April, had disintegrated off the west coast of Africa after failing to go into orbit.

A spokesman for the Commission said the satellite had probably disintegrated on re-entering the atmosphere and that the plutonium had dispersed in tiny particles at an altitude of 36,000 metres.

He added that the particles would not fall back to Earth for several years and, in the meantime, would lose their radio-activity.

The satellite was launched in April from the US air base at Vandenberg, California.

K. EEC Annual Report: According to its annual report released in Brussels on June 5, the six-nation European Common Market is meeting serious economic difficulties for the first time since it was set up in 1958.

The report, issued by the Common Market Executive Commission, added that the situation might well get "perilously" worse in 1964 if energetic counter-measures were not taken.

Economies of the "Six" began in 1963 to diverge appreciably, with the balanced growth of the West German economy contrasting with heavy inflationary pressure in Italy, France and the Netherlands.

The Commission said that it believed the strict application this year of anti-inflationary recommendations, already adopted by the Common Market's Ministerial Council, was a vital factor for recovery.

Any faltering in the determination of the member-States primarily affected might have the most serious political and economic consequences for the whole Community.

It was true that the European Economic Community had already withstood more than one political crisis, but now for the first time it had to take the strain of major economic disequilibrium.

Among other important internal tasks facing the Common Market in the coming year were decisions by the Council on a single turn-over tax system and common measures in transport policy.

The Commission said that progress towards a common commercial policy had not so far been satisfactory, and that policy decisions must now be taken in this field.

It said that in most member-countries, it had proved impossible to maintain stable prices during 1963. They had risen by varying degrees, from 2.2 per cent in Belgium to six per cent in France and 7.4 per cent in Italy.

The Community's balance of payments had deteriorated again in the same year, though it still showed a slight surplus. The trade balance deficit had increased by $1,300 million to a total of $3,000 million.

In a preface to the annual report, the Commission said the economic integration of the "Six" necessitated a decision on European political unity as well.

Mr. Emile Noel, Executive Secretary of EEC, said that the detailed summary of European accomplishments in 1963 was also, to a certain extent, the last will and testament of the Hallstein Committee, for as soon as the merger of the European executives was completed, this Committee would hand over its powers to the single Community executive which would control the destiny of the three present European organizations—the European Common Market, Euratom and the Coal and Steel Community.

M. President F. D. Roosevelt And Sir Winston Churchill's Views On President de Gaulle—War-time Correspondence: President Franklin D. Roosevelt of USA scathingly referred to General Charles de Gaulle of France as "the bride" with a "Messianic complex" in war-time correspondence with Sir Winston Churchill, released in Washington on June 12.

He also suggested that they should break with the French leader.

During the squabble over control of the French interests in North Africa under a national committee, the American President told Sir Winston on July 17, 1943: "I am fed up with de Gaulle.... I am absolutely convinced that he has been and is now injuring our war effort and that he is a very dangerous threat to us.

"I agree with you that he likes neither the British nor the Americans... I agree with you that the time has arrived when we must break with him."

On June 21, 1942, Sir Winston Churchill told President Roosevelt: "As you know I have always taken the view that de Gaulle should be made to settle down to honest teamwork. I am no more enamoured of him than you are but I would rather have him on the committee than strutting about as a combination Joan of Arc and Clemenceau."

The frank and outspoken exchange of views between President Roosevelt and Sir Winston on the then leader of the Free French Forces in London, now President of France, were contained in official documents made public by the State Department under the title: "Foreign Relations of the United States, 1943 Volume 11 Europe."

Publication is part of a continuing process of releasing official papers.

The documents included a memorandum from President Roosevelt to the then British Prime Minister on May 8, 1943, saying: "I am sorry, but it seems to me the conduct of the bride (identified as General de Gaulle) continues to be more and more aggravated. His course and attitude is well nigh intolerable.

"The war in North Africa has terminated successfully without any material aid from de Gaulle and the civil situation with all its dangers seems to be working out well. I think that Macmillan (Mr. Harold Macmillan, then British Minister of State) concurs in this.

"However, de Gaulle is without question taking his vicious propaganda staff down to Algiers to stir up strife between the various elements, including the Arabs and Jews. He is expanding his present group of agitators who are working up counter demonstrations and even riots.

"Unfortunately, too many people are catching on to the fact that these disturbances are being financed in whole or in part by British Government funds.

"De Gaulle may be an honest fellow but he has the Messianic complex. Further he has the idea that the people of France itself are strongly behind him personally. This I doubt. I think that the people of France are behind the Free French Movement, that they do not know de Gaulle and that their loyalty is to the fine objectives of the Movement when it was started and to the larger phase of it which looks to the restoration of France."

President Roosevelt added: "I am inclined to think that when we get into France itself we will have to regard it as a military occupation run by British and American Generals.

"I think that this may be necessary for six months or even a year after we get into France, thus giving time to build up for an election and a new form of government....

"I think we might talk over the formation of an entirely new French committee subject in its membership to the approval of you and me. Giraud should be made the Commander-in-Chief of the French Army and Navy... I do not know what to do with de Gaule. Possibly you would like to make him Governor of Madagascar."

[General Henri Giraud, who died in 1949, went to Algiers after escaping from occupied France. He in fact became Commander-in-Chief of all French forces and Joint President with General de Gaulle of the French Committee of National Liberation, but in 1944 he was dropped from the Committee and General de Gaulle became head of the French Forces.]

On June 18, 1943, Sir Winston telegraphed President Roosevelt: "I agree with you that no confidence can be placed in de Gaulle's friendship for the Allies."

Sir Winston, however, advised President Roosevelt that some of his Cabinet colleagues questioned whether the time had arrived to break with General de Gaulle.

A memorandum by Mr. Cordell Hull, US Secretary of State, following a talk with Sir Winston Churchill in Washington on May 13, 1943, remarked: "The Prime Minister said that he and Eden found de Gaulle terrible to get on with... he personally was utterly disgusted with de Gaulle."

President Roosevelt told Sir Winston in a telegram on June 10 that he considered it impossible to consider any "de Gaulle domination of French West Africa. This is so serious that I should have to consider sending several regiments to Dakar and also naval vessels if there were any sign that de Gaulle proposed to take things over in French West Africa."

N. New Space Theory By American Scientists: Two American scientists offered a new explanation on April 28 for nine enormously powerful quasi-stellar radiation sources which are the most distant objects ever observed by man.

Dr. Louis Gold and Dr. John Moffat of the Research Institute for Advanced Studies suggested that these mysterious objects were neither colliding galaxies nor chains of exploding stars, but vast aggregations of hot, electrically charged gas, which might or might not be in a state of gravitational collapse.

The objects had been identified in the past 13 months and appear to be between 12,000 million and 60,000 million miles away. They are unlike anything previously observed and are probably "the most enormous source of energy in the universe". They are about 1,000 times as dense as the Milky Way galaxy and radiate at a rate about 100 times as great. Yet their diameter is apparently much smaller. Their total mass is equal to that of about 100 million suns.

Offering the American Physical Society their mathematical model of the mysterious objects, which they said was consistent with known physical laws, Dr. Gold and Dr. Moffat proposed that further study be made. One thing was certain. The light and radio waves from these incredibly distant objects must have originated in "a breathtakingly vast source of energy".

O. Al Biruni's "India" Published In Russian: One of the greatest works of medieval historic-ethnographic literature—India by the great Khorezm scholar Adbureikhan Al Biruni (937-1048)—has been published in Russian for the first time.

A Tashkent message on June 26 said that the work, which consists of 80 chapters, provides a vast amount of information about the history and culture of India. In this work, Al Biruni emerges not only as an encyclopaedic scholar but also as a great humanist, a fighter against racial, religious and other social prejudices.

A. World Badminton Championship: Indonesia retained the Thomas Cup, emblem of world badminton supremacy, when she defeated Denmark by five matches to four in the Challenge Round in Tokyo on May 22.

Indonesia won two of the three singles and took the first of the two doubles to clinch her victory. The two countries had started the day on level terms, each having won two of the previous day's four matches.

Scuffles broke out among spectators during the deciding doubles match between Tan King Gwan and Unang of Indonesia and the Danes, Erland Kops and Henning Borch. Play was held up for a quarter of an hour while officials, assisted by a policeman, restored order.

The trouble began when three Japanese officials went to warn Indonesian spectators in the Danish pair's line of vision not to sway in unison from side to side during play. The officials were jostled; Japanese spectators ran over, and the scuffle quickly became general.

The Indonesians chased Japanese Press cameramen who photographed the incident. When play continued the Indonesian spectators kept up a barrage of boos and cat-calls when the Danes scored and when they were serving.

A. Communist Support To Coalition Government: The Communist Party and the Mahajana Eksath Peramuna have declared that they will support the progressive measures of the coalition Government.

The two parties along with the Trotskyite Lanka Sama Samaj Party (LSSP) had formed the United Left Front (ULF). Following talks between the Prime Minister, Mrs. Sirimavo Bandaranaike, LSSP joined the Government to form a coalition with the Sri Lanka Freedom Party (see page 5891). Because of opposition from her party colleagues, Mrs. Bandaranaike could not take any Communist or MEP representatives in the coalition.

Though the two parties left out of the coalition initially criticized the LSSP, they later modified their stand.

While the Communist Party "cannot agree with the LSSP decision to join the Government on its own or with the manner in which it did so", it admits that within the new Cabinet the positions of the Left and the progressive forces of the Sri Lanka Freedom Party, who seek to co-operate with the Left, have been relatively strengthened.

The Communist Party said that it would, therefore, support and co-operate with the new Government "in order to see that the progressive measures set out in the one-year agreement on which this Government was formed are carried out properly before the term of the present Parliament ends."

The Party would, at the same time, continue to campaign for a re-orientation of national policies and for the inclusion in the Government of the other two parties of the ULF.

SUMMARY: Chinese Claim Over Bhutan Villages; Burmese Refugees In N-EFA; Trade With USA; IDA Loan; CPI Unity Talks Fail.

A. Chinese Claim Over Frontier Villages In Bhutan: It was reported from Shillong on July 4 that Assamese traders normally resident during Summer at Tashigang Dzong had left that town in north-eastern Bhutan following the circulation there of handbills stating that eight Bhutan frontier villages belong to Tibet.

The handbills were in Tibetan and the villages mentioned were Khangri, Tarcheng, Checkchar, Jangtong Tussu, Janghi, Dirafoo, Chakop and Kachar. The traders have returned to their homes in the plains near Rangiya, 28 miles north of Gauhati.

The villages mentioned in the handbills are all west of the Nyamjang Chu, the river along whose valley the Chinese invaded India in 1962.

Tashigang Dzong is a little above 4,000 feet in altitude and less than 40 miles by a well established trade route from Towang. It is about the same distance from Dhola, near the trijunction of the Bhutanese, Indian and Tibetan frontiers.

B. Burmese Refugees In N-EFA: According to an official spokesman in New Delhi on July 6, the number of people from Burma who had sought refuge in the Tirap frontier division of N-EFA during the past few weeks had swelled to about 3,000.

Most of these people were Burmese, the others being Indians who were living with their relations on the other side of the border. More were stated to be coming.

The Government had established refugee camps for them and assumed the responsibility to feed and clothe them. They are all tribal people.

Officials of the Burmese Embassy had gone to the Tirap division to study the problem and see what should be done for the refugees.

C. Expansion Of Trade With USA—Mr. Manubhai Shah's Visit: Increased imports of cotton, soya beans and tallow under the PL 480 arrangements were among the results of the Central Commerce Minister, Mr. Manubhai Shah's recent talks in USA on the expansion of trade with that country.

The USA has agreed to export to India 300,000 bales of cotton worth about Rs. 12 crores ($40 million) and 100,000 tons of soya beans. The quality of tallow to be exported has still to be fixed.

Announcing this in New Delhi on July 4 at a news conference, Mr. Shah admitted, however, that his efforts to obtain a larger quota of sugar exports to USA had not yet borne fruit. Talks had shown that USA would treat the question with sympathy and this would be taken up again after about a month.

Mr. Shah returned to New Delhi after holding talks with US officials and business and trade interests. He went to USA after attending the UN Trade and Development Conference at Geneva, the result of which he described as even more satisfactory than he had anticipated.

He also expressed, during his talks in USA, India's dissatisfaction at the small quota given to India under the Textile Agreement. It was, however, pointed out that there were several varieties of textiles that were not subject to any restraints or partial restraints and he felt that exports of these could be substantially increased. If a proper study were made, he felt that such exports could be increased by $5 to $6 million annually.

Among other decisions taken to promote exports to the dollar areas was one to make an intensive commodity market survey in USA and Canada for every item which has an export potential of at least Rs. 30,00,000.

For the promotion of mica exports, it was decided to launch a sales promotion drive by the establishment of a Rs. 34,00,000 fund to be used for research into other possible uses of mica. Of this amount, Rs. 5,00,000 will be provided by Indian mica exporters and another Rs. 5,00,000 by US mica importers. The remaining Rs. 24,00,000 will be given by USAID.

A similar fund of Rs. 10,00,000, to which Indian exporters and US importers will contribute an equal share, will be set up for the promotion of Indian spices.

Among other commodities for which Mr. Shah expected larger export markets were manganese ore, shrimps, sardines and other fish.

D. US And British Credits For Automobile Industry: New British and US credits for the Indian automobile industry were announced on July 6 and 7.

Projects costing over £4 million which will increase the size of Leyland's factories and foundries in Madras and put new and more powerful Leyland trucks and buses on Indian roads were announced in London.

The announcement was made jointly by Dr. A. Ramaswami Mudaliar, Chairman of Ashok Leyland Ltd., and Mr. Donald G. Stokes, Managing Director of Leyland Motor Corporation.

Leyland's investment in the new projects will be £2.5 million in addition to £3 million already invested. It will take the form of special plant and machinery not available in India.

The £1.5 million Indian investment will finance new factory buildings and the purchase of Indian-made machinery.

The US Government authorized three credits totalling $37.8 million to help the Indian automobile industry expand and modernize its production facilities and to increase its heavy engineering capacity.

The credits will be used to purchase machinery to increase production. The machinery will be purchased in USA.

The loans extended by the US Agency for International Development include two credits of $23 million and $3 million for Hindustan Motors and $11.8 million for TELCO.

Previous US credits for TELCO, Hindustan Motors and Premier Automobiles (Bombay) total $40 million.

G. Oil Agreement With USSR: Under an Agreement signed in Bombay on July 4, Russia is to supply 1.5 million tonnes more of oil products to India between this year and 1966, thus bringing its total supplies since 1960 to a little over three million tonnes.

The Agreement provides for the supply of petroleum products, including kerosene and high-speed diesel oil.

Under the first Agreement, 1,500,000 tonnes have been supplied, while part of the second Agreement for 50,000 tonnes of furnace oil still remain to be delivered.

The Agreement, between the Indian Oil Company and Sojuznefte Export of Moscow, was signed by Mr. P. A. Gopalakrishnan and Mr. B. F. Kosyrev on behalf of their respective concerns.

After signing the Agreement, Mr. Gopalakrishnan estimated the demand for petroleum products in India by 1966 at about 16 million tonnes, of which the public sector refineries were expected to supply about 50 per cent by the end of the Third Five-Year Plan period.

H. Expansion Of Bhilai Steel Plant—Agreement With USSR: An Agreement was signed in New Delhi on July 6 between the Governments of India and USSR providing for further Soviet assistance for the expansion of the Bhilai Steel Plant.

The expansion envisages the setting up of a sixth blast furnace complex with a capacity of 1,719 cubic metres. The blast furnace will produce foundry iron and pig-iron.

A portion of the equipment needed for this expansion will be manufactured at the heavy machine-building plant in Ranchi for which the required components will be supplied from the Soviet Union.

The main equipment and technical assistance in the establishment of the blast furnace and coke battery will be provided by the Soviet organizations under the Indo-Soviet Credit Agreement of 1961.

Three blast furnaces are at present working in Bhilai. Two more are under construction. When these are commissioned, the capacity of the Plant will be raised from the present one million tons to 2.5 million tons of steel ingots.

I. CPI Unity Talks Fail: Representatives of the Secretariat of the Communist Party of India and its dissident faction meeting in New Delhi on July 4 failed to reach an agreement on steps to re-unite the Party.

They met for 2½ hours, but merely reiterated their respective positions, in regard to their dispute. Mr. Harkishen Singh Surjeet, one of the dissident leaders, said after the meeting that as far as they were concerned, the unity talks were over.

Apart from Mr. Surjeet, Mr. Jyoti Basu and Mr. Promode Das Gupta participated in the meeting on behalf of the dissidents. The official leadership was represented by Dr. G. Adhikari, Mr. C. Rajeshwar Rao and Mr. Bhupesh Gupta.

Mr. Surjeet and his colleagues wanted dissolution of the present Secretariat, the appointment of a joint commission to prepare for the party Congress and expansion of the existing committee inquiring into the Dange letters by the inclusion of three or four of their men. These demands were not acceptable to the Secretariat members.

Mr. Jyoti Basu, the Bengal Centrist leader, who along with others was on his way to Tenali to attend the Leftist-sponsored conference beginning on July 7, said that he and his two colleagues would report to the conference on their talks in Delhi. It would be for the conference to decide the next step.

Asked whether in view of the failure of the Delhi talks the Tenali conference would formally announce the setting up of a rival Communist party, he said: "I do not know. It is always possible someone may have some bright idea."

Mr. Bhupesh Gupta, who had tendered his resignation from the Secretariat, is known to be politically in agreement with the official leadership but is closer to the Left on organizational matters.

During the talks, the dissident leaders pointed out that Mr. Dange's statement in Bombay in which he was reported to have described the dissidents as "Chinese agents" was not conducive to unity talks. The Secretariat members, according to Mr. Basu, told them that Mr. Dange had denied having made the statement.

They said that the Secretariat's latest statement that talks could be held only on the basis of the National Council resolution was not helpful.

The dissident leaders suggested that till the forthcoming seventh Congress of the CPI, the party should work on the basis of agreements and that goodwill should be the guiding factor. This, of course, did not mean there would be no majority decisions on anything. However, there would have to be agreement on certain points to enable the dissidents to go back to the National Council.

Mr. Basu said the Secretariat members thought that their emphasis on agreements would mean veto by the minority. They, however, said that at best "our views can be considered generously if we agree to go back to the Council and majority rule will prevail."

He also pointed out that if there could be agreement on certain points, there would be no rival units or rival discipline.

The Secretariat representatives also did not agree to other points raised by the dissidents including the restoration of the April, 1962 Secretariat which included Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad, Mr. Basu, Mr. Sundarayya and Mr. Surjeet.

The dissident leaders were told that this suggestion could not be accepted as, since the Leftist members resigned from the Secretariat, there had been a change of political views. "We must have a firm majority in the Secretariat even if we agree to make some changes in it," the Secretariat members said, according to Mr. Basu.

The Secretariat representatives told the dissident leaders that there was no point in demanding joint preparations for the Congress since both sides had prepared their documents. All the documents could be circulated to the members if the dissidents decided to go back to the National Council.

Asked whether Mr. Bhupesh Gupta agreed with the replies of the other two members of the Secretariat, Mr. Basu said his impression was that he did not on many of them.

Statements:

Two statements available on July 6 once again emphasized, though not directly, that there was no common ground for the rival factions in the CPI to come together.

These were from Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad and the CPI Secretariat. Mr. Namboodiripad was quite categorical in saying that from what he had gathered about the three Leftist leaders' talks with the Secretariat members, there was no scope for further unity talks.

He made it clear during a brief interview that he was with the Leftists only organizationally. Ideologically and politically, he added, he was probably equidistant from either faction.

He could not say how far his views on these issues would be accommodated by the Left but emphatically added: "There is no question of my going back to join hands with the present CPI leadership." He had the feeling that the failure of unity talks was mainly due to the obstinacy of the CPI's present leadership.

The Secretariat, on its part, explained point by point why, acting within the terms of the National Council resolution on party unity, its members could not accept the Leftist leaders' proposals mainly relating to the organization for the next party congress.

Besides re-iterating (as the Secretariat had done in a statement issued 46 hours before the talks) that the Leftists' proposals meant to put a veto on the majority without dissolving their rival party organization, the Secretariat made few points in its fairly long statement.

The statement ended by saying: "It is now up to the 32 members of the National Council and those who support them to adopt the Council's principled basis for unity, give up rival party activities and to seek the path of agreement and unity as suggested by the Council so that a united party congress can be held to solve the outstanding differences and achieve unity."

Subscriptions were received from July 13 to 15 in cash and by cheque. The Government, however, reserved the right to retain subscriptions up to 10 per cent in excess of Rs. 150 crores.

Interest on the new securities will accrue from July 13 and will be paid on October 15, 1964. Thereafter, payments will be made half-yearly on April 15 and October 15.

K. Unit Trust Scheme Inaugurated: The Central Finance Minister, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari, inaugurated in New Delhi on July 1 the Unit Trust of India, hailing it as one of the important devices to usher in socialism in the country.

He said the Scheme would enable the common man to have some control over means of production and help evolve an equitable system of distribution.

He said the Unit Trust Scheme would prove better than other savings schemes as it promised a higher return to the common man for his savings.

He said he had first suggested the Unit Scheme to the late Mr. Nehru about two years ago. The former Finance Minister, Mr. Morarji Desai, referred to the Scheme in his Budget speech in 1963 but it was not his privilege to start it.

Later, he purchased the first 10 units. The Trust has organized a net-work of 4,000 offices all over India for the sale of units. During July the units will be available at par in multiples of 10. Later the price will be fixed from day to day.

When the initial capital of Rs. 5 crores was returned to the Reserve Bank and other contributing agencies, workers, managements and social organizations would be associated with the Trust.

Mr. R. S. Bhatt, Chairman of the Board of Trustees, in his welcome speech said, that the basic objective of the Unit Trust was to afford both small and large investors a means of acquiring a share in "the widening prosperity of India." It combined the advantages of a reasonable return for one's investment with the minimum of risk.

He pointed out that the Unit Trust had been established under a parliamentary enactment. It was always ready to sell and buy its units at stated prices and so a unit holder was assured of the liquidity of his investments.

He said the Unit Trust would invest its funds in a "balanced and well-distributed portfolio of investments consisting of Government securities, industrial debentures, preference shares and equities."

The unit holder would receive a "steady income," which would be based on the average income of a balanced portfolio of investment.

The initial capital had enabled the Trust (which came into being on February 1 this year) "to build up a balanced portfolio of investments in sound securities of diverse types, giving an average yield of over 6 per cent." The Trust would continue to aim at earning an average yield of higher percentage on its future investments. "Valuable tax concessions" in regard to income-tax and super tax and been given to the Trust and the unit holders.

The income earned on the underlying securities after meeting expenses would be distributed to the unit holders each year soon after the making up of the annual accounts as on June 30. Under the Unit Trust of India Act, at least 90 per cent of the income less expenses, which are limited to 5 per cent of the gross income, should be distributed to the unit holders.

N. Record Cotton Production: According to the final estimates available with the Food and Agriculture Ministry on July 6, the current year's production of 5.5 million bales of cotton is the highest on record.

The increase in production is due to a larger area having been brought under cotton cultivation and favourable climate conditions at sowing time. The Third Plan target in respect of cotton production is seven million bales.

This year there were 19,569,000 acres under cotton cultivation against 19,358,000 acres last year—an increase of 9 per cent. The production has gone up by 1,19,000 bales.

The increase in area during 1963-64 is shared mainly by Punjab, Madhya Pradesh and Rajasthan. In Punjab attractive market prices were reported to have acted as an incentive to greater production. To some extent the increase has been offset by the decline in the areas in Maharashtra and Gujerat due to inadequate and untimely rains during the last Monsoon.

Production has increased mainly in Punjab, Madhya Pradesh and Maharashtra but decreased in Gujerat because of a severe cold wave in January.

Production estimates in respect of Andhra Pradesh, Gujerat, Maharashtra, Madhya Pradesh, Rajasthan and UP are based on the results of random sample crop cutting surveys. These States together account for 72.4 per cent of area and 63.5 per cent of the total production.

The groundnut crop at 5.21 million tonnes was also reported to be a record one despite a decrease in the area.

The decline in the area under groundnut production has taken place mainly in Gujerat, Andhra and Madhya Pradesh because of insufficient rainfall at sowing time. More land has been brought under the crop in Madras, Punjab, UP and Maharashtra. The increase in production is due to a higher yield per acre and favourable wealther conditions.

INDONESIA

A. IOC Lifts Disqualification: The Executive Board of the International Olympic Committee (IOC) meeting in Lausanne on June 26 lifted its disqualification of the Indonesian Olympic Committee after being informed that Indonesia wished to participate in the Tokyo Olympic Games on the same terms as the other participating nations.

[Indonesia was suspended from the IOC after refusing to admit Israel and Formosa to the Asian Games in Djakarta in 1962.]

The Minister for Sport, Mr. A. Maladi, told a news conference in Djakarta on July 1 that reports that Indonesia had asked for participation in the Tokyo Olympics were wrong.

However, he announced that Indonesia would take part in the Olympics "in the interest of preserving and strengthening the solidarity among the New Emerging Forces."

He said that many countries "had been trying to persuade" Indonesia to take part in the Olympics. Indonesia's step vis-a-vis IOC had been supported by a large number of countries especially belonging to the New Emerging Forces, including Arab States and several African and Latin American nations. Also, the Japanese Government and people had repeatedly urged Indonesia to take part in the Tokyo Olympics, and this desire had been conveyed to President Sukarno through the intermediary of the Minister for Olympic Affairs, Mr. Kawashima and the Tokyo Governor and IOC Executive Board member, Dr. Yataro Azuma and members of the Japanese Olympics Organizing Committee.

"At the request of the Japanese, President Sukarno stated that Indonesia would like to take part in the Tokyo Olympics but on one condition, notably that her dispute with the IOC should be resolved first in a way and manner acceptable to the Indonesian people."

Mr. Maladi indicated that on account of the concerted action by a large number of countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America the IOC had bowed to the pressure and lifted its ban on Indonesia.

IRAN

A. Trade Agreement With USSR: The first Iran-Soviet Payments Agreement was signed in Moscow on June 20.

The Agreement is an instrument of the existing Iran-Soviet Trade Agreement designed to facilitate banking transactions arising out of the increased trade between the two countries. The US dollar is to be the unit of currency in which trade between the two countries will be valued.

The Trade Agreement between the two countries has been extended and it is hoped that the volume of trade between them will be $45 million in the first year, increasing annually by 20 per cent in subsequent years. Iran will export zinc and lead ores, cotton, gum tragacanth, rice, raisins, wool, hides and almonds to USSR, and would import machinery, cars, chemicals and sugar.

IRAQ

A. FAO Aid: Under an Agreement signed in Baghdad on June 16, Iraq will receive food to the value of $391,640 (including transport and supervision costs) from the FAO World Food Programme.

The aid will be spread over two years and the food will be composed of wheat, sorghum, dried and skimmed milk, butter, oil, pulses and tea.

The food aid is aimed at expanding an existing scheme for developing settlers' communities in the Great Mussayib region south of Baghdad and is intended as an incentive to participants in self-help and co-operative activities. It will be distributed through local co-operatives to settlers engaged in such self-help work as the cleaning of irrigation and drainage canals, the planting of fruit orchards and the construction of communal stores for cereal and cotton crops.

ISRAEL

A. Firing On Syrian Border: Shooting broke out on the Syrian border on July 2 in which five Israeli soldiers were killed.

Damascus Radio said Israelis had opened fire with automatic weapons at a number of Arabs working in the fields. They later fired at advance Syrian posts which returned the fire. It added that at the behest of the International Truce Commission both sides ceased fire.

Syria's Presidential Council convened an emergency session on July 2 under Gen. Amin Hafez to keep in close touch with developments on the tense Syria-Israel frontier. The session was held as fighting raged across the central sector of the frontier.

An Israeli army spokesman said in Tel Aviv that two Israeli soldiers and workers were wounded in the exchange of fire.

He said the Syrians opened fire on an Israeli military patrol moving along the Ashmorah-Noferah road and on two agricultural machines in the same area. The fire was returned by Israeli forces using machine guns.

JAPAN

A. White Paper On Foreign Trade: Anxiety in spite of the continuing spectacular success of Japanese economic measures is discernible in a strong call for increased exports made in the annual White Paper on foreign trade published on June 27.

It said that last year while exports totalling $5,450 million rose by 11 per cent over the 1962 figure, imports totalling $6,740 million went up by 20 per cent, and a massive inflow of foreign capital was able to achieve an over-all balance of payments of only $37 million. The balancing of trade and invisible deficits with foreign capital was precarious, however necessary at present, the Paper said, and since an invisible deficit was not easily overcome the urgent goal must be to balance the current account with increased exports.

Calling for an export-centred economy on the West German model, the Paper said there was need for more insistent emphasis on continued growth, modernization of light industry and further development of the heavy and chemical industries, and easier deferred payment terms for developing countries.

Japan's share of the world market had not yet reached the pre-War level. The slackening export growth (the annual average rise for 1959 to 1963 was 12 per cent compared with 17 per cent from 1953 to 1959) was attributed to intensified competition, particularly from developing countries' light industrial products and to what the Paper termed the still insufficient competitiveness of the Japanese heavy and chemical industries. Although the latter accounted in 1963 for 53 per cent of the total exports (an increase of 5 per cent on 1962), this was due mainly to the export of ships, iron and steel, while heavy machinery exports remained low.

The Paper called for active participation by Japan in world economic organizations where notably it should strive to persuade Europeans to remove anti-Japanese import restrictions and the United States and Canada to abolish Japan's so-called voluntary restrictions on exports destined for those countries.

B. Trade With China: The Government has decided to permit the entry and stationing of five trade representatives from China in Tokyo provided they and the private Japanese organization which will be responsible for guaranteeing their good conduct meet a number of stringent conditions.

The conditions, published in Tokyo on June 7, took observers by surprise and dampened the enthusiasm of quarters actively interested in promoting trade with Peking. The latter fear the conditions would not conduce greatly to expanding trade or improving relations with China.

Among the conditions are that the trade representatives will not be permitted to have an "office"; they will be barred from carrying out any form of consular activities such as formalities for entry, remittance of cash and payments of trade accounts; they will not be allowed to make trips in Japan or hire employees without prior notification to the Japanese Government; and even their postal address should be in care of the so-called "Takasaki office" which is the Japanese organization handling private trade with China.

Before the Chinese are allowed to enter Japan, the Takasaki office is to submit written guarantees that the Chinese will not engage in political activities or make radio and television appearances. The stay of the Chinese in Japan will be limited to one year.

Meanwhile, the 4,000-ton Liao Yuan, believed to be the first Chinese ship ever to visit Japan, docked at Tokyo on June 24 with 3,000 tons of maize imported by a private trader. This modest arrival marked the resumption of two-way traffic as trade expands cautiously but surely.

Seventy police were at the quayside as a precaution against Right-wing demonstrators, but they were not needed as 300 persons, mostly members of Japan-China promotion associations, cheered the little ship in. The 51 crew were granted temporary landing permits, but will be sightseeing in Tokyo under police escort.

The money is to be spent on repairs to buildings of historical importance, the building of roads and guest-houses and for the training of personnel in the fields of tourism and the preservation of historical monuments.

The number of visitors to Jordan in 1963 rose to 323,470 compared with 209,001 in 1962.

LAOS

A. Six-Nation Appeal For Peace: The Ambassadors of Britain, United States, Canada, India, South Viet-Nam and Thailand concluded on June 29 a month-long series of informal consultations with a call for an immediate cease-fire and withdrawal of all forces to positions held before the outbreak of recent fighting.

In a communique, all the countries concerned except India said that there was indisputable evidence of North Viet-Namese involvement in the recent Pathet Lao attacks against neutralist forces in the Plain of Jars.

India joined the consultations at the last minute when they started on June 2, only on the understanding that she regarded the consultations as informal and not as a consultation envisaged under Article 4 of the Geneva Declaration of 1962. India declined consequently to be associated with any assessment of recent developments in the military situation.

The Ambassadors' talks were held after Britain as co-Chairman to the 1962 Geneva accords issued an invitation to signatory nations to participate in talks to discuss the latest Laotian crisis.

Communist countries that signed the accords boycotted the talks, and France, which preferred another full Geneva Conference, declined the invitation.

The communique said that the remaining five representatives condemned the recent Pathet Lao attacks on the neutralist forces and that the attacks were clearly made with North Viet-Namese assistance and that this was "a flagrant violation of the Geneva Agreements."

The representative of Canada, Thailand, USA, UK and South Viet-Nam agreed to invite Britain and the Soviet Union as co-Chairmen of the 1962 Geneva Conference on Laotian neutrality, in the way each thought appropriate:

(1) To address an urgent appeal for an immediate cease-fire to all parties in Laos.

(2) To call for a withdrawal of pro-Communist Pathet Lao forces to the positions held on February 1, 1964.

(3) To call all North Viet-Namese forces to withdraw from Laotian territory and to desist from any further use of Laotian territory for the purpose of interfering in the internal affairs of the Republic of Viet-Nam.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

(4) To call on the International Commission for Supervision and Control in Laos (India, Chairman; Canada and Poland) to submit a report on the situation without delay.

(5) To provide general guidance to the International Commission to assist it in its duties to control and verify the cease-fire and a withdrawal called for under points 2 and 3 of this declaration.

The Commission should report to the co-Chairmen on the action it takes (drawing attention to any hindrance encountered in the carrying out of its duties) on the observance of the cease-fire and the progress made with, and date of completion of, the withdrawal.

(6) To call on the Royal Laotian Government and on all military commanders and other persons exercising authority in any area of Laos to give the Commission every assistance in carrying out the tasks outlined for it in the declaration.

The Ambassador of India did not wish to associate himself with the document. He expressed the view that the International Commission was the only body charged by the Geneva Conference to make investigations into violations of the cease-fire and to furnish appropriate reports to the co-Chairmen.

He also expressed the view that the Commission should be requested to make a speedy investigation into the present military situation, and to report urgently to the co-Chairmen of the Geneva Conference if they had not already done so.

Prince Souvanna Phouma Defends US Reconnaissance Flights:

Meanwhile, the Prime Minister, Prince Souvanna Phouma, in a Note to Britain and Russia defended US reconnaissance flights over Laos and air attacks against Communist positions.

In his Note, dated June 15, he dismissed Communist protests against reconnaissance flights and air attacks as "propaganda."

He said his Government agreed it was necessary to convene a new international conference on Laos. The Laotian problem was one of "foreign intervention." The success of another conference was doubtful if the Pathet Lao and their North Viet-Namese allies "continued to violate the 1962 Geneva Conference."

Reported Construction Of Road By Chinese:

In an interview with Mr. Frank Robertson of The Daily Telegraph of London, made public on June 28, Prince Souvanna Phouma said that, according to statements made by two Chinese prisoners, Peking had given strict orders that a strategic road linking the Chinese Province of Yunnan with the Laotian village of Muong Sing must be completed without delay.

This was the first time he had officially stated that the Chinese are building a second road linking Yunnan with northern Laos.

The Chinese completed a road linking the Chinese town of Meng La to the Laotian town of Phong Saly in 1963.

[Muong Sing is linked by road to Nam Tha, which is connected with another route leading to the Thai border town of Ban Houei Sai.]

Prince Souvanna alleged that Chinese technicians and military advisers were in the Laotian province of Phong Saly but added "that they are passing off as engineers, advisers or attaches" (the Chinese have a consulate in Phong Saly).

On June 28, he announced that he would agree to a Pathet Lao proposal for a summit meeting on the Plain of Jars provided the Pathet Lao gave up the territory they recently seized from Neutralist forces. If this condition was unacceptable to the Pathet Lao, the only solution was to meet in a foreign country.

He said he knew "definitely" that a Pathet Lao attack against Moungisoui, the last Neutralist stronghold in the strategic Plain of Jars area, was imminent, and would come from four or five directions.

A summit meeting between the Pathet Lao, Neutralist and Rightist factions was urgently required because of the "grave situation in Laos and international repercussions."

However, his half-brother Prince Souphanouvong, the Pathet Lao leader, continued to oppose his proposal to meet in the Royal Capital of Luang Prabang.

Prince Souvanna Phouma said the Laotian summit would be an excellent preparation for another 14-nation conference on Laos, demanded by the Pathet Lao leader.

MALAYSIA

A. Tengku Abdul Rehman Appeals For 'Free World' Support: The Prime Minister, Tengku Abdul Rehman, told a news conference in Kuala Lumpur on July 29 that if Malaysia was not to be sacrificed at the altar of President Sukarno's ambition, the 'free world' must rally to Malaysia's call immediately.

He said President Sukarno had made clear at the recent summit conference in Tokyo (see page 5931) that he would never make peace with Malaysia. The Tengku said that he was now in a better position to inform his Commonwealth colleagues and leaders in France and United States of the real situation.

He pointed out that Malaysia occupied a position of great strategic importance and if she were allowed to be lost there would be grave consequences.

He said he was not going to ask any of his allies for help. It was up to them to decide what they wished to do. If any help was offered he would gladly accept it. The steady supply of aid in men and material from Britain, Australia and New Zealand had proved very useful.

He said Indonesian hostility to Malaysia was the result of two dominant factors. The first was the serious concern of President Sukarno and other Indonesian leaders over Malaysian progress since 1957. The economic achievements of Malaysia had impressed the people of Kalimantan, Sulawesi and other parts of Indonesia.

The other dominant factor, he said, was Communist pressure on President Sukarno. The Communists had now realised that they could not seize power in Malaysia through internal uprising.

British Support:

The British Government's decision to stand firmly behind Malaysia "in resisting any acts of aggression by Indonesia" was affirmed by the Prime Minister, Sir Alec Douglas-Home, in the House of Commons on July 2.

Asked whether, following recent Indonesian aggression against Malaysia, he would propose to the Commonwealth Prime Ministers a policy of Commonwealth support for Malaysia in resistance to such aggression in accordance with the UN Charter, he said: "All Commonwealth Governments recognize Malaysia, and several have given her material support in her efforts to maintain her integrity and independence."

He was then asked whether, in view of a statement on July 1 by the Soviet Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. A. Mikoyan, that the Soviet Government intended to supply arms to Indonesia, he would make it clear that the British Government, while being ready to co-operate with any other Government in securing a settlement of the Indonesian-Malaysian problem, was going to stand firm behind Malaysia in resistance to any acts of aggression which took place.

Sir Alec replied: "I do not think I can make this any clearer. Of course, that is the decision of Her Majesty's Government."

Asked if he had yet consulted the Prime Minister of Malaysia, Tengku Abdul Rehman, with a view to raising the question of Indonesian aggression at United Nations as a threat to peace, he said he was in continuous consultation with the Prime Minister of Malaysia.

He added: "Tengku Abdul Rehman will be here in a few days, and we shall no doubt have a discussion on these matters."

MONGOLIA (Outer)

A. Withdrawal Of Chinese Workers: China reported on June 23 that all but 900 Chinese workers had been withdrawn from Mongolia.

A Peking Radio broadcast said that 5,200 workers had been pulled out since April 24 at the request of the Mongolian Government. The remaining 900 Chinese would be withdrawn shortly.

There was no indication whether the withdrawal followed worsening of Chinese-Mongolian relations. (Mongolia supports Russia in the ideological dispute.)

NEPAL

A. Budget For 1964-65: Changes in excise duty and a surcharge on goods imported under Form AR-1 highlighted the taxation proposals the Finance Minister, Mr. Surya Bahadur Thapa, announced on July 6 while presenting a Rs. 8-crore deficit Budget for 1964-65 in the Rashtriya Panchayat.

Under the present system, excise duty on goods of Indian origin imported into Nepal under Form AR-1 are refundable to the country.

The Budget estimates for the current year show a revenue yield of Rs. 34 crores leaving a deficit of Rs. 3 crores.

On the revenue side about Rs. 18 crores is to be raised from internal resources while about Rs. 13 crores is expected as foreign aid.

Mr. Thapa hoped to offset the deficit from cash balances and foreign and internal loans.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

To meet the deficit, he suggested the following measures:

(1) Imposition of a surcharge on imported goods of Indian origin (Rs. 10,00,000);

(2) Levy of a new excise duty on bidi and fractional enhancement in the rate of the excise duty on sugar, candy, cigarettes and liquor (Rs. 60,00,000);

(3) Re-adjustment in land revenue (Rs. 40,00,000);

(4) Enhancement of income-tax (Rs. 10,00,000).

The remaining deficit—Rs. 1.50 crores—would be met by raising an internal loan of Rs. 50,00,000 and a foreign loan of Rs. 1 crore.

Of over 60 commodities of Indian origin on which excise duty is realised and refunded to Nepal by the Indian Government, Nepal has been levying a surcharge on 18 items. From now the surcharge will be levied on nine more items.

The surcharge will be imposed in such a manner that the price of an Indian commodity (including surcharge) does not exceed the price of the same commodity imported from other countries.

Mr. Thapa told a news conference later that austerity was the keynote of Government expenditure and referred in this context to the curtailment of the expenditure on the royal household by Rs. 6 crores.

Nepal, he said, was trying to be more self-reliant and less dependent on foreign aid.

He disclosed that a Bill to prohibit Nepalese nationals from investing in foreign countries would shortly be introduced in the Rashtriya Panchayat. This would help conserve the country's resources which could be utilized for national development projects.

Replying to a question, he said that there was no proposal to repatriate profits earned by Nepalese investers abroad.

Foreign Aid:

According to the Budget estimates, India's aid to Nepal during the next financial year will be more than that of any other country.

The USA had topped the list so far in this regard. India's contribution this year is expected to be Rs. 9.98 crores (Nepalese currency) and that of USA Rs. 2.44 crores.

Nepal expects Rs. 13 crores in foreign aid this year. Aid from China will be Rs. 1.25 crores, the Soviet Union Rs. 11,50,000, Switzerland Rs. 6,50,000 and the Ford Foundation Rs. 1,29,000.

B. Ministerial Changes: It was reported from Khatmandu on July 6 that within a fortnight of his return from a month-long tour abroad, King Mahendra had made sweeping changes in Nepal's set-up, following "bitter controversies" among those in authority on many matters, particularly the handling of the recent student agitation for the "right to form independent unions."

He relieved Mr. Rishikesh Shaha, Chairman of the Standing Committee of the Raj Sabha, due to his alleged support to the student movement.

Simultaneously he relieved Dr. Tulsi Giri, the other party to the controversy, of his portfolios of Home and Panchayat Affairs, which were given to him only three months ago.

These portfolios were transferred to Mr. Vishwa Bandhu Thapa, Chairman of the National Panchayat, a new member of the Cabinet. Dr. Giri has been left with only Palace Affairs.

There will now thus be two Vice-Chairmen—Finance, Planning and Economic Affairs Minister Mr. Surya Bahadur Thapa and Mr. Vishwa Bandhu Thap, and the strength of the Cabinet will be eight.

Dr. Giri's actions as Home Minister in ordering the arrest without warrant of student leaders and ban on two newspapers, carrying an article by Mr. Rishikesh Shaha supporting the student movement, were assailed by Mr. Shaha.

As a third step, the King relieved Mr. Tanka Prasad Acharya, a former Prime Minister who had resigned on health grounds, of the vice-chairmanship of the National Guidance Council, Nepal's policy-making body, over which the King himself presides.

Mr. R. Devkota Resigns:

Mr. Rajeshwar Devkota, Assistant Agriculture Minister, has resigned.

He was understood to have taken this step to contest election to the Chairmanship of the Rashtriya Panchayat.

The election was necessitated by the appointment of the Chairman, Mr. Vishwa Bandhu Thapa, as Home and Panchayat Affairs Minister.

The King has accepted the resignation of Mr. Devkota.

B. Import Policy For July-December, 1964: The import of industrial raw material has been further liberalized in the new import policy for the period July-December, 1964, announced on July 2.

The number of items on the free list has been raised to 51 and will cover practically the bulk of requirements of industry for imported raw material and spares.

Announcing the new policy in a radio broadcast, the Chief Controller of Imports and Exports, Mr. Shaful Azam, said a large segment of the economy in the private sector had been freed from import control. "Now that we have launched an import programme which makes such a hopeful and challenging departure from the past, we would expect our trade and industry to respond handsomely to this gesture by ensuring increased production, a reasonable price level, greater availability of quality goods and above all a quick build-up of export surplus."

He said that since 1960, the Government had been pursuing a policy of progressive liberalization of imports. A major step in that direction was taken in January when it was decided to place four items of iron and steel on the free list.

Besides iron and steel, items like dyes and chemicals and nonferrous metals, rubber, essential oils, linseed oil, nylon pigments and dry colours, marine diesel engines, nylon twine, cotton yarn of 80 counts and above, glue and gum, raw material for fluorescent tubes, sizing material and cinema carbons have been placed on the free list.

However, in respect of corrugated iron sheets, usually a consumer item, the importers of which are scattered all over the country, it is proposed to confine imports on the free list to established importers and OGL importers, within the minimum limit of Rs. 50,000 and the maximum limit of Rs. 5,00,000. The import of maintenance spares and components by industries at 100 per cent of entitlement has also been made free without any restrictions.

The trade will also be able to import a large variety of essential consumer items freely. Some of these items are technical, scientific, reference and text-books selected journals and magazines, life-saving drugs, scientific instruments, apparatus and appliances, laboratory glassware, duplicating stencils, painters' materials, surgical instruments made of rubber, including contraceptives and X-ray films and plates for East Pakistan.

The import of coal has been brought on the free list in addition to cement.

For imports of raw material not covered by the free list, the authorities are simplifying the procedure by placing all industries on a uniform footing for the purpose of licensing.

To help the woollen industry which has been staggering under the ill-effects of inadequate licensing, the Government has decided to place wool tops on bonus. Simultaneously substantial reductions are being made in the import duty on wool tops and excise duty and sales-tax on woollen manufactures. The Government is also issuing directives to the mills to ensure that they work in two shifts to maximize production.

Under the new policy the OGL items have shrunk to 34 due to the placing of a large variety of items on the free list.

Mr. Azam maintained that the shrinkage of the number of items on the OGL should not cause any concern because it would in fact enable the Government to absorb comparatively a large number of new people in the trade within the present resources.

To regulate imports, the number of items common to the licensable and bonus list has been reduced to the minimum and will consist only of a couple of items like machinery and spares and automatic vehicles and their parts. The policy provides incentives to exports by proposing that any person other than the industrial consumers can apply for a licence for an OGL item. A list of 50 items for such licence has also been prepared. The Government has also taken steps to regulate imports through a single source of finance.

C. Export Price For Jute And Tea: In a Press Note on June 29, the Government announced its decision to simplify the present structure of jute prices, which is quite complicated, grade by grade and to give the growers full benefit of reduction of export duty.

The Government fixed the price of three grades of jute. The minimum prices are Rs. 20 per maund for Northern, Rs. 22 for District and Rs. 28 for Jat. There will be no distinction between white and toosa jute for purposes of minimum prices.

Jute and tea policies for the next crop year were finalised by the Presidential Cabinet at Murree.

According to another Press Note, no export quota has been fixed for tea because accurate estimate of tea crop would not be available before the end of August. In case a clear supply is available after meeting full internal requirements, export quota might be fixed in September.

According to the Press Note, the producers of tea will be permitted to withdraw up to 50 per cent of their offering in auction if prices bid are unreasonable.

Tea for internal consumption will continue to be sold at Chittagong internal auctions. However, as previously producers will be permitted to sell direct to purchasers up to 20 per cent of production or 20,000 lbs in season whichever is less.

The current rate of excise duty on tea will remain unchanged except that rebates will be given for increased production as already notified by the Central Board of Revenue.

The Press Note on jute said: "It has been decided to continue buffer stock operations. Operations will continue not only through Jute Marketing Corporation but also through agents appointed by the Jute Board on guaranteed re-purchase basis. These agents will operate at centres indicated by the Jute Board. Prices at which re-purchase of the agents' unsold stocks should be made after a stipulated period will be determined by the Jute Board.

"The per cent price advantage, which was given to the Jute Marketing Corporation for buffer stock operations, will be abolished.

"Export minimum prices will be aboilshed with immediate effect. The Government will, however, watch the situation closely and if necessary will not hesitate to re-impose minimum export prices. Export price check will, however, continue.

"The quota system of exports will be maintained and will be linked with phased purchases in internal market by shippers. Phased purchases will be enforced in case of jute mills also. The export price differential of sterling per ton in favour of small shippers will be abolished.

"The export of mesta will continue as at present.

"It has also been decided to set up a committee in the Ministry of Commerce to make recommendations regarding establishment of a Jute Price Stabilization Fund, if possible during the ensuing season."

TURKEY

A. Vote Of Confidence On Cyprus Policy: The Prime Minister, Mr. Ismet Inonu, on June 19 won a vote of confidence on his Cyprus policy by 200 votes to 194, with two abstentions.

He declared later that the purpose of the confidence vote had been achieved and that he would leave on June 21 for the United States for consultations with President L. B. Johnson.

The narrow vote in the Assembly was interpreted in political circles in Ankara as meaning that about half the Assembly was dissatisfied with the Government's policy of "moderation" on Cyprus and will enable Mr. Inonu when in Washington to argue to President Johnson that he is under powerful pressure from a political opposition which would prefer to see a Turkish military intervention in Cyprus.

The vote can be calculated to re-inforce Turkish arguments that if a solution of the Cyprus problem acceptable to Turkey was not found soon, there was serious danger of Mr. Inonu being overthrown and replaced by a new and far more bellicose leadership. The Opposition Justice Party has for months past been criticizing Mr. Inonu for indecision and for having "missed the bus" with the invasion of Cyprus.

In putting the issue of confidence earlier in the week, Mr. Inonu had stated that if he did not win a clear majority from the Assembly on his Government's policy he would resign, and ask the Opposition Justice Party, the second largest party in the National Assembly, to form a Government.

The large adverse vote on June 19 was given by the Justice Party, and elements of the New Turkey Party, the Republican Peasants' Party and the small Nation Party. These parties, which had previously supported Mr. Inonu's minority Government, had reacted angrily to what they described as Mr. Inonu's "political manoeuvre" in putting the vote of confidence just before his journey to Washington.

The close result nevertheless came as a surprise, as the majority of political commentators in the past few days had predicted that Mr. Inonu would win his clear majority. The result caused consternation.

Immediately after the vote Mr. Inonu consulted with leaders of the ruling Republican People's Party, and later went to the presidential palace to consult with President Gursel.

The Opposition parties also reacted angrily on June 19 to an intervention by President Gursel, warning the parties that it would be against the national interest to unseat the Prime Minister on the eve of his visit to the United States. The parties held the President's act to be unconstitutional.

The political crisis came at a moment of economic difficulty, when the future of the Five-Year Plan and foreign economic support for Turkey is still uncertain. There had recently been unconfirmed rumours of unrest in the armed forces.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. American Military Preparations: The United States has nearly completed the construction of an elaborate air base at Danang which, together with specialised facilities elsewhere in South Viet-Nam and Thailand, give the West a forward strategic position confronting China.

The system of installations has been planned to serve anti-Communist strategy for a South-East Asia area far broader than the present war effort inside South Viet-Nam.

In terms of contingency planning, American officials have long recognized that the US Seventh Fleet or existing land bases would give an insufficient staging position if ever there were a large-scale American military involvement in the lands lying on China's southern frontier.

A high-level conference of American officials in Honolulu early in June confirmed and elaborated the preparedness measures to be undertaken with the highest priority.

The conference and subsequent White House decisions emphasized that USA stands ready to meet China head-on rather than be forced out of South-East Asia. The accelerated military build-up grew from the realisation that facilities and organization must be ready before any threats of retaliation against continued Communist advances can be made effectively.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Though the improvements are not yet complete, Danang airfield is already serving as a base for the F-100 jets which have reportedly attacked Communist positions in the Laotian Plain of Jars.

The base will tie in with other air force installations at Transonhut and Bien Hoa air bases near Saigon, at Nhatrang airport and at bases in Thailand, particularly Udan, centre of a vast air force build-up two years ago when American troops were dispatched to Thailand to discourage Communist military pressure in Laos.

The build-up is far in excess of what would be useful in South Viet-Nam's guerrilla war. It has been planned for years as policy-makers realised that an eventual confrontation with China might take place.

USA is shipping tanks and other military equipment to re-inforce stockpiles in Thailand built up during a similar crisis two years ago.

On that occasion, 5,000 troops were also flown to Thailand. They were stationed close to the Mekong Valley. So far no troops movement has been revealed.

But it was made known on June 19 that USA had 200,000 troops in the Pacific region, including several thousand Marines. The Seventh Fleet, it was said, represented a force in striking power stronger than all the armies ever put together anywhere. Inherent in this assessment is the knowledge of atomic weapons with which the force is liberally supplied.

The military moves began with reconnaissance flights over the Plain of Jars in Laos. When one of the planes was shot down, fighter escorts were provided. When a fighter plane was also brought down, USA bombed Pathet Lao anti-aircraft sites. The reconnaissance flights are continuing; so is the bombing by Laotian planes.

The purpose of US activity is manifold. It is expected to provide a deterrent against the Chinese and North Viet-Nam.

Secondly, it is intended to boost the morale of the Laotian Government and the Neutral forces and also of South Viet-Nam. Recent doubts about US intentions are sought to be dispelled.

Thirdly, this is in a sense a Cuban-type operation in which USA makes its willingness to fight crystal clear, offering China a choice between withdrawal and retaliation.

North Viet-Namese Protest:

Following the new American moves, the Foreign Minister of North Viet-Nam, Mr. Xuan Thuy, in a Note to the co-Chairmen of the Geneva Conference said:

"In an attempt to salvage their weakening position in the special war, the US ruling circles have, of late, been contemplating many measures designed to expand their aggression in South Viet-Nam and to intensify acts of provocation and sabotage against the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam.

"Many Western sources have confirmed that at the Honolulu Conference, held early in June, 1964 under the chairmanship of Dean Rusk and McNamara, leading personalities of the Defence and State Departments discussed plans of air raids and sabotage activities against the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam.

"Another step which the United States is striving to carry out consists of securing a UN intervention in South Viet-Nam for the purposes of expanding its war in this area...

"Most recently the US Government appointed General Maxwell Taylor, Chairman of the US Joint Chiefs of Staff, to replace Cabot Lodge as Ambassador to South Viet-Nam. The resignation of Cabot Lodge and replacement by the US military commander in Saigon prove that the US policy of armed aggression here is sustaining failure. As is known, General M. Taylor was the author of the Special War theory within the framework of the US strategy under Kennedy, who had made repeated visits to South Viet-Nam in the past three years to provide leadership in the carrying out of this war. Therefore, the appointment of General M. Taylor as Ambassador to South Viet-Nam clearly shows that, in defiance of the condemnation by world public opinion and by progressive circles in the United States, the Johnson administration is showing itself to be extremely obdurate and bellicose and is still persisting in its designs of stepping up and expanding the war of aggression in South Viet-Nam.

"The Government of the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam earnestly calls on the co-Chairmen and the participants of the 1954 Geneva Conference on Indo-China to pay particular attention to the serious and urgent situation expounded above and to take firm and timely action to demand that the US Government give up its design of intensifying provocation and sabotage against the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, end the war of aggression in South Viet-Nam, withdraw all US troops, military personnel, and arms from South Viet-Nam, let the South Viet-Namese people settle themselves their own affairs, and ensure correct implementation of the Geneva Agreements in South Viet-Nam."

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. Increase In World Population And Industrial Production—UN Statistical Year-Book: Important statistical information of world population, industrial production etc. given in the 15th edition of the United Nations Statistical Year-book was made available on June 5.

The world's population reached a record high of 3,135,000,000 by mid-1962—an increase of 25 per cent over mid-1950 level. At the same time, world industrial production more than doubled with an increase of 118 per cent. Total production of energy of all kinds multiplied by 1½ times in the eight-year period 1954-62. More people than ever were travelling by rail, air and automobile.

The data covers all countries except Albania, China, Mongolia, North Korea and North Viet-Nam.

The Year-book statistics show that world economic activity during 1962 continued its expansion and new developments were also marked in the social and cultural fields.

The volume presents authoritative international statistics on demographic, economic, financial, social and cultural subjects.

The statistics show, for example, that:

(1) Production of crude petroleum in 1962 reached 1,215 million metric tons, an increase of 8 per cent over 1961, whereas production of coal increased by only 2 per cent;

(2) In 1962 USSR produced 31 per cent and the United States 17 per cent of total production of iron-ore;

(3) Out of the world production of 331 million metric tons of crude steel in 1962 the United States was responsible for 76 million metric tons;

(4) Production of man-made textile fibres, such as nylon and orlon, multiplied 32 times between 1948 and 1962, with the United States producing 41 per cent of the 1962 total;

(5) A total of 2,665 million kw hours of electricity was produced in the world, more than one-third in the United States.

The Year-book was prepared by the Statistical Office of United Nations with the co-operation of the statistical authorities of more than 160 countries and territories, and with the assistance of the specialized agencies and certain other inter-governmental bodies.

The publication includes statistics on birth, death and infant mortality rates, agricultural production and livestock, and fish catches. Also figures are given on consumption of fertilizers, transport, tourist travel, world trade, public finance, housing, medical service, education, book production, newsprint production and consumption, daily newspapers, films, radio and television.

The population of the world was estimated at 3,135 million in mid-1962, compared with 2,509 million in 1950, and 2,893 million in 1958. Asia (excluding USSR) contains 56.3 per cent of the world total and Oceania has the smallest population (less than 1 per cent of world total). Europe and North and South America accounted for 27.5 per cent of world population in 1962.

Over the period 1958-62, world population has increased at the annual rate of 2 per cent.

Europe (excluding USSR) is the most densely populated continent with 88 persons for every square kilometre and Oceania the least densely populated continent with 2 persons per square kilometre. The world average is 23 persons per square kilometre.

World production of coal increased by 35 per cent between 1954 and 1962 and by 2 per cent as compared with 1961, but it was at the same level as in 1960. Four of the leading industrial countries—the United States, USSR, United Kingdom and West Germany—accounted respectively for the following percentages of world coal production in 1962: 20 per cent, 19 per cent, 10 per cent and 7 per cent.

World production of crude petroleum was 8 per cent higher in 1962 compared with 1961; the percentage increase between 1954 and 1962 was 82 per cent. The output in 1961 of the United States, the largest producer of petroleum, was 2 per cent higher than in the previous year; that of USSR, the second largest producer, 12 per cent higher. Four Middle Eastern countries (Iran, Iraq, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia), accounting for 23 per cent of the world total in 1962, showed an increase in production of 9 per cent over the preceding year.

World production of iron-ore (excluding China), as expressed in terms of iron content, increased by 6 million metric tons or about 3 per cent between 1961 and 1962. United States production rose in 1962 by slightly more than 1 per cent compared with 1961 but was only 72 per cent of production in the peak year of 1957. The USSR produced 74.3 million metric tons of iron-ore (in terms of iron content) in 1962, an increase of 9 per cent over 1961.

Since 1958, USSR has replaced the United States as the world's largest producer of iron-ore, producing 31 per cent of the world's total in 1962, against 17 per cent produced by the United States.

World production of crude steel, which was nearly 361 million metric tons in 1962, increased by 6 million metric tons or 2 per cent over the previous year. This increase was mainly due to growth of output of USSR by over 5½ million metric tons or 8 per cent over 1961.

The world's textile industries used less raw cotton and raw wool in 1962-63 than in the preceding year. Moreover, industrial consumption of raw cotton steadily declined from 1959-60, when consumption reached its peak. At the same time, there was a phenomenal expansion in the use of man-made textile materials of cellulosic and non-cellulosic origin.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

World industrial consumption of raw cotton in 1962-63 was 9,960,000 metric tons, which was 5 per cent less than the peak consumption year 1959-60, but 11 per cent more than consumption during the year 1955-56.

Production of man-made textile fibres has increased very rapidly throughout the world. The world output of cellulosic fibres—rayon and acetate filaments (continuous and discontinuous)—rose from 1,153,000 metric tons in 1948 to 2,864,000 metric tons in 1962, an increase of almost 2.5 times.

World production of non-cellulosic fibres (nylon, orlon and similar synthetics) rose from 34,000 metric tons in 1948 to 1,079,500 metric tons, almost 32 times.

The Year-book provides data on world and regional energy production, trade and consumption, classified by main sources—coal and lignite, crude petroleum, natural gas and hydro-electricity. All the figures are expressed as the equivalent number of metric tons of coal. In the 8-year period 1954-1962, total world production of energy in terms of tons of coal equivalent increased from 3,025 million metric tons to 4,648 million or over 1½ times. In 1962, the production of coal and lignite was 132 per cent of the 1954 level; crude petroleum 172 per cent, natural gas two times, and hydro-electricity nearly 1.8 times.

The proportions of the various forms of energy to total energy in 1962 and 1954 were as follows (1954 percentages in parentheses): coal and lignite 47 (55), crude petroleum 35 (31), natural gas 16 (12) and hydro-electricity 2 (2). These figures show the shift from coal and lignite to crude petroleum and natural gas.

The Year-book provides data on railway traffic, motor vehicles in use, merchant shipping and civil aviation. World railway freight traffic expanded rapidly and in 1962 reached a record of 3,338,000 million net ton-kilometres, 4 per cent higher than in 1961 and almost 1.9 times the volume in 1948.

The number of motor vehicles in use in the world (excluding USSR, Eastern Europe, China, North Korea and North Viet-Nam) continued to increase in 1962. Figures available indicate an increase of 6 per cent in passenger cars and 1½ per cent in commercial vehicles as compared with 1961.

The world merchant shipping fleet continued to expand in 1963, when the total tonnage of steamships and motor-ships had risen to 146 million gross registered tons, 4 per cent higher than in 1963 and nearly 24 per cent higher than in 1958.

Civil aviation continued its growth: in 1962, 3,240 million kilometres were flown by all of the world's airlines (domestic and international). This was an increase of 4 per cent over the previous year and nearly 23 per cent since 1958. Passenger-kilometres flown added up to 130,000 million compared with 117,000 million in the previous year and 71,000 million in 1958. More mail went by air in 1962 than in any previous year—800 million mail-ton kilometres in 1962, 11 per cent more than in 1961 and twice as much as in 1958. These figures excluded China, USSR and other countries which were not members of the International Civil Aviation Organization.

B. Pope Paul Relaxes Ban On Catholics' Cremation: Pope Paul VI has agreed to relax the ban on cremation for Roman Catholics.

The dispatch of a circular to this effect to the hierarchy was confirmed at the Vatican on June 5.

Though the measure ends the Roman Church's distinction of being the only Christian body to have explicitly prohibited this form of disposing of the dead, it is not intended to change the traditional form of Christian burial.

The relaxation applies in places where ancient customs include cremation, and in special circumstances of a hygienic or economic kind when local bishops may give permission to members of the Church who wish to be cremated after they die.

It was made clear in the circular that the prohibition still remains in force for those intending to give cremation an anti-religious or specifically anti-Roman Catholic character, particularly when the object is to deny the doctrine of the immortality of the soul and the resurrection of the body.

Prohibition of the practice was introduced in the Roman Church as a matter of ecclesiastical discipline by a decree of the Holy Office in 1886, at a time when the movement for cremation was regarded as anti-Catholic in tone. The revival of interest in cremation in the 19th century was largely the work of free-thinkers.

C. Per Capita National Income —Survey Of Nine Countries: A study of the per capita national income of nine selected countries discloses a wide variation between developed countries and under-developed countries. In 1961, the per capita national income of USA was nearly Rs. 11,000, while that of India was merely Rs. 336.

The annual percentage growth rate from 1953 to 1962 was the highest at 16.33 for Japan, while it was 1.25 for Ceylon.

Nine selected countries, namely, USA, UK, France, West Germany, Australia, Japan, India, Pakistan and Ceylon, have been considered for the purpose of the study. Amongst developed countries, the per capita income in USA, which is the highest in the world, rose from Rs. 9,095.3 in 1953 to Rs. 11,621.7 in 1962, indicating an annual percentage growth rate of 3.08. The UK, France, and Germany recorded more or less the same percentage growth rate of per capita national income. The per capita national income for UK appreciated by 112.0 per cent to Rs. 7,661.1 in 1962 from Rs. 3,592.5 in 1953. The per capita national income in France was Rs. 2,570.4 in 1953. It increased by Rs. 2,935.7 to Rs. 5,506.1 in 1962, indicating an annual percentage growth rate of 12.69. The per capita national income in West Germany advanced from Rs. 2,617.7 in 1953 to Rs. 5,444.1 in 1962. Thus the annual percentage growth rate (of the per capita national income) in this country works out to 11.99 between 1953 and 1962.

The per capita national income in Australia, which was Rs. 4,316.4 in 1953, increased by 34.47 per cent to Rs. 5,799.9 in 1962. For Japan, the per capita national income recorded the highest rise of nearly 146.98 per cent between 1953 and 1962, or an annual percentage growth rate of 16.33. The per capita national income for this country recorded an increase of Rs. 1,259.3 from Rs. 856.8 in 1953 to Rs. 2,116.1 in 1963.

Amongst under-developed countries Pakistan exhibited the highest annual percentage growth rate of 5.46. It should be noted that the per capita national income of under-developed countries is far below the per capita national income in developed countries. The per capita national income in Pakistan noted a rise of 43.88 per cent from Rs. 240.0 in 1953 to Rs. 345.3 in 1963. In India the percentage rise in per capita national income was of the order of 22.04 during the period 1953-1962. It advanced from Rs. 278.1 in 1953 to Rs. 339.4 in 1963. It is significant that although the annual percentage growth rate for Ceylon is the least, the per capita national income is at a higher level as compared to the per capita national income of India or Pakistan. The per capita national income in Ceylon moved up by Rs. 59.3 to Rs. 586.5 in 1962, from Rs. 527.2 in 1953.

A continuous rise in the per capita national income during 1953-1962 is observed in case of UK, France, West Germany, and Japan. In USA a slight decline in the per capita national income was seen in the years 1954 and 1958. In Australia, the per capita national income declined to Rs. 5,799.9 in 1962 as compared to that in 1961.

A slight fall over the previous year in the per capita national income was also seen in the under-developed countries. In India, it declined in 1954 and 1957. Per capita national income of Pakistan declined to Rs. 222.8 in 1964 and Rs. 220.7 in 1958.

D. Russia Builds Volga-Baltic Waterway: A Moscow report said on June 7 that oil tankers and barges laden with iron-ore and manufactured goods had started moving into a new 224-mile Volga-Baltic waterway in its first navigation season.

The complex canal system of seven modern concrete shipping locks, four reservoirs, and three hydro-electric stations completes an inland deep water navigation net-work linking the Black Sea and the Caspian Sea in the south with the Baltic Sea and the White Sea in the north.

The development of such a system is of great importance in a country where railways have carried a heavy burden—more than 80 per cent of national goods traffic—and the Government has been eager to shift a greater share to the waterways during the ice-free shipping season.

Large river barges and tankers will now be able to traverse all European Russia from north to south, carrying southern grain, coal, oil, and salt to Leningrad, the Baltic republics, Karelia, and the sub-Arctic, and taking machinery from Leningrad and iron-ore from Kola Peninsula and Karelia to the south.

The fleet assembled for the modernized waterway includes oil tankers and dry goods carriers of 5,000 tons and combined oil and ore carriers of 2,700 tons, suitable for inland and coastal navigation, that will carry crude oil to the north and ore on the return trip.

The Volga-Baltic waterway is also expected to stimulate passenger traffic. Regular services began later in June between Leningrad and Volga river towns. A fleet of eight three-deckers will travel on holiday cruises between Leningrad and Astrakhan, a Caspian seaport, making the round trip, with stops along the way, in 22 days.

Reconstruction of the 150-year-old Mariinsk canal system began in 1940 but was interrupted by the Second World War. Work continued on low annual budget appropriations, with interruptions, after the War. It was only in the past five years that the project was given sufficient priority to bring it to conclusion.

E. World Farm Production: The world farm production was higher in 1962 than that in the previous year, although the rise did not keep pace with the industrial production increase.

Total consumption of fertilizers rose to a record level of 32.3 million tonnes, showing an increase of eight per cent over the previous year's consumption level.

The total fish catch also set a new record in 1962—44.7 million tonnes compared to 41.8 million tons in the previous year.

Wheat: World wheat production was 262 million tonnes, five million tonnes more than that in the bumper-crop year of 1958 and 25.5 million tonnes above the 1961 level. The Soviet Union was the largest producer of wheat in 1962, with a total of 70.6 million tonnes. The next largest producer was USA with 30 million tonnes. Canada produced 15 million tonnes, France 14 million tonnes and India 12 million tonnes.

Corn: World production in 1962 was 216 million tonnes, one per cent higher than that in the previous year, and 56 per cent higher over the 1948-52 average. The USA produced 43 per cent of the world's production, while the Soviet Union 11 per cent.

Barley: World production of barley in 1962 stood at 100 million tonnes, 69 per cent higher over 1948-52 average, and 16 per cent higher over the year 1961. The largest producer was the Soviet Union with 19.5 million tonnes, with USA producing 9.4 million tonnes, France six million and the UK 5.9 million tonnes.

Oats: World production in 1962 was 50.8 million tonnes which was a little less than the previous year.

Rice: World production of rice was 245.5 million tonnes. This was three million tonnes over 1961, and 49 per cent over the average of 1948-52. The latest available estimates of China show that it produced 85 million tonnes in 1960. The next highest producers were India with 48 million tonnes, Japan 16.3 million tonnes, Indonesia 13.4 million tonnes, Thailand 9.2 million tonnes and Burma 7.4 million tonnes.

Raw Cotton: In 1962, cotton was the largest ever grown crop, exceeding the 1948-52 average. The Soviet Union is estimated to have produced 1.5 million tonnes, India 944.000 tonnes which was almost double the average of 1948-52 average. The United Arab Republic produced 457,000 tonnes, 15 per cent more than the average for 1948-52.

Wool: In 1962-63, world clip wool production stood at 2,579.000 tonnes which was slightly less than the previous year. The Australian clip was 754,000 tonnes which was two per cent less than that of the previous year.

Milk: In 1962, the production fell to 333 million tonnes from the previous year's 348 tonnes. The average of 1948-52 was 260 million.

Meat: World production of meat rose by four per cent in 1962 over the previous year. The production was 65.2 million tonnes.

Fish: The total catch set a new record in 1962 reaching 44.7 million tonnes, against 41.8 million tonnes in the previous year. Japan, the largest fishing nation, accounted for 15 per cent of the world catch. The Soviet Union comes next with an eight per cent catch, USA 6.5 per cent. Norway three per cent, Canada 2.5 per cent, Spain 2.2 per cent and UK 2.1 per cent.

While all the countries' catches were far higher over 1948, the UK catch declined by 22 per cent in 1962 compared with 1948.

Fertilizers: Consumption of all commercial fertilizers—phosphatic, nitrogenous and potash—continued to expand steadily, showing a rise of 52 per cent from 1955-56 to 1962-63. Total consumption in 1962-63 was estimated at 32.3 million tonnes, an increase of eight per cent over the previous year.

There was a notable increase in fertilizer consumption in Asia, particularly because of the large share of increase in India for nitrogenous fertilizers. Indian consumption in 1962-63 was 310,000 tonnes as compared to 63,000 tonnes in 1948-52.

The value of world exports in 1962 reached a new record level of $(US) 140,900 million—5½ per cent higher than the previous year.

Asian countries raised their industrial output by four times between 1950-62.

F. World Gold Output And Bullion Reserves: According to the yearly report of the Bank for International Settlements In Basle (Switzerland), released on June 19, world gold production has continued to rise during 1963.

Gold sales of USSR have reached a record level. Surprisingly, private demand for gold has slightly declined, so that official bullion reserves of the Western countries have achieved the highest increase since the end of the Second World War.

Gold output, excluding that of USSR and other Communist countries rose from $1.29 billion in 1962 to $1.35 billion in 1963. South Africa alone produced gold valued at $1 billion last year. Gold output in other countries declined slightly.

Gold sales of USSR amounted to $550 million in 1963, compared to $200 million in 1962. Last year sales of the Soviet Union were concentrated in the last four months of the year and were obviously related to the extensive wheat purchases of the country. In March, 1964, gold sales were resumed by USSR and at the end of April they had reached a level considerably above the yearly average from 1959 to 1962.

The total gold supply has thus risen from $1.49 billion in 1962 to $1.9 billion last year. In 1961, it was estimated by the Bank for International Settlements, at $1.5 billion.

Official gold reserves rose by $845 million in 1963 compared to $335 million in 1962 and $600 million in 1961. Bullion reserves of continental European countries rose by $1 billion to $17.2 billion, compared to a rise of $0.9 billion in 1962. Europe did not only take up the newly produced gold, but also the gold from the official bullion reserves of USA.

The private demand for gold has declined from $1.16 billion in 1962 to $1.06 billion in 1963. As it may be taken for sure that industrial and commercial demand has increased, it may be concluded that the demand for hoarding purposes has receded by more than $100 million by which non-monetary demand has declined.

Among the most significant buyers of non-monetary gold is India. To reduce private purchases of gold, the Indian Government had taken steps to restrict gold trade in the country in January, 1963. At first these measures influenced the amount of gold going to India quite substantially. However, it seems that by the end of 1963 gold purchases had climbed back to the initial level.

The volume of gold sold in the market fluctuated strongly in 1963 between $300 million in the second quarter of the year and more than $600 million in the fourth quarter, due to Soviet sales and their timings. Nevertheless, the London fixing price did not fluctuate more than three to four US cents above and below $35.08, since the end of 1962.

The market has never been so stable since it re-opened in 1954. This is due to the operation of the gold pool. The stability in the cash market together with the trade in futures has created favourable conditions for the Bank for International Settlements.

G. New Theory On Earth's Crust—Charts Prepared: A Leningrad message on June 22 said that the All-Union Geological Scientific Research Institute in Leningrad had compiled the first charts showing the latest theory on the geological structure of the Earth's crust up to the upper mantle.

Dr. Tatyana Simonenko who supervises this work, told a Tass correspondent that "the charts will help geologists in determining finally the places on the territory of the Soviet Union where wells to a depth of 12 to 15 and more kilometres will be sunk."

The geologists set themselves the task of establishing the relations between various phenomena of the geological life of our planet, including the relations between tectonic structures and the structure of the deep zones of the Earth's crust on the basis of the contemporary knowledge about our planet, materials of aeromagnetic survey and geophysical research. In this respect the superdeep wells are to throw light on the shroud of mystery which still surrounds the bowels of the Earth.

The scientists have already received the first valuable information. The block structure of the ancient geological foundation is particularly evident on the territory of the European part of USSR. "The existence of blocks was proved by seismic soundings in the places of the deepest shear of the Earth's crust—in the eastern part of the Baltic shield," Dr. Simonenko said. The existence of steep fractures, penetrating through the entire thickness of the Earth's crust, was discovered in Karelia and in the north-west part of the Kola Peninsula and further in the Barents Sea.

This year Leningrad geologists will study for the first time the depth structure of the Earth's crust in the mountainous areas of USSR. A scientific expedition of the All-Union Geological Institute has left for the Pamirs and Tien Shan.

Another expedition has left for the Kola Peninsula. This area is of particular interest because the age of its rocks is more than 2.5 billion years. Here geologists will use the natural shear of the Earth's crust which makes the ancient rocks accessible for studies.

SUMMARY: Sheikh Abdullah's Visit To Pakistan; CPI (Leftist Faction) Convention; Emergency Committee Of Central Cabinet; DMK Secession Demand Withdrawn.

A. Sheikh Abdullah's Visit To Pakistan: A tumultuous welcome was accorded Sheikh Abdullah when he arrived in Rawalpindi on May 24 on a 16-day visit to Pakistan.

He was received at Chaklala airport by Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, the Pakistan Foreign Minister, Mr. K. H. Khurshid, "President" of occupied Kashmir, Mr. Habibullah Khan, Minister for Home and Kashmir Affairs, and Chaudhury Ghulam Abbas.

As the Sheikh and his party, including Mirza Mohammed Afzal Beg and Maulana Masoodi, stepped down from a chartered PIA plane, they were greeted by hundreds of people who had gathered at the airport hours earlier.

The first to receive the Sheikh was Mir Waiz Mohammed Yusuf Shah, who garlanded him. He was followed by Mr. Khurshid. Mr. Bhutto and Mr. Habibullah Khan embraced Sheikh Abdullah.

The Kashmiri leaders, who were profusely garlanded, were later taken in a procession through the main streets decorated with welcome arches and bunting. Large crowds lining the procession route cheered the Sheikh who was visiting this part of the subcontinent after about 18 years. The procession ended at President's Guest House where the Sheikh was staying.

Sheikh Abdullah declared on arrival that it was his firm belief that the salvation of the people of Kashmir lay in the permanent friendship between India and Pakistan.

He said that he had received sympathetic co-operation from the Press in India and expressed the hope that he would have the same response from the Press in Pakistan.

Asked whether the solution of the Kashmir issue should have priority over Indo-Pakistan amity, he said that while some people felt that Indo-Pakistani amity should have priority, others thought that the solution of the Kashmir issue should have priority. "Either way you take it, I am prepared to agree with you."

"Kashmir is one of the major irritants that has bedevilled the relations between the two countries. If we succeeded in removing it, they would succeed in removing other misunderstandings also."

He said that in India he had found some sort of frustration that no solution was possible. But, he said, he did not share that frustration. There was nothing impossible provided there was goodwill.

He said that he had already laid down three conditions for the solution of the Kashmir problem. If they accepted those three premises they could try to raise a structure. They could build upon any solution that came nearest to these three premises.

Explaining why he was anxious that any solution should not be such as would weaken the secular character of India, he said if the solution of the Kashmir issue weakened the hands of secular and progressive forces in India, it would put the minorities in India in jeopardy. He knew Pakistan would not like to place 60 million minorities in India in jeopardy.

Stressing the need for goodwill between the two countries, he said Pakistan was now a free, sovereign, independent republic. It was not difficult to achieve Pakistan, but "it is difficult to maintain its freedom."

He said that every Pakistan must try to find ways to protect the country's freedom. "I think establishing amity and friendship with your close neighbour will not weaken your freedom but strengthen your independence." It would solve his problem too.

He said that he had come to the definite conclusion that the salvation of the people of Kashmir lay in the permanent friendship between the peoples of India and Pakistan. Unless they established that friendship, he saw no way of disengagement of forces of the two countries facing each other along the cease-fire line.

Asked whether he had brought any concrete proposals, he said he had no concrete solution in his pocket. But if they desired amity and friendship between the two countries they could, by mutual discussion, try to evolve a formula which would satisfy not only the people of India and Pakistan but satisfy the aspirations of the people of Kashmir.

Earlier, he said it was his first visit to Rawalpindi since 1946 and was extremely grateful to the people for the big reception accorded to him and his colleagues.

Talks With President Ayub Khan:

Within an hour of his arrival in Rawalpindi, Sheikh Abdullah began his first round of talks with President Ayub Khan in an effort to evolve what he himself earlier described as a solution to the Kashmir issue that would be acceptable to India, Pakistan and to the Kashmiri people.

Address To Public Meeting:

Sheikh Abdullah addressed his first public meeting in Pakistan on May 25 in Rawalpindi.

The Statesman carried the following report of the meeting:

Although he continued to be vague and uncertain about the precise solution, the Sheikh spoke with conspicuous confidence about the possibility of settling the Kashmir dispute to the satisfaction of India, Pakistan and the Kashmiri people. He spoke at great length and even greater discursiveness.

A notable feature of the speech—made an hour after he described the progress of his talks with President Ayub Khan as "satisfactory"—was the impartial plain-speaking in regard to both India and Pakistan.

Clearly and categorically he repudiated the Indian position that Kashmir's accession to India was complete and irrevocable. He declared that it was utterly incorrect to claim that the Kashmiri people had already exercised their right of self-determination, and added that no power on earth could deprive the five million Kashmiris of this right.

While this was greeted with tumultuous applause, the Sheikh's audience did not particularly like his subsequent remarks that while settling the Kashmir dispute in accordance with the wishes of the Kashmiri people, the issue could not be isolated from the fate of the minorities in India and Pakistan.

Since his arrival in Pakistan, Sheikh Abdullah said, he had been told that Kashmir could not be allowed to be made a hostage for the sake of the minorities in India. As one who had consistently fought for the Kashmir people's rights he would be the last person to make Kashmir case a hostage. But there was no getting away from the fact that "as human beings we cannot ignore the conseuences of our actions, especially when they affect millions of innocent people".

It was also crystal clear that Kashmir's salvation lay in friendship between India and Pakistan, for five million Kashmiris could not be happy in isolation from the 600 million people of the Indo-Pakistan subcontinent.

A point on which he laid great stress was that he had found among responsible Indian leaders, especially in Mr. Nehru, a "genuine desire" to settle the differences with Pakistan.

But for such a feeling among Indian leaders, he added, he would not have come to Pakistan, nor would the Indian Government have allowed him to do so.

In Pakistan also he had found a deep and widespread desire to live in peace and amity with India, and yet such was the irony of fate that the objective shared by both appeared beyond reach.

A principal reason for this state of affairs, he said, was the Kashmir dispute, and he had plainly told Indian leaders that friendship between India and Pakistan could not be fostered until the Kashmir dispute was settled.

Nehru-Ayub Meeting In June—Announcement By Sheikh Abdullah:

Sheikh Abdullah announced at a news conference in Rawalpindi on May 26 that President Ayub Khan and Mr. Nehru were expected to meet in New Delhi in June in an attempt to end the 17-year-old dispute over Kashmir.

He said that his immediate objective of bringing about a meeting between President Ayub Khan and Mr. Nehru had been achieved and he was returning to India a "very happy man".

Sheikh Abdullah in a formal statement said that President Ayub Khan had told him that he would be glad to meet Mr. Nehru to discuss ways and means of finding a satisfactory solution to this problem.

To later questions he said he expected a meeting of the two Heads of Government in New Delhi in June before the Commonwealth Premiers' meeting in London starting on July 6 and probably after Mr. Nehru's return from holiday in Kalimpong.

Asked whether he would take part, he said: "You will find me there round-about."

The formal statement said President Ayub Khan and Sheikh Abdullah felt Indo-Pakistan amity could only be achieved with a solution of the Kashmir dispute, the biggest of all irritants between them.

He said he was very anxious to meet Mr. Nehru to report to him the trend of the discussions he had with the Pakistan President.

Pakistan Press Criticism:

A Rawalpindi message on May 26 said that Sheikh Abdullah's repeated reference since his arrival in Pakistan to the secular character of India and the need to strengthen its secular forces had been critically commented upon by several influential Pakistani newspapers.

Dawn of Karachi carried a despatch from its Rawalpindi correspondent saying: "Sheikh Abdullah's statements during the past 24 hours, especially his reference to India's so-called secularism, have caused a certain amount of disappointment among the public in general and the intelligentsia in particular."

The despatch further stated that the Sheikh had been "lured by the outward show of Indian secularism, obviously forgetting the inhuman treatment meted out to 60 million Muslims in the so-called secular State."

The Jang, popular Urdu daily of Rawalpindi, disputed Sheikh Abdullah's statement at a public meeting that there was a change of heart on the part of India to promote friendly relations with Pakistan.

The paper said there had been no indication of any change of heart on the part of Mr. Nehru and the history of the past 17 years showed that India had nothing but hatred for Pakistan.

It termed as "nothing but blackmail" India's fears that a plebiscite in Kashmir might lead to a repetition of the 1947 holocaust.

[Sheikh Abdullah, in an informal chat with the Press and in public speeches in Pakistan, had referred to India's apprehensions about serious consequences of a plebiscite in Kashmir.]

The Kohistan, another mass-circulating Urdu of Rawalpindi, said the tumultuous welcome accorded Sheikh Abdullah had proved that Pakistan considered the Kashmir issue as "a matter of life and death."

It said that Mr. Nehru had gone back on his promises to hold a plebiscite in Kashmir so often that Sheikh Abdullah should be careful not to be deceived again.

The Pakistan Times, published from Lahore and Rawalpindi, in a leading article entitled, "Leader with a mission," said: "The fight for a plebiscite has now entered the final phase and we earnestly hope that this last chance of a peaceful settlement will not be squandered away by Indian leaders."

Dawn warned Sheikh Abdullah not to accept any compromise on Kashmir which would eventually mean no freedom at all to the Kashmiri people.

It accused Sheikh Abdullah of having shifted his emphasis from demanding a solution of the Kashmir dispute to promoting Indo-Pakistan relations.

The Rawalpindi correspondent of the paper quoting observers said that a marked change had occurred in Sheikh Abdullah's utterances ever since he visited New Delhi.

The despatch said that soon after his release the Sheikh emphatically talked about plebiscite in unequivocal terms. But after his pilgrimage to New Delhi "there is not only a change in the tone of his reference to Kashmir, but the substance of his speeches has undergone a marked change."

Tour Cancelled:

On May 27, Sheikh Abdullah called off the rest of his tour of Pakistan and "Azad Kashmir" as soon as he learnt about the death of Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru.

He drove back to Rawalpindi on the night of May 27 and straightaway went to see President Ayub Khan.

Earlier, addressing a condolence meeting in Muzaffarabad, he recalled his past associations with Mr. Nehru with particular reference to his talks with the late Indian Prime Minister before coming to Pakistan.

Mr. Khurshid, President of the "Azad Government of Jammu and Kashmir," who presided over the meeting, said in Mr. Nehru's death India had lost its greatest leader.

Sheikh Abdullah returned to New Delhi on May 28 to be present at Mr. Nehru's cremation. He expressed the hope that the new Indian leaders would do everything possible "to fulfil the desire of the late Prime Minister to bring about friendly relations between India and Pakistan".

Talking to newsmen, he recalled that it was Mr. Nehru's last wish that the disputes between India and Pakistan should be resolved and friendship established between the two countries. "It was in pursuance of this wish and for the specific purpose that I visited Pakistan."

According to Sheikh Abdullah, he had found in Pakistan a keen desire for friendship with India. That was why the Pakistan President had agreed to visit India. "In fact, the date for a meeting between Mr. Nehru and President Ayub Khan was almost fixed, but unfortunately Panditji left us suddenly."

Earlier, soon after he had taken off from Rawalpindi for New Delhi by a special plane, he sent a farewell message to President Ayub Khan expressing the hope that the leaders of the two countries "will soon sit together to give a definite and practical shape to the solution of the Kashmir problem."

The message added: "My visit to Rawalpindi was in response to your kind invitation and the purpose was to promote lasting friendship and amity between the two Republics of India and Pakistan and to find out an equitable solution to the Kashmir problem. Your co-operation and sympathetic understanding have inspired hope in my mind that I must succeed in the mission which I have undertaken."

Indo-Pakistan Confederation—F-M Ayub Khan Rejects Solution:

President Ayub Khan said in Peshawar on May 31 that Pakistan would never agree to a federation or confederation with India as a solution of the Kashmir issue.

He praised Sheikh Abdullah for pursuing his ideas. Despite his 11-year detention, he said, the Sheikh had not given up his principles.

President Ayub, who was inaugurating the divisional Muslim League Conference, said that he had conveyed to Sheikh Abdullah during their recent talks his opposition to a federation or confederation.

He said he had, however, told the Sheikh that Pakistan desired friendly relations with India and would go to any lengths to attain that objective.

He described Sheikh Abdullah as a man of strong character who had been undergoing untold suffering. He was determined to ensure the same freedom for the people of Kashmir as was enjoyed by the people of India and Pakistan.

He said a confederation stipulated the formation of a common Centre. Once it was formed, however limited its scope, "it goes on assuming more and more powers". Even if it was confined to defence, foreign affairs and communications, all the residuary subjects could easily be made to come under these three subjects.

He said that a confederation would prove equally "dangerous" to India. "South India, Nagaland, the Sikhs and others" would seek recognition as independent units. This might open the gates of disintegration.

Pakistan was keen to have friendly relations with all her neighbours, as could be seen from her Border Agreements with Iran, Burma and China. With India also, she had demarcated her borders in the west and the east. If some points still remained to be settled it was because of the "inability of the Government of India to honour agreements". The Kashmir issue also could be settled peacefully. Whenever India decided on friendly relations with Pakistan, she would not fail to find reciprocity from this side.

B. CPI (Leftist Faction) Convention: The Left faction of the Communist Party of India (CPI) began its six-day Convention in Tenali on July 7.

Over 150 delegates from all over the country attended.

Mr. P. Sundarayya, convener, announced that the delegates would meet 7½ hours every day till July 11. A mass rally was held at the conclusion of the session. Similar rallies were also held at Guntur, Khammam and Suryapet on July 12.

According to Mr. Basavapunniah, a top-ranking Leftist leader, and one of the authors of the new draft programme which came up for discussion, the cleavage between the Right and the Left had reached such a stage that there was no possibility of any meeting ground for thrashing out the differences and forging unity.

He claimed that out of 150,000 members, over 100,000 were with the Leftists.

According to the party leaders, there was no likelihood of a reconciliation between the two factions and Tenali would give birth to the "real Communist party".

Prominent among the delegates who attended the Convention were Mr. A. K. Gopalan, Mr. P. Ramamurthy, Mr. Muzaffar Ahmed, Mr. Promod Das Gupta, Mr. Harkrishna Konar, Mr. Harikishen Singh Surjeet, Mr. M. R. Venkataraman, Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad and Mr. Jyoti Basu.

Resolutions:

In a resolution on July 11, the Convention called upon the Government to directly negotiate with China for a settlement of the Sino-Indian border dispute.

The Convention, which concluded on July 11, welcomed the new initiative taken by some Colombo Powers to bring about direct negotiations between India and China with a view to arriving at a peaceful settlement of the border dispute.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The resolution expressed the Leftists' confidence that the sooner an agreement on the dispute was reached between the two countries, the greater would be the advantage not only to the people of India and China, but to the anti-imperialist forces all over the world.

The Convention endorsed the proposal of the Ceylonese Prime Minister, Mrs. Sirimavo Bandaranaike that without prejudice to the respective claims, no posts of India and China should remain in the demilitarized area of Ladakh. It felt that the Government of India was prepared to favourably consider this proposal.

It expressed the hope that representatives of India and China will find it possible to meet to explore the possibilities of reaching an accord on the above basis or any other basis acceptable to both countries.

The Convention also passed resolutions on the rising prices of foodgrains and the Central Finance Minister, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari's statements in the United Kingdom.

The Convention decided to hold the seventh party congress on its own at Calcutta from October 24 to 31.

A draft resolution moved by Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad, former General Secretary of the Communist Party of India, was adopted. The resolution reviewed events in the party since the walk-out of 32 Leftists from the CPI National Council meeting in April. It charged the Dange group with "making unity talks a smokescreen behind which they could consolidate themselves as a faction and deceive a section of honest party members who were anxious for party unity." It appealed to all party members and sympathizers to help in the "total" isolation of the Dange group from the Communist and socialist movement of India.

Mr. P. Ramamurthy, spokesman for the Convention, told newsmen that the Leftists were not forming a rival Communist Party. He claimed that an overwhelming majority of party members supported Leftists and that the so-called official leadership of Mr. Dange was nothing but a rump of the National Council. Asserting that "we are the real Communist Party," Mr. Ramamurthy claimed that the Dange group had forfeited the confidence of the entire party and had no right to call itself the Communist Party of India.

West Bengal Party Rift:

The rift in the Communist Party in West Bengal was completed with the formation on July 12 by the Rightists of a nine-man secretariat with Mr. Bhowani Sen as secretary.

The secretariat was formed at a meeting of the State Council called by the National Council of the CPI to replace "the old leadership as it had functioned in opposition to and against the National Council."

Invitations for the meeting had been issued to all members of the State Council, except the seven suspended leaders among whom was the secretary of the State unit, Mr. Promode Dasgupta. Of the 32 invitees, 23 attended the meeting. One could not attend due to indisposition.

After the meeting, Mr. Bhowani Sen said that with the formation of the new secretariat the old executive of the State Council had ceased to exist.

Referring to the Centrists who did not attend the meeting, he said that those who had expressed themselves in favour of party unity but had not taken any decision regarding their future course of action were welcome to the party.

Necessary adjustments in the secretariat and the executive of the State unit, which was yet to be formed, would be made if the Centrists decide to work with the new leadership.

C. Emergency Committee Of Central Cabinet: The Information and Broadcasting Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, has been appointed a member of the Emergency Committee of the Central Cabinet.

The Emergency Committee, which is presided over by the Prime Minister, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, was set up soon after the Chinese attack in October, 1962. During the past two years it has virtually developed into what might be described as the "inner Cabinet."

Besides Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, the Committee now comprises Mr. G. L. Nanda, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari, Mrs. Gandhi, Mr. Y. B. Chavan and Mr. C. Subramaniam.

D. Growth Rates Of Agricultural Production: An analysis of the growth rates of agricultural production for the period 1952-53 to 1961-62 shows that food production increased at a higher rate than population, even though only by a fraction.

The linear growth rate of food production during the period was 2.66 per cent per annum against the population growth rate of 2.26 per cent per annum.

The analysis, however, indicates that the production of foodgrains increased at a much lower rate than the production of other agricultural commodities. While other agricultural commodities recorded an annual growth rate of 4.40 per cent, foodgrains production increased at the rate of 2.66 per cent only.

The higher rate of growth of production of "non-foodgrains" is attributed more to the increase in crop area than to increased productivity. In the case of foodgrains, on the other hand, productivity rose faster than the pace at which areas were brought under cultivation.

The overall rate of growth of agricultural production during the period was 3.23 per cent. Of this, a rise of 1.76 per cent was due to increased productivity and 1.31 per cent to the additional area brought under cultivation.

Punjab, Madras, Madhya Pradesh and Mysore did well in both foodgrains and non-foodgrains, with growth rates higher than the all-India rates. Punjab with a growth rate of 5.67 per cent per annum for all crops, was first for both foodgrains and non-foodgrains. Madras, with an overall agricultural growth rate of 5.01 per cent, was second for foodgrains and third for non-foodgrains. Madhya Pradesh (third for all crops) was fourth for foodgrains. Mysore (overall agricultural growth rate of 3.56 per cent), which was just a shade lower than Madhya Pradesh, was seventh for foodgrains and fourth for non-foodgrains.

In many other States the pace of agricultural production was rather unbalanced. Kerala, which had the third place for foodgrains, was 12th for non-foodgrains. For overall agricultural growth, its ranking was eighth. Bihar, fifth for overall agricultural growth as well as for foodgrains, was ninth for non-foodgrains. Andhra got the sixth place for foodgrains and the last, that is, 14th for non-foodgrains.

Gujerat, UP and Rajasthan, on the other hand, did well in non-foodgrains but not so well in foodgrains. Maharashtra showed a moderate rate of growth in both foodgrain and non-foodgrain production.

Of all the crops, coffee recorded the highest rate of increase in production—15.15 per cent, which was due mainly to increased productivity. In the case of sugarcane, which came next, increase in the area under cultivation accounted for most of the increase in production.

Uttar Pradesh, which is the most important wheat-growing State, showed a low growth rate of 2.10 per cent per annum as compared to the all-India growth rate of 4.24 per cent. But Punjab, which comes next to UP in wheat production, showed a growth rate of 5.53 per cent per annum. Madhya Pradesh, which accounts for about a fifth of the all-India production of wheat, also showed an equally high growth rate of 5.39 per cent.

Punjab, which has the lowest share in the all-India production of rice, showed the highest rate of progress in rice production, while West Bengal, with the highest proportion of the all-India rice production, had the lowest rate of growth.

E. Secession Demand By DMK Withdrawn: The Dravida Munnetra Kazhagam (DMK) has given up its secession demand for a separate Tamil Nad and will work within the frame-work of the Indian Constitution.

The big change in the party's constitution was made at a meeting of the General Council of the party in Kumbakonam on July 12.

The party had decided in September, 1963 to give up its demand following the Central and State Governments' decision to ban such secession demand.

The Council resolved that the four Southern States—Tamil Nad, Andhra, Kerala and Karnataka—should work closely for greater autonomy.

Criticising the introduction of Hindi as a medium in the UPSC examinations, it described this as an attempt to make non-Hindi-speaking people as second class citizens of India.

It wanted steps to be taken to bring down prices and to repatriate Indians coming from Ceylon and Burma.

It also approved the 17th Amendment of the Constitution passed by Parliament in its last session.

It mourned the death of Mr. Nehru and President J. F. Kennedy of USA.

F. Mr. Jigme Dorji's Assassination—Two Persons Executed: Naik Jambey, assassin of Mr. Jigme Dorji, the late Prime Minister of Bhutan, and Lieut. Sange Dorji, considered to be the brains behind the assassination plot, were executed in Thimpu, Bhutan's capital, on July 11.

They faced a military firing squad on the Army Parade Ground in Thimpu. Tied to twin poles bound with black cloth, they were publicly shot at 10 a.m. Army units were paraded to witness the execution.

Brigadier Bahadur Namgyal, Deputy Commander-in-Chief of the Bhutanese Army, Lieut. Sange Dorji, Naik Jambey and Naik Doley were sentenced to death for treason by a special court appointed by the King on May 16. Brigadier Namgyal was publicly executed the next day; Jambey and Doley, who were to have been shot along with him, had their execution stayed by the King so that further investigation could be made.

Presumably this investigation was now complete. Naik Doley's sentence was remitted to life by a royal command; selected by Brigadier Namgyal to be Jambey's accomplice, he accepted his fee and disappeared before Mr. Dorji was shot.

The execution on July 11 put an end to rumours that Jambey and Doley would be reprieved because of some uncertainty that still persisted over the extent and implication of the assassination plot.

G. Kosi Canal System Inaugurated: Kosi water flowed into its eastern main canal and its tributaries as the gates of its head regulator near Bhimnagar, about 1½ miles away from Birpur (Bihar), on July 9 went up in fulfilment of the desire of the late Prime Minister, Mr. J. Nehru, expressed on the occasion of his last visit to Bhaisalotan on May 4.

The canal system will irrigate about 2,00,000 acres of agricultural lands in Saharsa and Purnea districts.

Meanwhile, the Kosi had inundated a number of low-lying villages situated in between its two embankments.

The flood discharge of the Kosi at Barahakshetra recorded on July 9 was 1,78,000 cusecs. Torrential rains had been continuing in the Kosi catchment area for the last two days.

The present discharge of the Kosi was, however, below the danger mark.

H. Southern Regional Electricity Board Inaugurated: The Southern Regional Electricity Board comprising the States of Mysore, Madras, Andhra and Kerala was inaugurated in Bangalore on July 10 by the Mysore Chief Minister, Mr. S. Nijalingappa.

Constitution of the Board will, according to its Chairman, Mr. J. V. Narasinga Rao, be a big step in power development of the region.

The Board has been set up to ensure the integrated operation of the power grids to economise the spinning reserve and standby capacities utilizing to the maximum advantage hydro and thermal resources and meet the seasonal variations in generation and to afford assistance from one region to another.

In his opening address, Mr. Rao said it had been estimated that in the Southern region alone, by working a common pool even by the end of the Third Five-Year Plan, the maximum demand could be reduced by 106 mw in the four States and a saving of 146 mw effected by reduction of standby capacity. Thus the total saving would be 252 mw.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. UN Conference On Trade And Development: The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development was opened in Geneva on March 23 by the UN Secretary-General, U Thant.

In his inaugural speech, U Thant said that the world body must make a determined effort to solve international economic problems or risk seeing its work for peace frustrated.

He said there must be something wrong with economic policies on the national and international level if they permitted the unchecked continuance of the trend towards the growing disparity between rich and poor countries.

He said that delegates to the Conference could succeed "only through a sincere co-operative effort undertaken in the awareness of your common obligation to humanity".

Adverse trends in trade had nullified "to a marked extent" multilateral and bilateral assistance programmes to the developing countries, creating the need for control of market forces that had "until now been permitted to counter Government policies".

He said it should lay the foundation for and pave the way towards a new trade policy for development and define the "necessary instrumentality for its implementation."

"You can hardly do less than provide mankind, both in the under-developed and in the developed countries with a frame-work of principles and active policy to make trade a real vehicle of progress towards economic development and thus help to secure universal prosperity and peace for this and succeeding generations.

"The problem of maintaining peace is as complex as life itself, and it is perhaps our generation that has the best opportunity to realise that international relations are not determined solely by diplomatic intercourse and supporting military might, but are also influenced by people in the fields and in the factories where human beings earn their daily bread."

He said a large part of the world usually described as "developing" was in fact not developing, or not developing fast enough. Such countries were not only lagging more and more behind the industrial societies but in certain cases in absolute terms their living standards were deteriorating, especially taking into account their population growth.

"Here we are witnessing the dilemma of our times: the fact that political emancipation is not accompanied by a concomitant and desirable rate of economic progress.

"The contrast between the developed and the under-developed parts of the world and the awareness of this contrast on the part of the peoples of Asia, Africa and Latin America, paralleled by growing political awakening together with continued economic bondage and poverty in my view are the factors which constitute the real background of this Conference."

Election Of President And Vice-Presidents:

The Conference unanimously elected as its President Mr. Abdul Moneim El Kaissuny, UAR Minister of the Treasury, Finance and Planning.

He said in his presidential speech that a bold new policy of international co-operation was needed. What was at stake at the Conference was not the particular economic interest of a few countries, but "the vast possibilities for development that could be opened to humanity through a more rational utilization of its resources and a better international economic order".

Mr. Ludwig von Moos, President of the Swiss Confederation, welcoming the delegates to the Conference, saw it as demonstrating the will of Governments to seek a trade policy which would facilitate the economic advancement of all countries without distinction.

After a general debate, the Conference formed five main Commissions, elected their governing boards, a rapporteur, and 27 Vice-Presidents.

India's Mr. T. Swaminathan was elected Chairman of the Second Commission (manufactured products). His name was proposed by Ceylon.

Of the 27 Vice-Presidents, 15 were from the developing nations (10 Afro-Asian and five Latin American), eight from the West—Norway, France, USA, West Germany, United Kingdom, Belgium, Canada and Denmark. The Soviet bloc had four Vice-Presidents—USSR, Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Poland.

The Asian Vice-Presidents elected were Japan, Pakistan, Indonesia and the Philippines.

Mr. N. Khruschev's Message:

The Soviet Premier, Mr. N. Khruschev sent a message of greetings to the participants in the Conference.

The message said:

"We are convinced that equal and mutually advantageous trade is a good basis for the peaceful co-existence of States with different social systems and creates favourable conditions for a further easing of international tensions and consolidation of peace throughout the world.

"International trade and economic co-operation, based on respect for sovereignty and the striving to take into account the vital requirements of the developing countries, will be a good supplement to the efforts exerted by these countries to liquidate the aftermaths of colonialism in their economy and foreign trade, and to develop an independent national economy".

The present state of international trade, he said, was unsatisfactory. "The unfair international division of labour, the ever-increasing gap between prices on goods exported by the developing countries and the prices on the goods they import, leading to an exhaustion of the resources of these countries and slowing down of their development, are a result of imperialist exploitation.

"Discrimination and artificial barriers are a brake on the growth of international trade and poison the political atmosphere. The Soviet Union is consistently promoting a policy of developing trade and economic relations with all countries of the world on an equal and mutually advantageous basis."

Principal Issues:

A report presenting the main issues facing the Conference was issued on February 14 by Mr. Raul Prebisch, Secretary-General of the Conference.

The report said that the premise on which it was based derived from the conviction that the international community was by now aware that practical action in the field of trade and development was second to no other responsibility which United Nations had to face in the 1960's. The Conference was being convened with the primary objective of pointing the way towards a new trade policy for development.

Discussing the past and present international economy, the report stated that the Conference would have to study a phenomenon whose existence had been a matter of controversy until recently—the persistent tendency towards external imbalance in the development process.

While primary commodity export in general was expanding relatively slowly, the report said, the demand for imports of manufactured goods had tended to grow rapidly at a pace that had increased with the rate of development. The resulting imbalance constituted a serious external bottleneck that made development difficult. The imbalance had to be eliminated if development was to be accelerated.

One of the objectives of the UN Development Decade was to attain an average annual growth rate of 5 per cent in the income of developing countries by 1970. This target was not much higher than the 4.4 per cent rate of the previous decade, but it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, for many developing countries to reach the growth rate unless ways can be found to eliminate the growing gap between their export earnings and their import needs.

At the existing rate of growth, there was a mounting gap in the balance of payments of the developing countries. The gap would be even greater if the trends of the 1950's continued. This had to be the starting point of the Conference.

External resources of the developing countries could be increased through additional exports of primary products, through more exports of manufactures or through additional foreign aid. To some extent, each of these possible solutions is a substitute for the others.

It was an essential condition for success that the various measures adopted should be integrated within an over-all policy to achieve a rate of growth of the external resources of developing countries which, given the terms of trade, should be sufficient to enable them to obtain a volume of imports rising by at least 6 per cent every year, on the average. If such measures were not adopted, the trade gap of developing countries would be immense; according to calculations, if the factors responsible for the present trend in trade continue and if the income of developing countries was to grow by 5 per cent annually, the trade gap might reach an order of magnitude around $20,000 million by 1970. This gap was potential, and not real; if the problem was not solved, circumstances would dictate an appreciably slower pace of growth, for there was not the slightest possibility of steadily achieving a faster pace with such a gap.

The report said that on the international economic scene, new problems were to be faced which needed different attitudes from those that prevailed in the past, attitudes which should converge towards a new trade policy for economic development. Noting the gravity of the problems besetting the developing countries, it said that they had to assimilate modern technology quickly in order to raise their level of living. The new techniques, while they brought great advantages with them, were fraught with dangerous consequences because the ability fully to control forces of development in a rational way had not yet been learned.

The direct and indirect effects of technological progress were responsible for the fact that world demand for primary commodities was growing so slowly, to the detriment of the developing countries. The report suggested that production should adjust to this tempo, but structural difficulties prevented it from doing so to the extent necessary to prevent primary commodity prices from deteriorating in relation to those of manufactures. The more advanced the technique applied to primary production, the stronger the tendency towards such a deterioration.

Action by Governments was, therefore, imperative to deal with this paradox of development and, at the same time, to give primary commodities, and especially manufactures produced in the developing countries, easier access to the highly protected markets of the industrial countries.

The report then outlined an organizational scheme which could operate within the United Nations structure and which would be based on the holding of periodic conferences similar to the one held in Geneva in March. The report also suggested establishment of a standing committee. It would be primarily up to these bodies, with the help of a "valuable group" of existing facilities, including the regional economic commissions, to implement systematically the measures agreed upon by Governments, to modify or adopt new ones, and to formulate the policy "within which all these measures should be articulated."

The report then discussed measures which it said could not be adopted "in isolation" since they form part of a broader policy of international co-operation in economic development.

Dealing with primary commodities and industrial goods of the developing countries, it said that quantitative targets should be set for their entry into the market of industrial countries, to be reached within a certain number of years. The import targets for primary commodities may be quantities of specific commodities or of groups of commodities, or desired proportions of their consumption, or of the increase in their consumption in each importing country.

On the subject of industrial preferences, it suggested that, within a pre-determined value, the industrial countries would establish a quota for admitting manufactured goods from the developing countries free of duty, but they could exclude a schedule of items, constituting a reasonable percentage of the total goods they import, from these preferences. This exclusion could take effect from the outset or at some later stage in the operation of the system. Additions to the list of excluded products might be made subsequently on the basis of criteria to be determined. Manufactures from developing countries thus excluded from the scope of preferences should be admitted by the industrial countries on the usual most-favoured-nation basis.

The application of restrictions in each case should be fully cleared through the machinery of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), and action especially affecting the manufactures from a given country should be permissible only if it is proved that they are particularly responsible for disrupting the market.

All the developing countries, regardless of their level of development, would be eligible to avail themselves of the preferential system until the relevant quota was reached. But there would have to be a periodic review of the flow of exports; and if exports from one or more countries increased so much that they did not leave sufficient room for those from the others, limitations could be imposed.

Exclusive preferences could be granted to the less advanced developing countries, using the schedule of items excluded by the industrial countries from the preferential system applied to all the other developing countries. The preference would remain in force for 10 years from the time when each industry in a given country started to export. But this period could be extended in accordance with internationally agreed procedures, if an exception to the rule was fully justified.

The ultimate objective should be the adaptation of existing preferential arrangements to the new system on a basis that provided benefits to the developing countries concerned at least equivalent to those they now enjoyed, and which did not discriminate among developing countries. The precise means whereby this ultimate objective might be secured was a matter for further discussion, but should include special aid and technical assistance to countries at the earliest stage of economic development. In any case, preferences granted by developing to industrial countries should be brought to an end.

Discussing the targets, the report said that they were an expression of the objectives to be reached; thus they were of an indicative character and they were not, in general, commitments to import. The targets for primary commodities represented quotas of goods to be imported without restrictions, but in some cases this might lead to commitments to purchase over a number of years.

In the industrial field, the target could be divided into two parts: (1) a duty-free import quota granted to the developing countries, and (2) whatever volume of additional imports of articles not included in the preferential arrangements was considered desirable. In the latter case, the imports would be liable to the same tariffs as those from other countries.

When the targets were set, Governments would undertake all necessary action to reach them, including promotional measures in the technical, trade and financial fields.

In the socialist countries, the targets would be of an indicative character, but they could also involve long-term commitments to import under the system of bilateral agreements.

Two converging kinds of measures were envisaged to guarantee the purchasing power of the exports of primary commodities—commodity agreements and compensatory financing. Commodity agreements were to be recommended as a means of improving prices and maintaining a price parity with those of manufactures, when the price improvement did not seriously affect consumption by reducing it or by giving synthetics and substitutes a competitive advantage.

Each developed country should take whatever internal action it saw fit to obtain resources for compensatory financing. But it should not do so through taxes which raised prices for the consumer, discouraged consumption or encouraged the replacement of the natural commodity by substitutes or synthetics.

The compensatory resources might form part of a fund administered by international credit institutions, at either the international or the regional level, in accordance with rules approved by Governments. Alternatively, the required resources might be made available to recipient countries by national and international agencies acting through consortia or other suitable co-operative arrangements. In either case, the decision taken might be based on an independent finding by an international team of experts of the highest standing that a particular country's economic development was being prejudiced by terms-of-trade losses.

The GATT rules now in force would have to be amended to take into account the consequences of the structural inequalities between industrial and developing countries. These amendments would relate in particular to reciprocity, to the preferences granted by the industrial countries to the developing countries and to the preferences granted by developing countries to each other through groupings or countries.

Apart from considerations of reciprocity, the developing countries with excessive protectionism should undertake to lower their high tariffs as they gradually counter the trend towards external imbalance by expanding their exports of primary and industrial products and by import substitution.

In the actual application of these concerted measures, it was essential to recognize the different situation of the developing countries, depending on the degree of their development, and to adapt and change the measures adopted so that the advantages deriving therefrom accrue especially to the less advanced of the developing countries, giving strong impetus to their growth.

Provisional Agenda:

Earlier in February, the third session of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference recommended a provisional agenda prepared during the Committee's two previous sessions.

The provisional agenda contained seven categories of trade problems: expansion of international trade, international commodity problems; trade in manufactures and semi-manufactures; improvement of the invisible trade of developing countries; implications of regional economic groupings; financing for an expansion of international trade; and institutional arrangements.

The majority said the Conference should seek the expansion and improvement of world trade, with priority on problems facing the developing countries. Some representatives said that once a solution had been found to the problems of developing countries, larger undertakings could be embarked upon.

The majority held that the provisional agenda was broad enough to allow discussion of any major problem affecting world trade. The Conference, they said, should concentrate on achieving concrete results.

The Committee had before it a draft resolution concerning the creation of an international trade organization.

The draft resolution would have the Conference decide to create a universal International Trade Organization (ITO), which would be founded on principles acceptable to all countries, regardless of differences in their social systems and levels of economic development.

The ITO, according to the draft, would be called upon to concern itself, in part, with the following problems:

(a) The inter-relationship between world trade and economic development;

(b) The elimination of artificially created restrictions and obstacles of trade in raw materials, semi-finished and finished products;

(c) The elimination of price fluctuations having undesirable consequences for trade and the economic situation;

(d) The elimination of the adverse effects of the activities of closed economic groupings on the trade of third countries, particularly on the trade and the economies of the developing countries;

(e) The removal of obstacles of an economic and administrative character and those connected with commercial policy hindering the development of international trade;

(f) Improvement of the terms of international trade, having regard to the requirements and needs of the different countries and regions;

(g) Improvement of the invisible trade of the developing countries;

(h) An easing of the terms for the financing of international trade, the use of international credit to promote trade between countries, and the granting of credit for the supply of equipment to the developing countries on terms favourable to those countries;

(i) The commercial and economic aspects of general and complete disarmament; and

(j) The study of such aspects of international trade as transit, access to the sea and transit for land-locked States, trade fairs and exhibitions.

India Calls For Revision Of GATT:

On March 25, India told the Conference that it wanted to see a full revision of GATT to accommodate both the under-developed nations and the trading practices of the communist world.

Mr. Manubhai Shah, Indian Minister of International Trade, said GATT was doing "good and successful work". But it had several deficiencies. It was set up, he said, before the political emergence of the former colonial territories and was created by the industrialized countries themselves.

GATT must include all UN members, he said, and that meant the Communist nations, which do not trade in the same way as the Western free-market nations. "Many nations present at the Conference trade with the Socialist countries, and this should be recognized in the GATT."

The US, however, urged the poor nations to forget traditional fears of investment by foreign capitalists and to get to work organizing their backward economies.

Russian Stand:

A Geneva despatch said that the Russian approach to the Conference steered a delicate course between Soviet needs and the claims of developing countries.

Clear support for the aims of the Conference was expressed, following the general line of other industrial countries, but a firm distinction was drawn between the Soviet bloc and the Western camp.

Mr. N. S. Patolichev, the Soviet Minister of Foreign Trade, in an address to the Conference on March 26 defended the Russian practice of making bilateral trade agreements as "sound", but expressed readiness to examine multilateral arrangements when economically expedient. He supported the most-favoured-nation principle in world trade, but at the same time favoured the granting of preferences and advantages to developing countries. While calling for a new international trade organization, he showed unexpected restraint in refraining from criticizing the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) or attacking by name the Common Market.

He said that the Soviet Union attached great importance to the stabilization of prices for primary products and supported measures for eliminating the damage caused by fluctuations in both demand and prices. All principal exporters and importers should be parties to international stabilizing agreements for commodities which should establish "an economically justified level of prices." Such agreements should be considered for cocoa, oilseeds, vegetable oils, cotton, citrus fruits, bananas, lead, zinc, copper and petroleum.

He added: "The Soviet Union will increase purchases in the developing countries of primary products as well as manufactured and semimanufactured goods, both through trade agreements and as repayment of the credits granted by the Soviet Union to these countries."

Boycott Of South Africa—Afro-Asian Move:

The delegations of the Afro-Asian group as well as Yugoslavia, Jamaica and Trinidad-Tobago on March 26 announced that they had decided not to co-operate in any form with the delegations of South Africa and Portugal at the Conference.

Reading the statement on behalf of the group immediately after the speech by the head of the Soviet delegation, Mr. K. B. Lall of India said: "It is in fact our desire that they should be excluded from participation in this Conference, but because of the overriding importance we attach to the work of this Conference, we are refraining from taking steps to this end. So far as this Conference is concerned, we propose to ignore the presence of representatives of these countries. We trust all delegations who have faith in the principles of human dignity, equality and justice will do the same. We hope our joint efforts will lead to the early abandonment of the policies of Portugal and South Africa which all humanity abhors and which the UN has condemned."

The statement said the group had no alternative but to raise the question of the presence of the delegations of South Africa and Portugal "which have outlawed themselves from the world community by their obnoxious policies of racial discrimination and colonial oppression," because of their persistent defiance of all international principles and their continuous violation of fundamental human rights.

It said the policies of South Africa and Portugal caused embarrassment to their friends and threatened world peace. "Many countries have appealed to them to change their outdated policies of apartheid and colonialism, many have tried to advise and influence them to abandon their intolerable practice and their negative attitude to the UN and its Charter. These appeals have not only fallen on deaf ears, but the situation has gone from bad to worse.

"We have met here to reconstruct international trade so that it becomes an effective instrument of economic development to all countries and peoples irrespective of colour, creed and race. These tasks require international goodwill, co-operation and mutual respect. We are unanimously of the view that the policies of apartheid, racialism and colonialism pursued by South Africa and Portugal run counter to the principles and purposes of this Conference."

British 10-Point Proposal:

The British Secretary of State for Industry, Trade and Regional Development and President of the Board of Trade, Mr. Edward Heath, on April 6 offered "10 key points" which "offer the greatest hope of practical progress."

The first six of the points concerned the freeing of trade. The other four dealt with action designed to give special forms of assistance to the trade of the developing countries. The 10 points were:

(1) There should be a standstill on new barriers to the trade of the less-developed countries in products which have been identified as being of particular interest to them;

(2) Quantitative restrictions adversely affecting the trade of the developing countries should be ended;

(3) The removal of duties on tropical products;

(4) The removal of duties on primary products imported from the developing countries;

(5) The reduction of tariffs on semi-processed and processed products imported from the developing countries;

(6) The ending of internal taxes and revenue duties applying specifically to products wholly or mainly produced in the developing countries;

(7) The granting of preferences by the developed countries;

(8) The exchange of preferences among the developing countries;

(9) The stabilization of commodity prices; and

(10) Supplementary financial assistance.

Mr. Heath said that the first six of his points—for freeing trade—were considered by the Ministers of GATT in May, 1963. "In the formulation and application of such points as these, GATT is providing invaluable services to the interests of developed and developing countries alike. Of course, we recognize that policies cannot be changed overnight. Some of us may need to deal in special ways with special problems of particular responsibilities, either domestic or international. But the time has now come for action. Let us now get on with it."

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

On the granting of preferences by the developed countries—point 7—he said: "Surely, we all ought now to be willing to move more quickly in reducing import duties on goods from developing countries than we (the developed countries) may be able to do in trade among ourselves.

"We in Britain are prepared to extend tariff preferences to all developing countries. The preferences we give at present are designed for the benefit of Commonwealth countries. These countries might suffer by sharing them with others unless they obtained compensating advantages in other markets. We should, therefore, need to act in concert with the other major industrialized countries to ensure that this is brought about. Moreover, where present preferences are the subject of agreements with Commonwealth Governments, we should not act without the consent of those Governments.

"Such an extension of the arrangements for tariff preferences must not be allowed to impede the general reduction of tariffs among developed countries on which the continued expansion of international trade so largely depends.

"Preferences should, therefore, be created not by raising tariffs against other countries, but by lowering or abolishing tariffs for developing countries."

Soviet Union Announces Abolition Of Customs Duties On Goods From Developing Countries:

The Soviet delegate, Mr. Victor Spandarian, announced on April 8 that the Soviet Union would abolish as from January 1, 1965 its customs duties on goods imported from the developing countries.

The announcement was made in the Fifth Committee of the Conference (the Committee dealing with problems of trade expansion).

Mr. Spandarian said this decision was in addition to those already announced at the Conference by the Soviet Foreign Trade Minister, Mr. Nikolai Patolichev, on the increase of Soviet purchases of raw materials, manufactures and semi-manufactures from the developing countries.

In addition, USSR was prepared to collaborate with the developing countries in specialization and co-operation in different sorts of production. "It was also prepared to encourage trade between developing countries even at the expense of Soviet trade."

Trade Preferences Sought For Developing Countries:

On April 30, India proposed measures to improve developing countries' trade in manufactured and semi-manufactured goods.

The Indian delegate, Mr. K. B. Lall, told the Conference's Second Committee that he believed the proposals were supported by the majority of developing countries.

The Indian proposals, which included ideas already put forward in previous statements by the Indian delegation, included:

(1) Preferential treatment to be awarded by developed countries without discrimination to all developing countries for at least 10 years—with rules to prevent their abuse.

(2) Abolition without delay of quantitative and other restrictions, international investigation and identification of other visible and invisible tariff barriers and the speedy removal of such barriers.

(3) An increase in imports by countries with centrally-planned economies from developing countries at a rate twice that of the general average.

(4) Diversification of imports by socialist countries with centrally-planned economies and other measures by socialist countries to encourage imports from developing countries, such as the abolition of import tariffs and the avoidance of competition in the sale of products identical to goods from developed countries.

(5) Zero tariffs on items on which duty in most-favoured-nation arrangements is 10 per cent on products processed from tropical materials, such as tea, coffee, cocoa, sisal, jute, hemp, fruits, vegetables, oilseeds, woods and rubber, on the products of cottage industries such as handmade textiles and on intermediate products, such as tanned leather, pig-iron and steel.

(6) Amendment of the tariff structure of industrialized countries to provide for the reduction by a minimum of 50 per cent the import duties on all goods which are not given a duty-free treatment.

(7) The provision in the GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade) trading rules for preferential entry as regards duties and quotas into industrialized countries of manufactures and semi-manufactures from developing countries.

(8) Guarantee that the tariffs position of products of developing countries will not worsen.

(9) Reduction or elimination on a most-favoured-nation basis by industrialized countries of customs duties on imports of manufactures and semi-manufactures from developing countries.

Differences Between Industrialized And Developing Countries:

A sharp cleavage between industrialized and the developing countries was apparent on May 12 in the resolutions passed in the various Committees of the Conference.

A typical example was the defeat of the resolution presented by the Western Powers plus Jamaica, Trinidad and Japan to the Committee on manufactured products. The resolution, dealing with the activities of a United Nations industrial development centre which the West was trying to promote, was defeated by 44 votes to 22, with 19 abstentions.

The resolutions presented by the under-developed countries were pushed through, however, without the support of a single Western industrialized country.

(1) In the Committee for manufactured products, a motion presented by 40 African and Latin-American countries recommending the creation of a United Nations specialized agency for industrial development was approved by 58 votes to 21, with six abstentions.

(2) In the Financial Committee, an Afro-Asian and Yugoslav motion for reactivating the United Nations capital goods fund—which had never been in operation—was approved by 54 votes to nine (the latter being the major Western industrialized countries) with 17 abstentions. The abstentions were mostly on the part of other Western countries, but also included certain of the French-speaking African countries.

However, one motion backed jointly by some of the industrialized and some of the under-developed countries—the only exception to the split vote—passed with a strong majority. The motion was presented by Denmark, Netherlands, Finland (among the Western countries) and Pakistan, Chile, Nigeria, Syria and India (among the under-developed nations). It dealt with the gradual transformation and extension of the powers of the UN Special Fund (which is now devoted to pre-investment studies). The motion was approved by 6 votes to three (Canada, Britain, West Germany), and with the abstention of 16 others (USA, France, Japan and the Soviet countries)—that is, the countries which would be called on for the financial backing of such a Fund.

To counteract the harmful effect of such votes, tending to split the Conference without really advancing its work, "conciliation" contacts were being planned between the 11 "third world" delegates and the five representing the industrialized nations.

Some observers in Geneva said that one of the purposes of the "conciliation efforts" was simply to stop all voting in Committees, at least for the time being.

The developing countries and the Western later set up special restricted committees for unofficial talks to seek compromise solutions on major issues.

The Conference thus virtually entered a phase of bargaining on concrete problems.

An 11-member "enlarged steering committee" was announced to conduct negotiations with the Western and Soviet bloc industrial countries on "practical solutions" to the problem of under-development.

The Western group immediately followed up the announcement with the creation of a five-member committee of "good offices" to negotiate with the representatives of the developing countries.

Proposals For Closer Economic Co-operation:

Britain, Australia and a number of other countries on May 19 presented proposals for closer economic co-operation between developing countries to promote their trade in manufactured and semi-manufactured goods.

The proposal, backed by Kenya, Liberia, Nigeria, the Philippines, Sierra Leone, Tanganyika and Zanzibar and Uganda, included suggestions for:

(1) The exchange of information between developing countries on their industrial development plans;

(2) Joint facilities for research, standards and trade promotion;

(3) Collaboration in the development of adequate transport and communication to service industrial development and trade;

(4) Promotion among developing countries of increased purchases of manufactures and semi-manufactures produced in other developing countries, with simpler trade and customs formalities; and

(5) Appropriate financial and payments arrangements.

The industrialized and the developing countries still disagreed on most major problems, and the Western group was split within itself.

Six Latin American countries presented a draft resolution asking for direct financial compensation for damage caused to developing countries by fall in the international market prices for basic commodities.

Delegations from 14 developing nations also presented a draft resolution to the committee asking for a special fund to compensate them for deterioration of their terms of trade "due to reasons beyond their control."

International Trade Organization—75-Nation Draft Resolution:

On May 21, 75 developing countries circulated a draft resolution calling for a new international trade organization to replace all existing trade bodies.

The resolution called for the setting up of a comprehensive organization with sufficient authority to deal with all aspects of international trade and development. It recommended that the Conference should continue as an organ of the UN General Assembly until the new trade organization was set up. It also suggested that the new conference should have an executive council of 52 members.

In the Committee on trade in manufactured and semi-manufactured goods, the 75 developing countries presented another draft resolution urging industrialized nations to open up their markets by abolishing import duty on some goods and 50 per cent reduction in the existing most-favoured-nation duty on the rest of the goods.

The resolution called for the elimination of all preferential arrangements between advanced and developing nations involving discrimination against third parties.

The United States on May 26 presented a draft recommendation calling for the freezing, reduction or possible elimination of tariff or non-tariff barriers for manufactures from developing countries.

The US paper recommended "not to raise existing tariff or non-tariff barriers to exports from developing countries nor to establish new ones...and wherever possible to eliminate duties on manufactured and semi-manufactured products of special export interest to developing countries."

The US draft, introduced by Mr. Herbert F. Propps, to the Conference's Second Committee (trade in manufactures and semi-manufactures), was the fourth paper presented to the Committee for discussion. The others were made by Britain, Switzerland and a group of 62 developing countries.

"One Per Cent" Plan Approved:

The Conference on May 29 approved by an overwhelming majority the "one per cent" plan under which the industrialized nations are to set aside one per cent of their gross national income for the developing countries.

While all 75 developing nations represented at the meeting and most of the Western industrialized nations voted in favour of the idea, the West German delegation abstained.

The German attitude was received with astonishment and misgivings by the developing as well as by the Western countries.

Resolution On New International Trade Organization:

The Conference in Committee on June 2 adopted a resolution put forward by 73 developing nations calling for the establishment of a new international trade organization replacing all existing bodies.

The proposal, which was passed by 83 votes to 20, was opposed by most of the West European countries, Britain, USA, South Africa and Japan. The Soviet Union voted for the resolution.

The resolution called on the UN General Assembly to set up a new organization of a universal character and with sufficient authority to ensure compliance with its own decisions and with those of United Nations relating to trade and development.

Introducing the resolution, the Pakistani representative said that the advanced and the developing countries differed mainly on the question of voting in the new organization. He said if the proposal of the industrialized nations were accepted, it would give them a virtual veto.

The developing countries' proposals envisaged the continuation of the Conference as an organ of the UN General Assembly, meeting every two or three years and exercising general responsibility for promoting trade. It would have a 52-member Executive Council, which would conduct urgent studies on setting up the projected organization. The Council's membership would ensure the Afro-Asian countries and Yugoslavia of 23 seats, with 14 for the West, nine for Latin America, and six for the Soviet bloc.

In the Western draft, which was not put to the vote (nor was that of the Soviet bloc) the Council is designated as the commission for international trade, in which there would be qualified majority voting. Recommendations would be considered as adopted when approved by a majority of members, including a majority of those of the 12 main trading States present.

On behalf of the Western countries, Mr. H. Vogt (Norway) voiced regret that, for procedural reasons, the proposal had been put to the vote while the process of conciliation was still in progress.

In the Western view, he said, the institutional machinery must meet two basic requirements—it must satisfy the wishes of the developing countries to have a forum where they could express their views on their legitimate interests; and it must recognize that the developed nations—handling 80 per cent of world trade—equally had legitimate interests to safeguard. The two groups must be partners on an equal footing.

The Western countries, he said, considered that a decision now on an international trade organization was premature. However, they were not opposed to leaving the question for further consideration. There was also the matter of the continuing relationship between the proposed machinery and existing UN organizations, "whose rights and responsibilities must be respected".

Formation Of World Trade Board—Conference Ratifies Recommendation:

The Conference adopted on June 15 without a vote the Fourth Committee's recommendation on the creation of a 55-nation World Trade and Development Board as provided for in a compromise text approved earlier by both the developed and developing nations.

The Conference also adopted the recommendations of other Committees, including the Fifth Committee's general and special principles on which a compromise was reached at the eleventh hour on June 15.

Under the compromise the texts with which the developed nations are not in agreement will be sent to the new institutions for study and eventual redrafting.

A joint Soviet-American resolution backed by India and several other nations and stressing the impact of general disarmament on world economy and trade, was among the Fifth Committee recommendations that were passed.

The Conference rejected a Soviet resolution aimed at associating "all the countries which take part in world trade" with the "final act" of the Conference.

The resolution was aimed at including East Germany in the Conference's work, and People's China as well, if she so desired.

The resolution was rejected by 35 votes to 19, with 22 abstentions.

The foundation for the compromise and comparative success of the Conference was laid at the dinner given by Mr. Manubhai Shah, India's Minister for Commerce to the leaders of 22 delegations on June 13.

The dinner was given soon after Mr. Raul Prebisch, the Conference Secretary General, told "the 75" in a moving speech that he was regretfully announcing that the Conference was going to be a tremendous failure.

Although not every one was happy with the compromise formula, every one agreed that an independent economic organization under United Nations would help the developing nations in reversing to some measure the present trends in international trade.

At the request of Norway's delegate, the draft resolution on minerals and fuels moved by a number of Asian and African countries including Burma, India, Indonesia and Ceylon and amended by Algeria, was put to vote by a show of hands and passed.

The speedy procedure was then applied to adopt the draft recommendations of the Second Committee on manufactures and semi-manufactures. At delegations' requests, some of the drafts were put to vote. However, in several cases a roll call was asked for by the developed nations which voted against some of the recommendations or abstained.

After more than six hours of discussion, the 33 African countries attending the Conference chose their 12 representatives on the permanent World Trade Council.

There were long arguments about the twelfth seat, and it hung in the balance between Algeria and the United Arab Republic. In the end, the last seat was given to the UAR, and the seat originally earmarked for Tunisia was given to Morocco instead.

The list of the 12 African countries represented on the permanent Council stood as follows: Ghana, Guinea, Mali, Dahomey, Nigeria, Cameroun, Congo (Leopoldville), Tanganyika-Zanzibar, Ethiopia, Madagascar, Morocco and the United Arab Republic.

Conference Ends:

The Conference ended its three-month session in Geneva on June 17.

It adopted its Final Act and elected 55 members to a proposed Trade and Development Board, planned as a permanent organ of the Conference and part of the United Nations continuing machinery recommended by the Conference.

The Conference approved general and special principles governing trade relations and policies, and principles on the transit rights of land-locked countries; and adopted recommendations relating to international commodity arrangements and preferences.

At its last plenary meeting, the Conference agreed, at the request of 77 developing countries, to include as an annex to the Final Act a declaration on their behalf. The declaration stated that the Conference was a significant step towards creating a new and just world economic order, and that the developing countries considered it vitally necessary for the new international machinery in the field of trade and development to be an effective instrument.

The Final Act of the Conference remained open for signature in Geneva up to June 25.

The following were elected to the proposed Board:

Group I (22 from Africa, Asia, plus Yugoslavia): Afghanistan, Cameroun, Ceylon, Congo (Leopoldville), Dahomey, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Madagascar, Mali, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Philippines, United Arab Republic, United Republic of Tanganyika and Zanzibar, and Yugoslavia.

Group II (18 from Western market economy countries, plus Japan): Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, West Germany, France, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, United Kingdom and United States.

Group III (nine from Latin America including Jamaica): Argentina, Bolivia, Barzil, Chile, Ecuador, El Salvador, Honduras, Mexico and Uruguay.

Group IV (six from socialist countries): Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, Rumania and USSR.

A number of the decisions were taken on the basis of compromise texts submitted by the President of the Conference reflecting agreements reached in the course of consultations between representative groups of countries.

On the question of institutional arrangements, the Conference approved without formal vote the recommendation submitted by the President. This would have the General Assembly, at its 19th session, establish the Trade Conference as an organ of the Assembly. The Conference would be convened at intervals of not more than three years, meeting first in 1966. The permanent organ of the Conference would be a Trade and Development Board.

Each member of the Conference would have one vote. Decisions on matters of substance would be taken by a two-thirds majority of those present and voting. Procedural matters would be decided by majority vote.

The recommendation provided for special conciliation procedures.

On commodities, the Conference approved another recommendation submitted by the President. Part 1 of this formulated the objectives, principles and scope of international commodity arrangements and proposed the establishment of a commission on commodity arrangements and policies.

Part 2 listed recommended action to be taken by developed countries with market economies and those with centrally planned economies, as well as action to be taken by all developed countries.

On preferences, a recommendation submitted by the President was approved. This would have the UN Secretary-General make arrangements to establish as soon as possible a committee of governmental representatives drawn from both developed and developing countries to work out the best method of implementing preferences on the basis of non-reciprocity from developing countries. The committee would report to the Secretary-General.

The President of the Conference, Mr. Kaissuny made the following points at a news conference on June 18:

(1) The results of the UN Conference on Trade and Development represented an "important first step taken in the right direction", but both the developed and the developing nations recognized that "much still needs to be done", especially regarding greater access of primary commodities, manufactures and semi-manufactures from developing countries to the industrialized nations. Further measures aimed at the elimination of prevailing obstacles restricting the exports from developing countries and at establishment of preferential system were required so as to enable developing nations to diversify production and increase export earnings, thereby allowing them to import more capital equipment and other goods indispensable to accelerate their economic development.

(2) The recommendations approved regarding financial assistance represented an advance. Nevertheless, further study was still required on specific international measures to be undertaken.

(3) The question of principles to guide international trade policy, particularly as it affected economic development, required further elaboration by the institutional machinery unanimously recommended by the Conference to the General Assembly.

(4) One of the main tasks of the special committee of experts which the Conference requested the Secretary-General to establish, was the elaboration of procedures for conciliation and negotiation.

(5) The achievement of results at the Conference had been "more difficult" than expected at the outset, when the opening general debate reflected a "genuine mutual desire" of both the developing and developed nations to co-operate in the solution of basic problems. However, the process of conciliation of different approaches for the implementation of solutions presented "certain difficulties" requiring complex negotiations in such fields as access to markets, a preferential system, institutional machinery, guiding principles for international trade policy, etc., before general agreement was reached.

Asked whether or not it was fundamental for the developed countries to readjust their industrial structure in order to implement the objectives of the Conference, he answered: "No one can impose a change on any sovereign country" but there was a natural process whereby the developed countries might in the long run concentrate on the more complex activities for which they were specially suited. Though both reduction in tariffs and international export subsidies might be helpful, a system of preferences was more effective.

On the question of the population explosion, he stated that economic development was vital to the solution of the problem.

On relations between the new institutional machinery and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), he declared "it would be very short-sighted of the proposed Trade and Development Board to attempt to reduce the importance of GATT". He said there should be co-operation between it and the new machinery though it must be remembered that GATT served only a certain number of countries.

He stated that difficulties between the developed and the developing countries were perhaps due to mistrust and suspicion of newly independent countries vis-a-vis former colonial Powers. It was important to try to improve the international atmosphere in economic relations, and this was a likely outcome of meetings of future Trade Conferences and the Trade and Development Board.

With respect to unified action by "the 75," it was a question of their being not a "political group" but a group of developing countries with the same economic problems. He hoped they would continue to work together in United Nations and other international organizations.

Asked about the significance of the recommended aid allocation of one per cent of the national income of developed countries, he said such an allocation would total $9,000 million to $10,000 million, which would in effect have covered the trade deficit in 1963 and which would allow for economic expansion of developing countries at a greater rate in the future. The present net total of aid received by developing countries amounted to $4,000 million annually.

Recommendations:

The following is a consolidation of the recommendations of the Conference:

Section I: Principles.

(1) The Conference has recommended the following General Principles to govern international trade relations and trade policies conducive to development:

General Principle 1: Economic relations between countries, including trade relations, shall be based on respect for the principle of sovereign equality of States, self-determination of peoples, and non-interference in the internal affairs of other countries.

General Principle 2: There shall be no discrimination on the basis of difference in socio-economic systems. Adaptation of trading methods shall be consistent with this principle.

General Principle 3: Every country has the sovereign right freely to trade with other countries, and freely to dispose of its natural resources in the interest of the economic development and well-being of its own people.

General Principle 4: Economic development and social progress should be the common concern of the whole international community and should by increasing economic prosperity and well-being help strengthen peaceful relations and co-operation among nations. Accordingly, all countries pledge themselves to pursue internal and external economic policies designed to accelerate economic growth throughout the world, and in particular to help promote in developing countries a rate of growth consistent with the need to bring about substantial and steady increase in average income in order to narrow the gap between the standard of living in developing countries and that in the developed countries.

General Principle 5: National and international economic policies should be directed towards the attainment of an international division of labour in harmony with the needs and interests of developing countries in particular and of the world as a whole. Developed countries should assist the developing countries in their efforts to speed up their economic and social progress, should co-operate in measures taken by developing countries for diversifying their economies and should encourage appropriate adjustments in their own economies to this end.

General Principle 6: International trade is one of the most important factors in economic development. It should be governed by such rules as are consistent with the attainment of economic and social progress and should not be hampered by measures incompatible therewith. All countries should co-operate in creating conditions of international trade conducive in particular to the achievement of a rapid increase in the export earnings of developing countries and in general to the promotion of an expansion and diversification of trade between all countries, whether at similar levels of development, at different levels of development, or having different economic and social systems.

General Principle 7: The expansion and diversification of international trade depends upon increasing access to markets, and upon remunerative prices for the exports of primary products. Developed countries shall progressively reduce and, in appropriate cases, eliminate barriers and other restrictions that hinder trade and consumption of products of particular interest to developing countries and take positive measures such as will create and increase markets for the exports of developing countries. All countries should co-operate through suitable international arrangements on an orderly basis in implementing measures designed to increase and stabilize primary commodity export earnings, particularly of developing countries, at equitable and remunerative prices and to maintain a mutually acceptable relationship between the prices of manufactured goods and those of primary products.

General Principle 8: International trade should be conducted to mutual advantage on the basis of the most-favoured-nation treatment and should be free from measures detrimental to the trading interests of other countries. However, developed countries should grant concessions to all developing countries and extend to developing countries all concessions they grant to one another and should not, in granting these or other concessions, require any concessions in return from developing countries. New preferential concessions, both tariff and non-tariff, should be made to developing countries as a whole and such preferences should not be extended to developed countries. Developing countries need not extend to developed countries preferential treatment in operation amongst them. Special preferences at present enjoyed by certain developing countries in certain developed countries should be regarded as transitional and subject to progressive reduction. They should be eliminated as and when effective international measures guaranteeing at least equivalent advantages to the countries concerned come into operation.

General Principle 9: Developed countries participating in regional economic groupings should do their utmost to ensure that their economic integration does not cause injury to, or otherwise adversely affect, the expansion of their imports from third countries, and in particular from developing countries, either individually or collectively.

General Principle 10: Regional economic groupings, integration or other forms of economic co-operation should be promoted among developing countries as a means of expanding their intra-regional and extra-regional trade and encouraging their economic growth and their industrial and agricultural diversification with due regard to the special features of development of the various countries concerned as well as their economic and social systems. It will be necessary to ensure that such co-operation makes an effective contribution to the economic development of these countries, and does not inhibit the economic development of other developing countries outside such groupings.

General Principle 11: International institutions and developed countries should provide an increasing net flow of international financial, technical and economic assistance to support and re-inforce, by supplementing the export earnings of developing countries, the efforts made by them to accelerate their economic growth through diversification, industrialization and increase of productivity on the basis of their national policies, plans and programmes of economic development. Such assistance should not be subject to any political or military conditions. This assistance, whatever its form and from whatever source, including foreign public and private loans and capital, should flow to developing countries on terms fully in keeping with their trade and development needs. International financial and monetary policies should be designed to take full account of the trade and development needs of developing countries.

General Principle 12: All countries recognize that a significant portion of resources released in successive stages as a result of the conclusion of an agreement on general and complete disarmament under effective international control should be allocated to the promotion of economic development in developing countries.

General Principle 13: The Conference decided to include, as a separate part of the Principle adopted by the Conference, the Principles relating to transit trade of land-locked countries set forth below.

General Principle 14: Complete decolonization in compliance with the United Nations Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and liquidation of the remnants of colonialism in all its forms is a necessary condition for economic development and the exercise of sovereign rights over natural resources.

General Principle 15: The adoption of international policies and measures for the economic development of the developing countries shall take into account the individual characteristics and different stages of development of the developing countries, special attention being paid to the less developed among them, as an effective means of ensuring sustained growth with equitable opportunity for each developing country.

(2) The Conference has recommended a number of Special Principles to govern international trade relations and trade policies conducive to development.

(3) The Conference has adopted the following recommendation on Principles relating to transit trade of land-locked countries:

The Conference.

Having regard to the various aspects of the problems of transit trade of land-locked States,

Considering that for the promotion of the economic development of the land-locked States, it is essential to provide facilities to enable them to overcome the effects of their land-locked position on their trade,

Adopts the following principles together with the Interpretative Note:

Principle 1: The recognition of the right of each land-locked State of free access to the sea is an essential principle for the expansion of international trade and economic development.

Principle 2: In territorial and on internal waters, vessels flying the flag of land-locked countries should have identical rights and enjoy treatment identical to that enjoyed by vessels flying the flag of coastal States other than the territorial State.

Principle 3: In order to enjoy the freedom of the seas on equal terms with coastal States, States having no sea coast should have free access to the sea. To this end States situated between the sea and a State having no sea coast shall by common agreement with the latter and in conformity with existing international conventions accord to ships flying the flag of that State treatment equal to that accorded to their own ships or to the ships of any other State as regards access to sea ports and the use of such ports.

Principle 4: In order to promote fully the economic development of the land-locked countries, the said countries should be afforded by all States, on the basis of reciprocity, free and unrestricted transit, in such a manner that they have free access to regional and international trade in all circumstances and for every type of goods.

Goods in transit should not be subject to any customs duty.

Means of transport in transit should not be subject to special taxes or charges higher than those levied for the use of means of transport of the transit country.

Principle 5: The State of transit, while maintaining full sovereignty over its territory shall have the right to take all indispensable measures to ensure that the exercise of the right of free and unrestricted transit shall in no way infringe its legitimate interests of any kind.

Principle 6: In order to accelerate the evolution of a universal approach to the solution of the special and particular problems of trade and development of land-locked countries in the different geographical areas, the conclusion of regional and other international agreements in this regard should be encouraged by all States.

Principle 7: The facilities and special rights accorded to land-locked countries in view of their special geographical position are excluded from the operation of the most-favoured-nation clause.

Principle 8: The Principles which govern the right of free access to the sea of the land-locked State shall in no way abrogate existing agreements between two or more contracting parties concerning the problems, nor shall they raise an obstacle as regards the conclusion of such agreements in the future, provided that the latter do not establish a regime which is less favourable than or opposed to the above-mentioned provisions.

(4) In the light of its adoption of Principles governing international trade relations and trade policies conducive to development, the Conference has recognized the necessity of achieving the broadest possible measures of agreement at the earliest possible moment on a set of Principles, and has recommended that the institutional machinery proposed by the Conference should continue efforts to that end.

Section II: International Commodity Problems.

(5) In order to deal with the problems facing the primary commodity trade of developing countries the Conference has recommended that the provisions outlined below should be considered as means of increasing the export earnings of the developing countries by general measures as well as by specific measures related to individual commodities and, that, to this end, practical steps should be taken by Governments concerned to implement at the earliest possible date those of the following provisions which are applicable in the light of certain considerations, as solutions of the urgent problems of developing countries:

(a) Provisions for international commodity arrangements with a basic objective of stimulating a dynamic and steady growth and ensuring reasonable predictability in the real export earnings of the developing countries so as to provide them with expanding resources for their economic and social development, while taking into account the interests of consumers in importing countries, through remunerative, equitable ad stable prices for primary commodities, having due regard to their import purchasing power, assured satisfactory access and increased imports and consumption, as well as co-ordination of production and marketing policies.

(b) Provisions for a programme of measures and actions for the removal of obstacles (tariff, non-tariff and other) and discriminatory practices and for expansion of market opportunities for primary commodity exports and for increases in their consumption and imports in developed countries.

(6) The Conference has given general approval to the establishment of a commission on commodity arrangements and policies within the frame-work of the continuing institutional machinery which will be established following the UNCTAD. The Conference has also generally formulated terms of reference for the new Commission and requested that they be given prompt and favourable consideration by the continuing institutional machinery.

(7) The Conference has also adopted recommendations for active measures to promote market opportunities for primary commodity exports and for increases in consumption and imports in both developed and developing countries. It has expressed the belief that food aid should become an integral and continuing part of international aid under the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organization of United Nations. It has also recommended special action, both national and international, to deal with cases where natural products exported by developing countries face competition from synthetic and other substitutes. It has also recommended, inter alia, the study and preparation of a programme of action for the organization of commodity trade.

(8) The Conference has noted the heavy dependence of some developing countries on foreign exchange earnings from the export of minerals and fuels, and has recommended that the developed countries should effectively reduce and/or eliminate barriers and discrimination to the trade and consumption of those products, particularly internal taxation, with a view to increasing the real income of the developing countries from the said exports. It has also recommended action to provide the developing countries producing minerals and fuels with an appreciable increase in the revenues which accrue to them as a result of the export of these natural resources.

Section III: Trade In Manufactures And Semi-Manufactures:

(9) The Conference recognizes the urgent need for the diversification and expansion of the export trade of developing countries in manufactures and semi-manufactures as a means of accelerating their economic development and raising their standards of living. It considers that individual and joint action by both developed and developing countries is necessary to enable the latter to obtain increased participation commensurate with the needs of their development in the growth of international trade in manufactured and semi-manufactured products.

(10) The Conference has adopted a series of recommendations designed to help in the promotion of industries with an export potential and in the expansion of their export trade in manufactures and semi-manufactures. These recommendations deal with the following questions:

(a) Industrial development, dealing with the creation of a specialized agency for industrial development;

(b) Industrial branch agreements on partial division of labour;

(c) The establishment and expansion of industries with an export potential.

(11) The Conference has recommended the adoption by Governments participating in the Conference of certain guidelines in their foreign trade and assistance policies and programmes providing for increased access in the largest possible measure to markets for manufactured and semi-manufactured products of interest to developing countries, so as to enable these countries to increase and diversify their exports of these products on a stable and lasting basis. These guidelines also include appropriate provision by developing and developed countries for co-operation between Governments and private groups to build up export production in developing countries.

(12) The Conference has noted both the agreement signified by all developing countries and a great majority of the developed countries with the principle of assisting the industrial developing countries by the extension of preferences in their favour and the opposition to this principle expressed by some developed countries. The Conference has recommended that the Secretary-General of the United Nations establish a Committee of Governmental representatives to consider the matter with a view to working out the best method of implementing such preferences on the basis of non-reciprocity from the developing countries as well as to discuss further differences of principle involved.

(13) The Conference has adopted a recommendation based on the readiness of the centrally planned economies to take action with a view to increasing through appropriate measures the import of manufactures and semi-manufactures from the developing countries.

(14) The Conference has adopted a recommendation outlining practical measures for promotion of trade in manufactures and semi-manufactures among developing countries.

(15) The Conference has also adopted a recommendation calling on developed countries to take certain measures, inter alia, on import promotion and industrial adjustment.

Section IV: Financing For An Expansion Of International Trade And Improvement Of The Invisible Trade Of Developing Countries.

(16) On the main issues before the Conference on the financing of development, trade and invisible transactions, a large consensus of agreement was reached, though complete agreement was not always achieved.

(17) The Conference recognizes the wide concern expressed regarding the inadequacy of the growth target of 5 per cent per annum set for the United Nations Development Decade. The Conference acknowledges the need for steps to be taken, by both developing and developed countries, to mobilize domestic and international resources for accelerated growth in developing countries at rates even higher than envisaged for the Development Decade where feasible; and that the economic situations, policies and plans of individual developing countries be examined for this purpose with the consent of the country concerned. The Conference also recognizes in this connexion that the import capacity of developing countries, resulting from the combined total of export proceeds, in taking into account the evolution of visible earnings and capital inflow, and prices, should rise sufficiently, and the measures taken by the developing countries themselves should be adequate so as to enable these higher rates of growth to be achieved; and that all countries, developed and developing, should undertake, individually and in co-operation, such measures as may be necessary to ensure this. The Conference has also recommended that each economically advanced country should endeavour to supply financial resources to the developing countries of a minimum net amount approaching as nearly as possible to 1 per cent of its national income, having regard, however, to the special position of certain countries which are net importers of capital. The Conference has also adopted a recommendation providing, inter alia, that the rate of interest of Government loans to the developing countries should not normally exceed 3 per cent.

(18) The Conference has adopted recommendations concerning terms and conditions of financial and technical co-operation provided by industrialized countries through bilateral and multilateral programmes of assistance to developing countries.

(19) The Conference has proposed certain measures to deal with the increasing burden of accumulated debt and service payments in developing countries, with the objective of facilitating, whenever warranted and under appropriate conditions, the re-scheduling or consolidation of debts with appropriate periods of grace and amortization, and reasonable rates of interest. It has also approved the possibility of deliveries on credit of industrial equipment re-imbursable in goods.

(20) The Conference has adopted the following recommendations proposing measures and studies concerning an increase in the volume or an improvement in the terms of financing for developing countries:

(a) Recommendations concerning a United Nations Capital Development Fund, the gradual transformation of the United Nations Special Fund.

(b) The provision of aid for development on a regional basis.

(c) The promotion of the flow of public and private capital both to the public and private sectors in developing countries.

(d) Review of the use and terms of credit, export financing and marketing, and credit insurance.

(21) The Conference has recognized further that adverse movements in the export proceeds of developing countries can be disruptive of development. The Conference has, therefore, recommended that, as regards payments difficulties caused by temporary export shortfalls, members of the International Monetary Fund should study certain measures with a view to liberalizing the terms of the compensatory credit system operated by the Fund since February, 1963. As regards longer-term problems, the Conference has recommended:

(a) That the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development be invited to study the feasibility of a scheme that would provide supplementary financial resources to developing countries experiencing shortfalls in export proceeds from reasonable expectations. The relevant economic circumstances for consideration would include the adverse effects of significant increases in import prices.

(b) That the continuing machinery recommended by this Conference be invited to study and organize further discussions of concepts and proposals for compensatory financing put forward by the delegations of developing countries at the Conference, taking into account the effect of shortfalls in export earnings and adverse movements in the terms of trade.

(22) The Conference has also recommended a study of the international monetary issues relating to problems of trade and development with special reference to the objectives and decisions of this Conference. It has also approved a recommendation on the participation of nationals of developing countries in the process of policy formulation in international financial and monetary agencies.

(23) The Conference has agreed on a draft text containing a common measure of understanding on shipping questions, and has recommended that appropriate inter-governmental procedures, including any committee that might be deemed necessary, be established to promote understanding and co-operation in the field of shipping, and to study and report on its economic aspects.

(24) The Conference has also considered and recommended measures on insurance, tourism, technical assistance and transfer of technology, taking into account the need to improve the invisible trade of developing countries.

Section V: Institutional Arrangements.

(25) The Conference has recommended to the United Nations General Assembly that it adopt at its 19th session the following provisions, inter alia:

(a) The present United Nations Conference on Trade and Development should be established as an organ of the General Assembly to be convened at intervals of not more than three years and with a membership comprising those States which are members of the United Nations, the specialized agencies, or the IAEA.

(b) The principal functions of the Conference shall be: (i) To promote international trade, especially with a view to accelerating economic development, particularly trade between countries at different stages of development, between developing countries and between countries with different systems of economic and social organization, taking into account the functions performed by existing international organizations; (ii) To formulate principles and policies on international trade and related problems of economic development; (iii) To make proposals for putting the said principles and policies into effect and to take such other steps within its competence as may be relevant to this end, having regard to differences in economic systems and stages of development; (iv) Generally, to review and facilitate the co-ordination of activities of other institutions within the United Nations system in the field of international trade and related problems of economic development and in this regard to co-operate with the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in respect to the performance of their Charter responsibilities for co-ordination; (v) To initiate action, where appropriate, in co-operation with the competent organs of the United Nations for the negotiation and adoption of multilateral legal instruments in the field of trade, with due regard to the adequacy of existing organs of negotiation and without duplication of their activities; (vi) To be available as a centre for harmonizing the trade and related development policies of Governments and regional economic groupings in pursuance of Article I of the United Nations Charter; and (vii) To deal with any other matters within the scope of its competence.

(c) A permanent organ of the Conference, to be known as the Trade and Development Board, should be established as part of the United Nations machinery in the economic field, consisting of 55 members elected by the Conference from among its membership, with full regard for both equitable geographical distribution and the desirability of continuing representation for the principal trading States.

(d) For the effective discharge of its functions, the Board should establish such subsidiary organs as may be necessary and in particular three committees—on commodities, manufactures, and invisibles and financing related to trade.

(e) Each State represented on the Conference should have one vote. Subject to provisions to be determined by the General Assembly at its 19th session after consideration by it of a report and proposals to be made by a Special Committee to be appointed by the Secretary-General of the United Nations, decisions of the Conference on matters of substance should be taken by a two-thirds majority of the representatives present and voting, and decisions of the Board by simple majority. The task of the Special Committee shall be to prepare proposals for procedures within the continuing machinery designed to establish a process of conciliation to take place before voting and to provide an adequate basis for the adoption of recommendations with regard to proposals of a specific nature for action substantially affecting the economic or financial interest of particular countries.

(f) Arrangements should be made, in accordance with Article 101 of the Charter, for the immediate establishment of an adequate, permanent and full-time secretariat within the United Nations Secretariat for the proper servicing of the Conference, the Board and its subsidiary bodies.

(g) The Conference should review in the light of experience the effectiveness and further evolution of institutional arrangements with a view to recommending such changes and improvements as might be necessary. To this end it should study all relevant subjects including matters relating to the establishment of a comprehensive organization based on the entire membership of the United Nations system or organizations to deal with trade and with trade in relation to development.

(26) The Conference has also recommended action concerning interim institutional arrangements, and the terms of reference of subsidiary organs of the Executive Council.

Section VI: Special Problems.

(27) The Conference has requested the Secretary-General of the United Nations to appoint a committee of 24 members, representing land-locked, transit and other interested States as governmental experts and on the basis of equitable geographical distribution. The said committee is to be convened during 1964 to prepare a new draft convention dealing with transit trade of land-locked countries. The Conference has recommended that the new draft convention be submitted for consideration and adoption by a Conference of plenipotentiaries to be convened by the United Nations in the middle of 1965.

(30) The Conference has recommended non-discrimination in dealing with governmental trading organizations in foreign trade.

Section VII: Programme Of Work.

(31) In addition to the Programme of Work implied in the recommendations referred to above, the Conference has recommended the following:

(1) A study of the feasibility of rates of growth higher than those which have been experienced by most countries individually during the past decade, and even higher than those envisaged for the United Nations Development Decade, and of measures for developing and developed countries to take to achieve them.

(2) An overall economic and social survey of the depressed areas of the developing world and of special measures to make possible immediate action to secure a substantial improvement in the living levels of the populations of these areas.

(3) A programme of work for the Commission on Commodity Arrangements and Policies, or any equivalent body that may be established within the continuing machinery, for the development of appropriate guiding lines and procedures for commodity arrangements and, in respect of commodities to which certain conditions apply, for commodity negotiations and export studies.

(4) Further studies in commodity field regarding promotion and marketing arrangements, and measures to deal with problems of substitution and various types of research aiming at an expansion of market opportunities for exports of primary commodities from developing countries.

(5) Work related to the provision of economic and technical assistance with a view to expanding the export earnings of developing countries from primary commodities, semi-manufactures and finished manufactures.

(6) A study of methods of payment that would assist in promoting trade among developing countries.

(7) The necessary economic and statistical studies of world trade, with special reference to the problems of developing countries.

(8) The transmittal to the continuing United Nations trade machinery which it is proposed to establish, for further consideration and action, a draft recommendation submitted by Czechoslovakia on measures for expansion of trade between countries having different economic and social systems.

(9) The transmittal to the continuing trade machinery, for further consideration and action, of draft recommendations on the policies and practices of regional economic groupings among developed countries and on the promotion of regional economic groupings among developing countries, submitted by a number of developing countries.

(10) The transmittal to one of the organs to be set up by the Conference for further study of Part III of the proposal concerning the use of subsidies for improving the competitive position of manufactures and semi-manufactures of developing countries.

(11) The elaboration of trade aspects of an economic programme of disarmament.

View Of 75 Developing Countries:

The 75 developing countries said in Geneva on June 16 that they regarded the 119-nation World Trade Conference as in no way adequate or commensurate with their essential needs.

In a joint declaration, "the 75"—now 78 following the adherence of Kenya, North Korea and South Korea—said the Conference's final recommendations were "only an initial step towards the international endorsement of a new trade policy."

But they accepted the results of the Conference in the hope that they would "lay the foundation for more substantial progress in the period ahead."

The developing countries added: "The efforts of developing countries to raise the living standards of their peoples, which are now being made under adverse external conditions, should be supplemented and strengthened by constructive international action. Such action should establish a new frame-work of international trade that is wholly consistent with the needs of accelerated development."

They attached singular importance to the establishment of international machinery in the field of trade and development, and said they regarded their own unity as the outstanding feature of the Conference.

They pledged themselves to maintain, foster and strengthen this unity, and said Government representatives should study during the next session of the UN General Assembly, the question of institutional arrangements to consolidate it.

B. UN Memorial To Mr. Dag Hammarskjoeld: A bronze memorial to the former UN Secretary-General, the late Mr. Dag Hammarskjoeld, executed by the British sculptress, Miss Barbara Hepworth, was unveiled on June 11 at United Nations in New York.

Mr. Hammarskjoeld, who greatly admired Miss Hepworth's works, had before his death in a plane crash in Africa in 1961 discussed with her his ideas for an abstract sculpture to adorn the circle in front of the UN Secretariat building.

Miss Hepworth's sculpture, a free-form abstract entitled "Single Form", is based on Mr. Hammarskjoeld's ideas and is placed on the circle outside the Secretariat.

Cast in bronze at the London foundry of Morris Singer Co. Ltd., the sculpture weighs 4½ tons, stands 21 feet high, 16 feet wide and 2½ feet thick and is mounted on a granite plinth. It is the largest piece of single sculpture ever handled by the firm, which has cast many others, the most notable being Epstein's St. Michael and the Devil for Coventry Cathedral.

ADEN

A. Constitutional Conference In London: The South Arabian Federation Constitutional Conference convened by the British Government opened in London on June 9.

Opening the Conference, the British Colonial Secretary, Mr. Duncan Sandys, assured the Federation of continued British help to resist the constant danger of invasion from without and subversion from within.

He said that the British Government was "actively considering what further financial support they can give to the Federation and would discuss this with the delegates as political advance must be accompanied by progress in the economic and social fields."

Sultan Ahmed bin Abdullah el Fadhli, Chairman of the Federal Supreme Council, told the Conference that one of the main points for discussion was the formation of a strong Arab government for South Arabia.

He added: "Bound up with this is the question of British sovereignty in Aden. It is obvious that there can be no true Arab government either for Aden or the Federation as a whole as long as Aden is in name a State of the Federation but in fact is a British Colony."

The Chief Minister of Aden, Mr. Zain Abdu Baharoon, said the Federation welcomed the change to review the present unsatisfactory Constitution.

His delegation, he said, would make every effort to "put life into the present constitutional set-up which in our opinion was born paralyzed".

He said there were now many different governments in operation and "our object must be to unite these into one strong central government. The people of Aden look forward to the creation of a unitary State."

He said the people of Aden were keen to maintain the democratic institutions which had been built up, but the present Constitution, both in Aden and the rest of the Federation "has not proved acceptable in its workings."

The people of Aden wanted to see a single government embracing all South Arabia because "it is our belief that we in South Arabia should all share our destiny as a political and economic unit."

Attending the Conference were 18 delegates of the 14 States which make up the Federation, which has a total population of 700,000.

Opposition Of Parties:

The Aden People's Socialist Party issued a statement in London on June 8 describing the Conference as "unconstitutional."

The statement said the Conference was aimed at continuing the domination of British imperialism over the area of South Arabia. "The sultans, princes and feudal sheikhs do not represent the people of Aden. They are the worst civil servants ever."

The statement added that the results of the Conference, which had been "prepared beforehand by the Commonwealth and Colonial Secretary," would by no means be binding. The People's Socialist Party would "continue to oppose the proposed false independence." The statement called upon Britain to put an end to her imperialist policy and put into effect the UN resolutions concerning the Aden problems.

At a news conference in Cairo, Mr. Mohammed Aly el Jafry, Chairman of the South Arabian Association, condemned the London Conference.

Describing the Conference as a link in a chain of steps being taken by Britain to confuse and distort the UN resolutions, he said that the Conference was being held between Britain and its agents in the South. They could only be described as talks "between Britain and herself." The Association looked upon the talks as "illegitimate", and the Arab people in the South would not abide by the results.

Mr. El Asnag, Chairman of the People's Socialist Party of Aden, presented a petition on June 8 to the British Colonial Office demanding self-determination for Aden and the Aden Protectorate.

He told newsmen that his party wanted independence not only for Aden but also for the people of the Protectorate.

The petition, addressed to Mr. Duncan Sandys, drew attention to an earlier UN resolution on Aden which recommended that: "The people of Aden and the Aden Protectorate should be allowed to exercise their right to self-determination with regard to their future, the exercise of that right to take the form of a consultation of the whole population to be held as soon as possible on the basis of universal adult suffrage."

The memorandum told Mr. Sandys: "Your Excellency is in a position to save your country and use great risks of financial and physical commitments which usually accompany the determination of all nations towards freedom."

Mr. Asnag said the question could be discussed either through "normal negotiations," or independence will be won the "hard way."

He said his party was not opposed to the principle of a federation but was opposed to the present Federation because the entire machinery was "in the hands of feudal lords." The Federal Ministers were also powerless in the areas ruled by emirs and sheikhs.

Fresh criticism of the Conference was voiced on June 17 by Mr. O. S. Baabbad, President of the People's Congress of Hadramaut which is associated with the South Arabian League.

In a Press release, he said the people of South Arabia felt that the "weak Conference" would not serve their interests.

The Conference, he said, violated the resolutions of United Nations and was unrepresentative. The people should be represented by elected delegates, but the opposition or national parties were not invited and there were no members of Hadramaut in the East Aden Protectorate, which consisted of three-quarters of the territory. "The administrative power which holds the responsibilities of protecting the interests of our people failed to carry out its responsibilities properly."

He added: "The opposition of the administrative power to the resolutions of United Nations will make our people find out the proper way to secure their liberty, independence and sovereignty."

Fadhli State Secedes From Federation:

The Ruler of Fadhli State, Sultan Ahmed Abdullah Fadhli, announced on July 3 that his State had seceded from the Federation.

In a written statement on his way to Cairo from London, he said that the London Conference was a conspiracy to eliminate the nationalist elements in the Federation. He said his Sultanate was leaving the Federation with regret as he was one of its founders. Independence had been promised within five years, but six years had passed since the Federation was set up and nothing nad been achieved.

He said that at the London Conference he had submitted a note calling for immediate independence. He alleged that the British Government was responsible for all the grievous consequences of its action in South Arabia. He requested United Nations and the International Red Cross to intervene in the "massacre in South Arabia".

Communique:

The South Arabian Federation Constitutional Conference agreed at its final plenary session on July 4 to reshape the Federal Constitution democratically "with a view to proceeding to early independence".

The following is the text of the communique issued at the end of the Conference:

"It was unanimously agreed that the Federation of South Arabia should reshape its Constitution on democratic lines with a view to proceeding to early independence; and, with this object, the delegates reached the conclusions set out below.

"Legislature:

"(1) There should be a Legislature composed of a National Assembly (Al Majlis al Watani) and a Council of States.

"National Assembly:

"(2) The members of the National Assembly should be elected by a system of direct election, wherever this is practicable.

"(3) Any State which does not consider that a system of direct election would be immediately practicable, by reason of the existence of a tribal basis of society in that State, should be permitted to elect its members by a system of indirect election through an electoral college. The composition of electoral colleges should be laid down in the Constitution.

"(4) In a State in which direct elections are held, any male Federal citizen of the age of 21 years or over who has resided for five years out of the last seven years in that State, or who was born in that State, should be entitled to vote in that State in elections for the National Assembly.

"(5) No person should be entitled to vote in more than one place.

"(6) Subject to such exceptions as may be prescribed in the Constitution, any male Federal citizen of the age of 21 years or over should be qualified to stand as a candidate for election to the National Assembly in a State in which he was born or in which he has resided for five years out of the last seven years.

"(7) The Constitution should provide that the National Assembly should be summoned to meet if at least two-thirds of its members so request.

"(8) The life of the National Assembly should be four years.

"(9) An independent commission, to be appointed by the Federal Government with the approval of the National Assembly, should, as soon as possible, carry out a census of the population of the Federation, showing in particular the number of persons in each State who possess the qualifications set out in paragraph 4.

"(10) An independent commission, to be appointed by the Federal Government with the approval of the National Assembly, should, as soon as possible, report to the Legislature upon the practicability of introducing a system of direct elections in those States which have not already adopted it.

"Council of States:

"(11) The Council of States should be composed of one representative of each State.

"(12) Each State should select its representative in whatever manner may be prescribed by the law of the State.

"(13) The powers of the Council of States should be prescribed in the Constitution and should include: (a) The ratification of treaties; (b) The power to delay for a limited period the enactment of laws passed by the National Assembly, or to refer them back to the Assembly with amendments.

"Head of State:

"(14) There should be a constitutional Head of State, to be known as President of the Federation.

"(15) Subject to such exceptions as may be prescribed in the Constitution, any male Federal citizen of the age of 21 years or over should be qualified to be elected as President.

"(16) The representatives of each State in the National Assembly should appoint one of their number to form a nomination committee which should propose a candidate for the Presidency, and if such candidate secures the votes of a majority of all the members of the two chambers in joint session, he should be declared to be elected. If three such elections should produce no result, the committee should propose two candidates, and the candidate who secures the most votes should be declared to be elected.

"(17) The powers of the President should be defined in the Constitution. Except in regard to certain matters specified in the Constitution, he should act on the advice of the Prime Minister.

"(18) In the event of the absence, incapacity, resignation or death of the President, his duties should be temporarily performed by the Chairman of the Council of States.

"(19) If, for any reason, the office of President becomes vacant, the Legislature should be convened at once to elect a new President in the manner prescribed in paragraph 16.

"(20) The term of office of the President should be five years. He should not be eligible for election for two successive terms.

"Government:

"(21) There should be a Prime Minister, who should be appointed by the President.

"(22) The President should appoint as Prime Minister a person who, in his opinion, is able to command a majority in the National Assembly.

"(23) The President should appoint such other Ministers as the Prime Minister may recommend.

"(24) All Ministers must be members either of the National Assembly or of the Council of States.

"(25) Ministers should have the right to speak in both chambers.

"(26) The Government of any State should have the right to make representations to the Federal Government on any matter affecting it. Representations should be considered by the Federal Government before any executive action is taken, except in regard to internal security and defence.

"Citizenship:

"(27) Federal citizenship should be defined by a Federal law and embodied in the Constitution.

"Internal Security:

"(28) The Internal Security (Delegation of Powers) Law, 1963 should remain in force; and the Constitution should provide that operational control of the 2nd Federal Guard or of the Aden Armed Police or of the Aden or Lahej civil police should not be withdrawn from a State, except with the concurrence of a two-thirds majority of the National Assembly and a majority of the Council of States.

"(29) A declaration of a State of Emergency in any part of the Federation should be made by the Federal Government only with the agreement of the Government of the State concerned, except when the State of Emergency is applied to more than one State; and even then, the Federal Government should, as far as practicable, act in agreement with the Governments of the States concerned.

"(30) The powers contained in the present Federal Constitution to enact laws by provisional order should be exercised only in respect of internal security or defence, and should be subject to the agreement of the Council of States.

"Status of Aden:

"(31) The delegates expressed the desire that the constitutional status of Aden should be raised to that of the other States of the Federation; and they accordingly requested that British sovereignty should be renounced as soon as practicable, subject to the continued exercise by the British Government of such powers as may be necessary for the defence of the Federation and the fulfilment of Britain's worldwide responsibilities. The Secretary of State informed the delegates that the British Government was prepared to accede to this request.

"(32) As soon as practicable after the forthcoming elections in Aden, the British Government would convene a meeting of representatives of Aden and of the other States of the Federation to agree on arrangements for the transfer of sovereignty and to settle other constitutional questions, including the basis of representation in the National Assembly and the points raised by the Aden delegates on which agreement was not reached at this Conference and any other matters which may be raised by any other States.

"(33) Subject to agreement at that meeting, the British Government, after full consultation with the Aden Government, would take steps to transfer sovereignty in respect of Aden, in accordance with the distribution of powers under the Federation Constitution, with such amendments as may be agreed at that meeting.

"Date of Implementation:

"(34) The date for the transfer of sovereignty should be agreed between the British Government, the Aden Government and the Federal Government.

"(35) Unless otherwise agreed, the amendments to the Federal Constitution decided upon at this Conference, and any other amendments which may be decided upon at the meeting referred to in paragraph 32, should be introduced on the date on which sovereignty in respect of Aden is transferred.

"Accession of other States:

"(36) During the course of the Conference, the States of Mufiahi, Upper Aulaqi (Nisab) and Alawi applied for admission to membership of the Federation; and the Supreme Council accepted their applications, subject to agreement regarding their representation in Federal institutions and other related matters.

"(37) The delegates re-affirmed their desire to bring about the unity of South Arabia. To this end they decided to issue an invitation to the States of Upper Yafa', Qu'aiti, Kathiri and Mahra to join the Federation of South Arabia. The Secretary of State assured the delegates that the British Government would welcome the inclusion of these other States in the Federation.

"Independence:

"(38) The delegates asked that Britain should agree to independence for the Federation, while continuing thereafter to assist in its defence. They requested that as soon as practicable the British Government should convene a conference for the purposes of fixing a date for independence not later than 1968, and of concluding a defence agreement under which Britain would retain her military base in Aden for the defence of the Federation and the fulfilment of her worldwide responsibilities. The Secretary of State announced the agreement of the British Government to this request."

The first, a three-year loan of $811,000, would be used for the survey of direct road from Kabul to Herat. The loan will provide for the services of consulting engineers and special equipment.

The second loan is for a period of four years and will be used to carry out additional studies in the Hari-Rud and Upper Kabul river basins to make possible the development of new irrigation schemes and to set up two pilot irrigation stations in the basins. These are part of the 11th SUNFED programme which consists of 49 new projects all over the world.

BURMA

A. Mr. Chou En-lai's Visit: The Chinese Prime Minister, Mr. Chou En-lai, and the Foreign Minister, Marshal Chen Yi, paid a visit to Rangoon on July 10 and 11 when they held talks with the Chairman of the Revolutionary Council, Gen. Ne Win and other Burmese leaders.

The announcement of the visit caught diplomatic circles by surprise as there was no advance indication of the visit.

A joint communique signed by Mr. Chou En-lai and Gen. Ne Win on July 11 expressed deep concern at the deteriorating situation in South-East Asia, particularly in South Viet-Nam and Laos.

They agreed that a 14-nation conference on Laos be convened.

According to observers, the main purpose of the Chinese leaders' visit was to make use of the UN Secretary-General, U Thant's imminent visit to Rangoon. U Thant's recent forthright statement on the need for a political solution to the South Viet-Nam crisis could only have pleased the Chinese. Peking was apparently hoping to utilize the UN Secretary-General's home country in making its point.

The communique made no mention of how the Viet-Nam crisis could be resolved. Obviously Chinese ideas on this point had been propounded in private.

In the economic field the communique mentioned agreement on measures to speed up the implementation of projects under the previous Sino-Burmese Agreement.

The following is the text of the communique:

"His Excellency Chou En-lai, Premier of the State Council of the People's Republic of China and Marshal Chen Yi, Vice-Premier of the State Council and Minister of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of China, paid a friendly visit to the Union of Burma from July 10 to July 11. Gen. Ne Win and Premier Chou En-lai availed themselves of the opportunity provided by the visit to exchange views on matters of common interest to the two countries as well as on the current international problems, particularly those pertaining to South-East Asia.

"The two leaders expressed their deep concern over the deteriorating situation in South-East Asia, particularly in South Viet-Nam and Laos, affirmed their determination to continue to seek peaceful settlement of the situation and agreed that the conference on the Laotian problem of the 14 Geneva Agreement Powers should be convened.

"The two leaders reviewed the progress made by the two countries in development of their economic and technical co-operation and trade relations. Such friendly co-operation being fully in accordance with the spirit of equality and mutual benefit of supplementing each others' wants and rendering assistance to each other is beneficial to the cause of national construction of the two countries. In order to further strengthen this co-operation the two sides agreed to take necessary measures to speed up the implementation of the Sino-Burmese Agreement on economic and technical co-operation and to further expand the trade between the two countries.

"The two leaders expressed their satisfaction with the continued development of friendly relations between the two countries on the basis of the Five Principles of peaceful co-existence. The two leaders also took the occasion to re-affirm their respective undertaking contained in Article 3 of the Treaty of Friendship and mutual non-aggression concluded between the two countries. The talks were held in an atmosphere of friendliness and cordiality and have further contributed to mutual understanding between the two countries."

B. Progress In Agriculture: The Revolutionary Council has more than doubled agricultural loans and established floor prices for important agricultural crops.

The Council has also enacted the Peasants Protection Law, instituted land disposal committees, provided tractor services, and established co-operative villages on reclaimed lands for landless people.

Total sown acreage under all crops increased by nearly nine per cent in 1962-63. For the first time in the post-War period, total sown acreage exceeded the pre-War annual average by as much as seven per cent.

Substantial increases in production were recorded in wheat, maize, pulses, cotton, and sugar-cane.

It has been estimated that during 1962-63 land reclamations reached 42,888 acres, nearly all of which were in lower Burma. Farm mechanization increased and various types of irrigation work and investigations were carried out on a number of dam projects.

The installation of two under-sluices at a weir completed a project that will irrigate 22,000 acres, and work continued on the Kyetmanktang Dam in Central Burma, which will irrigate 30,000 acres. Work also started on the Ngwedaung project, which will ultimately irrigate 6,000 acres.

About $7.6 million was devoted to PL 480 agricultural commodities in 1963. Bulk of the commodities were sold and the money reserved for economic development purposes. The balance was food distributed by UNICEF. Development grants included one for land and water resources development, and one for expanded teak production, amounting to $4.9 million. They were financed on a loan basis under the 1959 $25 million credit.

Several earlier co-operative projects included construction of the Kabu Diversion Dam, which aided the livelihood of 250,000 persons. The large land-restoration programmes in the Irrawaddy and Sittang River deltas, for which heavy earth-moving, excavating, and dredging equipment was supplied, have exceeded annual targets with more than one million acres reclaimed from swamp and jungle. Almost 90 per cent of this was under cultivation and nearly 300,000 persons were settled.

CEYLON

A. Speech From The Throne: Opening the fifth session of Parliament, the Governor-General, Sir William Gopallawa, said in the Speech from the Throne on July 7 that the formation of the coalition Government (see page 5891) had received general acceptance and enthusiasm.

The Government, he said, intended to undertake further socialist measures. The main emphasis was on measures to reduce the cost of living, eliminate corruption and accelerate development programmes. The only reference to foreign and national banks was that the Government would utilize the banks more intensely to assist in national development.

The Speech declared that steps would also be taken to control agency houses in the national interest. Parliamentary rules and regulations would be suitably adapted to make Parliament work more smoothly.

It was announced that "necessary legalization will be introduced early to end the monopolistic ownership of daily newspapers and to establish a broad-based ownership. Through such legislation steps will be taken to set the Press on a democratic basis, thus eliminating malpractices inimical to national and social interests."

Special courts are to be set up to inquire into charges of bribery and corruption. Vigilance committees are to be appointed in government and semi-government institutions to eliminate bureaucracy, inefficiency and obstruction, and provision is to be made compulsorily to retire public servants who obstruct or do not co-operate.

The State-owned co-operative wholesale establishment is to extend its trade in the import and distribution of food, textiles, building materials and drugs, and the import of other goods is to be progressively Ceylonized. All articles are to have fixed prices and people's committees are to be set up in every electorate to ensure that there is no profiteering.

Regulations are to be introduced to implement the Sinhala Only Language Act along with the reasonable use of Tamil "in a manner acceptable to both the Sinhalese and the Tamils". Provision is also made for the establishment of district councils, which will decentralize the work of Government departments and which have been urged in recent years by the Federal Party as a measure towards a degree of regional autonomy.

On the question of religion, the Speech stated that "while ensuring for Buddhism its proper place in the country as the religion of the majority, complete freedom of worship will be granted to all religions and no injustice will be done to anybody on grounds of religion or worship."

The Speech made the following other points:

Workers in State-owned corporations and trade unions will be mobilized by law to share the burden of running the Government efficiently. People's committees, workers' advisory committees and vigilance committees will be set up for different purposes.

Workers' advisory committees will be associated with the administration at all levels. They will have power to investigate and advise the Government on the elimination of waste, inefficiency and corruption.

The people's committees will be legally empowered to eradicate hoarding, black-marketing and corrupt practices. They will be closely associated wtih the distribution of goods.

Stern action was being contemplated against non-national traders and illicit immigrants. Heavy penalties would be imposed on people who employ illicit immigrants and encourage them to come to Ceylon from South India.

Legislation would be introduced to ensure priority to the Ceylonese in employment, ban non-nationals from buying property, including land and open a national register to fight illicit immigration.

B. Controversy Over "Incorrect" Version Of Indian Envoy's Speech: The High Commission of India regretted on June 30 that an incorrect report of the function held in Jaffna attended by the Indian High Commissioner, Mr. B. K. Kapur, had been given prominence in the local Press.

Mr. S. H. Perinbanayagam, President of the Jaffna branch of the India-Ceylon Friendship League denied that there were any political speeches at the dinner given in honour of Mr. Kapur in Jaffna. He said there was no reference whatever to secession as reported in the Press.

He added that the Government agent, who was present throughout the dinner, had made no manner of protest, nor did he at any stage threaten to leave the place. On the other hand, the Government agent had greeted him cheerfully at the end of the dinner.

The following is the text of the statement issued by the Indian High Commission:

"The High Commission of India regrets that an incorrect version of a function held in Jaffna has been given prominence in the local Press and while the High Commission is not aware of the source of information on which the one-sided version is based, the High Commission is in a position to categorically deny the alleged statement attributed to the Indian High Commissioner, Mr. B. K. Kapur, during his recent visit to Jaffna which was essentially one of goodwill to the people of Ceylon of which Jaffna forms an integral part.

"It is regrettable that in releasing the information to the Press about the speeches in Jaffna those concerned should have suppressed the emphatic statement of His Excellency, Mr. Kapur, who, sensing the inappropriateness of certain sentiments expressed at the function organized to inaugurate the India-Ceylon Friendship League on June 26, emphasized that he could not be expected to make any observation on the policies of the Ceylon Government and merely expressed the hope that a solution satisfactory to all sections of the population of Ceylon would be reached in regard to the language problem in a spirit of friendship and amity and that Tamil would find a rightful place.

"The High Commissioner added that he was gratified to see that the people of Jaffna had the same warm feelings towards India as he has seen for himself among the Sinhalese and the rest of the population in Ceylon. It is relevant to mention that the High Commissioner had expressed his sense of appreciation at the spontaneous expression of sympathy and grief at the demise of Mr. Nehru by all sections of the people of Ceylon headed by the Prime Minister who had proceeded immediately to Delhi to convey personally her condolences."

The Ceylon Daily News had alleged on June 30 that the inaugural function and the dinner had been highlighted by speeches which were primarily "secessionist in tone." Mr. Kapur was quoted to have said that "I hope and trust that in the near future Tamil will be given its rightful place."

But, Mr. M. Sivasithamparam, an independent MP, who was present at the function, said that no speeches of the nature reported in the Press had been made. He said the main theme of the speeches was possible economic collaboration between India and Ceylon.

He said two speakers at the dinner had emphasized that it should not be "Indo-Jaffna friendship" but "Indo-Ceylonese friendship." He said Mr. Kapur in his speech had thanked the Prime Minister, Mrs. S. Bandaranaike for spontaneously expressing sympathy with Mr. Nehru's death and proceeding to India first to attend the funeral.

Mr. Kapur said later that he was somewhat embarrassed at the tenor of some of the speeches at the inaugural function of the League. He said he had emphasized in his reply that he could not be expected to make any observation on the policies of the Ceylonese Government. He had merely hoped that a solution to the language problem which would be satisfactory to both sides would be found in friendship and amity and that Tamil would find its rightful place.

Government Action:

Officials of Ceylon's External Affairs Ministry were asked not to attend the party given by the Indian Deputy High Commissioner, Mr. P. R. S. Mani, to bid farewell on his leaving Ceylon on transfer to Mauritius.

The Ministry's action was stated to be in protest against the reported remarks by Mr. Kapur at Jaffna.

An External Affairs Ministry source, while confirming this, declined to say anything further.

Two officials of the Ministry were to have attended the party, but both of them were understood to have informed Mr. Mani that they would not be attending it.

The Ministry had earlier summoned the Government agent of Jaffna, Mr. Neville Jayaweera, to report directly on the reported incident at the inauguration by Mr. Kapur of a branch of the Ceylon-India Friendship League.

Issue In House Of Representatives:

The controversy over the Jaffna function figured in Ceylon's House of Representatives on July 2.

The issue was raised by Mr. K. M. P. Rajaratne, leader of the Sinhalese extremist Jatika Vimukti Peramuna, who wanted the Prime Minister to take note of the incident and order immediate action.

But two Tamil members of Parliament, who were present at the function in Jaffna, effectively countered him. Both of them, Mr. M. Sivasithamparam, Independent, and Mr. A. Amrithalingam, Federal Party, described the Press reports about the incident as a "campaign of vilification" against the Indian High Commission and called upon the Government to put an end to it.

Both condemned the action of officials of the Ministry of External Affairs in boycotting the farewell function given by Mr. P. R. S. Mani, India's Deputy High Commissioner, whom they described as one of the best diplomats in Ceylon.

Mr. Sivasithamparam told Mr. Rajaratne that everyone knew about his love towards Pakistan. He said no one cared "two hoots" for whatever he had to say.

Mr. Rajaratne, who had criticised the Finance Minister, Dr. N. M. Perera, for attending Mr. Mani's party when the officials of the External Affairs Ministry were instructed not to attend it, got a retort from Dr. Perera himself. Dr. Perera in a raised voice said he was not going to be dictated to by department officials. "They must take orders from us," he said.

Dr. Perera pointed out that even if they had differences with the Indian High Commissioner that should not stand in the way of fulfilling their social obligations. He said Mr. Mani was a good friend of his. He also pointed out that though he opposed US policies, he attended US Embassy functions.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Defence and External Affairs, Mr. Felix R. Dias Bandaranaike, was not present in the House. The leader of the House, Mr. C. P. De Silva, said he did not know the details of the incident. The Prime Minister had held discussions regarding the matter, he said and added that he would bring the points raised in the House to her notice.

Mr. Amrithalingam said that he had seen Press reports that officials of the External Affairs Ministry had boycotted a function in connexion with the departure from the country of India's Deputy Commissioner. This had become important in view of the campaign of lies carried on by a section of the Press in connexion with the visit of the Indian High Commissioner to Jaffna. As one who was present at the function in Jaffna, he said he would assert on the floor of the House that Mr. Kapur had never said a word which would have in any way been prejudicial to the country or to its Government.

He said a campaign was being carried on to create bad blood between India and Ceylon and see that the Ceylonese Government was hustled into an attitude of hostility towards the Indian High Commission. He wanted a categorical statement from the Government whether the boycott of Mr. Mani's function by officials was part of the Government's policy or whether it was done by one of the officials on his own to embarrass the Government and create bad blood between the two Governments.

Mr. M. Sivasithamparam referred to what he called "a campaign of vilification that has been carried on against the Indian High Commission in the Press for the last few days" and said that, as one who was responsible for Mr. Kapur's visit to Jaffna, he wished to state categorically that the impression sought to be given in the Press was "utterly unfounded." He paid tribute to Mr. Kapur, who, he said, had been trying during the past four years to preserve the ties of friendship between India and Ceylon. He was one of the most careful diplomats in Ceylon and it was unfortunate that the Press had chosen him for this vilification.

He pointed out that at no time had the Government agent in Jaffna said to him that he objected to any statement. He said the Government agent had on the other hand told him (Mr. Sivasithamparam) that everything went on well at the function. For Mr. Rajaratne, Mr. Sivasithamparam said, "any stick was good enough to beat India." Nobody cared two hoots for whatever he (Mr. Rajaratne) had to say. "We know you love Pakistan. We know why you love Pakistan."

C. Postponement Of Elections —UNP Opposition: The United National Party (UNP), forming the largest Opposition group in Parliament, passed on July 4 a resolution urging the people to take "revolutionary action" in the event of the coalition Government postponing the General Election due to be held early in 1965.

The Deputy Leader of the Party, Mr. J. R. Jayawardene, speaking on the resolution at the Party's executive committee, said that with the entry of Marxists into the Government, there was fear that the Government might try to avoid holding a General Election.

The Government, he said, was trying to bring Ceylon to the position of Russia and China where the people had no freedom.

He declared that his Party, which had always advocated constitutional and legal means, had now pledged itself to revolutionary action in the event of a General Election being postponed.

He added that the Government, which thought in terms of illegal extension of its mandate from the people, had no right to exist and should be overthrown. "It is the people's right to vote that will be lost and it is only a revolutionary people's movement that can legitimately act in defence of people's rights."

He said the threat of a dictatorship had only receded. Very soon the Government would attack democratic institutions. The first victim would be the Press. A Bill would be introduced soon to take over the Press.

Mr. M. D. Banda, a senior member of the Party, said: "The United National Party which won independence for Ceylon will be failing in its duty if it did not stand by the people when the cherished right to vote and elect a Government of their choice is being threatened. The Party would like to tell the people that their democratic rights will be defended even through a revolution."

D. Canadian Assistance: Aid in the form of outright gifts, requiring no repayment, has been rendered to Ceylon by Canada.

Totalling some Rs. 130 million, it will be used for various development projects. This includes Rs. 33.8 million given under the Colombo Plan programme.

Of the Rs. 33.8 million allocated to new projects, Rs. 6.6 million has been made available by the Canadian Government in the current fiscal year. The remainder is drawn from funds credited to the Canada-Ceylon Colombo Plan programme by the Canadian Government in previous years but not previously allocated to specific agreed projects.

Of the total amount now specifically allocated under the new Agreement, Rs. 11.77 million is in Canadian dollars and will be used for the supply of materials, equipment, and engineering services from Canada for development projects. Another Rs. 22.061 million is in Ceylon rupees which have been generated by the sale in Ceylon of some 50,000 tons of Canadian wheat flour given to Ceylon by the Canadian Government since 1959-60. These "counterpart funds" will be used to meet the local costs of development projects.

The largest project under the new Agreement is the Katunayake Airport extension. Canada has agreed to grant in the current fiscal year a total of Rs. 19.25 million to this project—Rs. 10.67 million in Canadian dollar funds, and Rs. 8.58 million in rupee funds. The scheme involves extending the runway of Katunayake Airport to 11,050 feet to accommodate the largest jet aircraft, and the construction of a new terminal building. The cost of the project is expected to exceed Rs. 26 million. It will be one of the largest to be undertaken in Ceylon under grant aid.

Work has also begun with Canadian assistance on enlarging the capacity of the Mutual Fish Processing Plant, one of the earliest Canadian aid projects in Ceylon.

Canada is to provide equipment worth Rs. 1.1 million, as well as Rs. 616,000 in counterpart funds to cover the local costs of installation. This latest allocation of Canadian aid to fish-processing and marketing facilities brings total Canadian assistance to the development of Ceylon's fisheries to more than Rs. 14 million.

Another new project to be undertaken with Canadian financial assistance is the construction of a teaching hospital for the Faculty of Medicine at the University of Ceylon, Peradeniya. The Canadian Government has agreed to the allocation of Rs. 1.012 million in funds towards the construction costs of the first stage of the hospital.

The aid Agreement also provides for the allocation of Rs. 995,000 towards the construction of junior technical schools.

An allocation of Rs. 225,000 has been made to complete a number of small electrical power lines in the Gal Oya Valley. Canada has already provided Rs. 19.5 million to construct the main transmission lines in the Gal Oya Valley, to double the generating capacity at the Ingniyagala Power Station, and to provide a linking transmission line from the power station to the main power grid in the west of the Island.

Allocations of counterpart funds to the Namal Oya and Minneriya-Kantalai irrigation projects were covered by a separate Agreement early in 1963, and appeared in the Ceylon Budget estimates for 1963-64.

Agreement between the two countries deals with the allocation of capital aid funds and technical co-operation under which Ceylon students undertake technical training in Canada and Canadian experts are sent to Ceylon to act as advisers in special technical fields. Grants to students and advisers since the programme was initiated in 1951 amount to some Rs. 7.5 million.

Canada has also given economic assistance outside the Colombo Plan. Canadian engineers will soon begin construction of Ceylon's largest power station as part of the Maskeliya hydro-electric power project. Canada has granted a commercial loan of $10.8 million, or roughly Rs. 43 million, for this project.

CHINA

A. Communist Youth League Congress: The New China News Agency announced on July 7 that the constitution of the Communist Youth League had been revised to include a permanent exhortation to members to be guided by Marxism-Leninism and Mr. Mao Tse-tung's thinking.

The Agency published documents of the 18-day League Congress—the first in seven years—held in June, but kept secret until July 6.

The Agency published excerpts from a report on revision of the constitution by a League secretariat member, Mr. Hu Ke-shin, who told more than 2,000 delegates: "Mr. Mao Tse-tung's thinking is a guide to action for the Chinese people in their revolution and socialist construction".

Inclusion of Mr. Mao's name in the constitution is in line with the near-deification of the 70-year-old Communist Party Chairman during the past two years. For some time he has been placed on an equal pedestal with Marx and Lenin.

All newspapers on July 7 devoted their front pages to a communique and photographs about the Congress, under the headline: "Uphold the banner of Mao Tse-tung's thinking for the revolutionization of Chinese youth".

B. KMT Reconnaissance Aircraft Shot Down: According to the New China News Agency, a Kuomintang U-2 reconnaissance aircraft was shot down over east China on July 7.

The Agency said the aircraft was shot down by a "heroic unit of the Air Force of the Chinese People's Liberation Army."

In Taipeh, the Nationalist Air Force stated: "An Air Force U-2 developed an accident while carrying out a reconnaissance mission over the mainland today." The announcement gave no other details.

The first of the U-2 aircraft to be shot down was that piloted by the American, Gary Powers, which was brought down over the Soviet Union in May, 1960. Two others both belonging to Formosa have since been shot down over China. The first was destroyed in September, 1962, and the second in November, 1963. At the time of the 1962 incident the Formosa Government said it had bought two of the aircraft from the Lockheed Company, the American manufacturers.

HONG KONG

A. Trade With European Common Market Countries: A trade mission to the European Common Market countries has reported that the climate for trade expansion to these countries is favourable.

Other points made by the mission are that Hong Kong's relations with the European Economic Community will be bound up with the development of the Community's common commercial policy, including rules on origin and the Community's attitude towards G A T T.

There is considerable understanding in the Community of Hong Kong's position, but it will be imprudent for Hong Kong to relax its efforts to make known its achievements and explain its difficulties and reasonable aspirations in Europe.

There is general interest in the mission's proposals that Common Market industrialists should participate in Hong Kong's industry, both for the benefit of their own competitive position and for the advance of Hong Kong.

The mission has stressed that Hong Kong's economic position, although perhaps remarkable because it is unique, is a source of strength, not to be feared but exemplary and worthy of cultivation, and that Hong Kong's aspirations are no more than legitimate and were tempered by goodwill and understanding.

It has reported that Government officials and commercial interests in the Common Market countries have a considerable understanding and a useful degree of sympathy for Hong Kong's position.

The trade mission has sounded this note of caution: "Nevertheless, we were left in no doubt of the strength of protectionist influences on official policies, especially in the sphere of textiles, and it would be imprudent for Hong Kong to reduce its efforts to make known its achievements and to explain its difficulties and aspirations in Europe."

The mission received a number of specific trade inquiries. At the same time, however, some criticism was voiced in Europe about the way in which such inquiries were being answered from Hong Kong.

As a result of these criticisms, the members have recommended that the Hong Kong Commerce and Industry Department, in collaboration with the General Chamber of Commerce and the Federation of Hong Kong Industries, should devise a more effective system.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Possible advantages, both to Hong Kong and to Common Market industrialists, of the latters participating in Hong Kong's industrial expansion are explained in detail.

The members conclude that "although our ideas were received inevitably with varying degrees of enthusiasm in each country, there was a general interest in them, an interest which, if adequately and patiently cultivated by Hong Kong, will bear fruit in time."

Suggestions for Hong Kong's future trade promotion activity in the Community have also been made in the report.

It is considered that unless there is a change in the present attitude towards Hong Kong, the time is ripe to concentrate on commercial sales of Hong Kong products in the Common Market countries, on organizing participation in one form or another in Hong Kong's industry, and on easing particular trade barriers, rather than on further missions primarily devoted to generating goodwill.

In keeping with this conclusion, they suggest that there is scope for purely commercial or industrial selling missions, preferably not too large, sponsored by appropriate organizations and in a position to do business.

Market research and greater publicity for Hong Kong products, according to the report can play an important part in expanding the sales of Hong Kong products to member-countries of the European Economic Community.

INDIA

SUMMARY: New Ministers Appointed In Central Cabinet; Education Commission; Australian Wheat; Tourist Development Council Meeting.

A. Sardar Swaran Singh Appointed Minister For External Affairs—Changes In Central Cabinet: The appointment of Sardar Swaran Singh as Minister for External Affairs was officially announced on July 18 in a communique from Rashtrapati Bhavan.

Mr. H. C. Dasappa, who had been Minister for Irrigation and Power, has now been appointed Minister for Industry and Supply in place of Sardar Swaran Singh.

Mr. K. L. Rao has again been given independent charge of the Ministry of Irrigation and Power with his present status as Minister of State.

It was also announced simultaneously in a separate communique that Mr. C. Subramaniam, Minister for Food and Agriculture, would exercise overall supervision over the work of the Ministry of Community Development and Co-operation "so as to concentrate its activities on increased agricultural production."

For the first time since Independence, India will have a Foreign Minister exclusively in charge of the External Affairs Ministry. All these years the late Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru had functioned also as Foreign Minister in addition to his other responsibilities. After Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri became Prime Minister he recognized the need to have a separate Foreign Minister and had decided in principle to give up the additional burden of External Affairs even before his recent illness.

Mr. Shastri will, however, continue to take active interest in the conduct of the country's foreign relations. A senior official of the External Affairs Ministry will be attached to the Prime Minister's Secretariat to provide the necessary liaison at the administrative level, while policy matters will be cleared with him directly by the new Foreign Minister. The Foreign Affairs Committee of the Cabinet will also be activated to keep the senior Ministers in the picture.

The choice of Sardar Swaran Singh for this External Affairs portfolio was widely welcomed in political and diplomatic circles in New Delhi. For the last several years, he had been associated in one capacity or the other with the conduct of India's foreign relations, and on each occasion he had put forward the country's point of view with considerable skill and imagination.

The late Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru, had specially chosen Sardar Swaran Singh to assist him in his talks with Mr. Chou En-lai during the Chinese Premier's visit to Delhi in 1960 to discuss the border dispute. After the Chinese invasion in 1962, he was entrusted with the Indo-Pakistani negotiations on Kashmir. A few months ago he was sent to Djakarta to represent India at the ministerial-level preparatory talks for the Second Afro-Asian Conference.

Sardar Swaran Singh had also led the Indian delegation to the annual meetings of the Economic and Social Council of UN at Geneva in 1954 and 1955.

He had been a Minister for 18 years in Punjab and at the Centre. Born on August 19, 1907, he studied law at Lahore and started practice as an advocate at Jullundur in 1932. He was elected to the Punjab Legislative Assembly in 1946 and appointed Minister the same year.

In 1947, he was a member of the partition committee which was set up to divide the assets of the old Punjab province. Between 1947 and 1952, he served several terms as Minister in the Punjab before joining the Central Government as Minister for Works, Housing and Supply. In 1957, he moved to the Ministry of Steel, Mines and Fuel. After the last General Election, he was given the portfolio of Railways. Later he was entrusted with the Food and Agriculture Ministry when Mr. S. K. Patil resigned under the Kamaraj Plan.

Mr. T. N. Singh Appointed Minister Of State:

On July 22, Mr. T. N. Singh, member of the Planning Commission, was appointed Minister of State in the Ministry of Industry and Supply.

He will be in charge of Heavy Engineering.

Mr. Singh was a prominent member of the Lok Sabha till 1958 when he joined the Planning Commission. He was Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee of Parliament.

Mr. Singh, whose home State is Uttar Pradesh, was born on August 8, 1904. He studied at Harishchandra High School and later specialised in economics at Kashi Vidyapeeth. In 1921 he gave up studies to join the non-co-operation movement launched by Mahatma Gandhi. As he was only a minor, the authorities kept him in detention for some time and released him. He was imprisoned for offering satyagraha in 1931 and 1942.

He was assistant editor of National Herald, Lucknow, and later a member of the Press Commission.

B. Colombo Proposals On Border Dispute With China—Indian Note: In a Note handed to the Chinese Embassy in New Delhi on July 16, the Government of India has described China's so-called "acceptance in principle" of the Colombo proposals as nothing but a euphemism for its non-acceptance in practice of what was clearly intended as a reasonable basis for direct negotiations between the two countries for a settlement of the border dispute.

The Government has accused the Peking Government of deliberately "thwarting and circumventing" the Colombo proposals to retain the fruits of its aggression.

The Indian Note was in reply to the Chinese communication of March 31. The Chinese had tried to refute the earlier Indian protest that Chinese troops were setting up stone cairns in the Aksaichin area to consolidate their illegal occupation of Indian territory.

Denouncing the Indian charge as "sheer fabrications and slander," the Peking Government attempted to expatiate on its so-called "positive response" to the Colombo proposals to assure India that China was really interested in a peaceful settlement of the border dispute. The Government of India in its reply repeated its earlier charge that Chinese troops were in fact setting up stone cairns in Aksaichin to demarcate their so-called "line of actual control" and utilised the opportunity to expose conclusively that China's "acceptance in principle" of the Colombo proposals was really no acceptance at all.

The Indian Note recalled that the Chinese Foreign Minister, Marshal Chen Yi, had himself told a correspondent of the Swedish Broadcasting Corporation on February 17, 1963 that the Colombo proposals "are neither a command, nor an arbitration decision. The Chinese Government is not obliged to accept them in toto." Marshal Chen Yi had also said: "The Colombo proposals contain contradictions and fallacies in logic."

"Is this what China calls her positive response to the Colombo proposals?" the Indian Note asked.

[Hitherto, the Government of India used to get deeply involved in unnecessary legalistic arguments, in its exchange of Notes with the Peking Government, to prove over and over again that China had violated India's territorial integrity. Now the emphasis is on exposing China's deceit, trickery and false pretensions while re-asserting India's basic claims to the lost territory.]

In the present case, the Government's China experts have not tried to prove all over again that Chinese troops in Ladakh were in fact setting up stone cairns along the so-called "line of actual control" in Aksaichin. Instead, they have tried to (a) establish clearly that China has not accepted the Colombo proposals, (b) disprove Peking's claim that the tension on the Sino-Indian border has eased, and (c) challenge China's contention that it has the sovereign right to set up posts in the demilitarized zone.

The Indian Note said: "The Chinese armed forces have resorted to every possible means to consolidate their hold over this territory illegally occupied by them. The People's Republic of China has refused to accept all reasonable proposals for negotiations, including those made by the six Asian and African countries at the Colombo Conference. It has brought into Tibet large numbers of military forces which are poised against India and it has continued to conduct a concerted propaganda campaign against India not only in China but also in other countries, specially in Asia and Africa. These actions of the Chinese Government, far from easing the situation, have obviously led to the continuation of the tension on the Sino-Indian border."

C. Cease-fire Violations In Jammu And Kashmir—Pakistan Held Guilty By UN Observers: It was made known in New Delhi on July 16 that Pakistan had been held guilty of cease-fire violations in Kashmir by the Chief UN Military Observer in two recent incidents.

In one incident, on June 11, a Pakistani soldier, accompanied by two armed Pakistanis dressed as civilians, crossed the cease-fire line at 9-30 a.m. and fired rifle shots at an Indian police patrol in the Chamb area in the Akhur sector. This was soon followed by a spurt of unprovoked Pakistani fire with light machine-guns and rifles on the army patrol and post in the same area. About 450 rounds were fired by Pakistani troops.

A cease-fire violation complaint was lodged with the UN observers and the UN Chief Military Observer, after investigations, has held Pakistan guilty of a cease-fire violation.

In the second incident which occurred in the Uri sector on June 21, Pakistani troops, approximately a company in strength, crossed the cease-fire line in the early hours of the morning and attacked one of the Indian pickets. Hand-grenades were used by Pakistani troops. Indian troops fired at the raiders. One Pakistani soldier was killed in the encounter.

Investigations made by the UN Chief Military Observer, based on the physical evidence found at the scene of the incident, clearly indicated that an organized raid had been carried out by armed Pakistani personnel. The UN Observer held Pakistan guilty of violating the cease-fire line.

In spite of these awards against them, Pakistani troops and armed "civilians" continue to violate the cease-fire line in Jammu and Kashmir in an attempt to keep tension alive.

After interrogating some of the "civilians" caught by the Indian authorities, it has been found that they are either Razakars or Mujahids who have received training in guerrilla warfare. Some of them are also Pakistan army personnel dressed as civilians.

Pakistani violations are said to be of various types ranging from ineffective firing to organized raids including infiltration, cattle-lifting and the like.

Pakistan has provoked over 100 incidents since May 21 on the cease-fire line resulting in scores of casualties on both sides, according to well-informed sources in New Delhi.

Officially 27 incidents of cease-fire violation had been reported by the Indian Defence Ministry from May 21 until July 15. But nearly 100 other incidents had not been reported.

The sources said there was a definite political motive behind the increased number of attacks from the Pakistan side since May 21. Though the incidents caused heavy losses on the Pakistan side they were intended, according to the observers, to keep alive the Kashmir issue and focus attention of the London Commonwealth Prime Minister's Conference. This had been the pattern in the past also. The incidents had increased four-fold during the Security Council debate on the Kashmir issue earlier this year.

UN Observers' Allegation:

The UN Chief Military Observer in Kashmir, in an award against Pakistan, has accused Pakistani troops of "deceiving" UN observers.

Pakistan has been found guilty of constructing new posts in the Mendhar sector of the cease-fire line (south of Poonch) early in June.

Giving his verdict, the Chief Military Observer said that the "posts were constructed by Pakistani troops, who later filled them in and camouflaged them in order to deceive UN observers."

The Chief Military Observer has given altogether five new awards against Pakistan for violation of the cease-fire line.

The remaining four awards also relate to incidents in the Mendhar sector on June 27, 28 and 29 and July 4. In all these cases, the Chief Military Observer came to the conclusion that Pakistani troops had indulged in unprovoked firing at Indian posts.

Meanwhile, Pakistani troops have extended their hostile activities to the Chamb sector on the border.

They fired on the Indian post of Dadal on the northern tip of the Chamb sector. Since the firing was ineffective, the Indian side did not retaliate. However, a protest was lodged with the UN Observer group against the violation of the Cease-fire Agreement.

According to another message, one Pakistani was killed and another wounded on July 19 when they crossed into Indian territory and fired at Indian forces, who hit back, near Betar in the Poonch sector.

One Indian havildar was wounded when Pakistani Razakars fired on an Indian post north-west of Nowshera. When Indian troops returned the fire the marauders fled.

G. Australian Wheat: India will receive 1.61 million tonnes of wheat from Australia during the next 11 months.

Australia has agreed to supply India 1.7 million tonnes of wheat, of which 90,000 tonnes has already been received.

India wants to obtain its next year's requirements of wheat as far as possible only from USA, though under PL 480 part of the supplies has to be obtained through normal commercial transactions.

In view of the price factor, India would like to avoid commercial transactions, except in the case of rice where these are considered necessary.

Till the end of April India had received 1.6 million tonnes of foodgrains from USA. The balance of 2.8 million tonnes of wheat under the previous PL 480 Agreement and next year's requirements, now being negotiated in Washington, are expected to be made available by July. India is likely to ask for 4 to 4.5 million tonnes of foodgrains for 1965.

India's imports of foodgrains have been steadily going up. In 1961, 3.5 million tonnes of foodgrains were imported, in 1962 3.6 million tonnes and in 1963 4.5 million tonnes.

While imports have been rising, indigenous production has not increased substantially. Since 1960-61 India's total food output has been 80 to 81 million tonnes. It went down to 78.7 million tonnes in 1962-63. It is estimated at 80 to 81 million tonnes in 1963-64. The foodgrains target for the Third Plan is 92 million tonnes. The working group on agriculture has estimated that for self-sufficiency in foodgrains, sought to be achieved during the Fourth Plan, a target of 120 million tonnes is essential. This does not provide for buffer stocks.

As for imports of rice during the next 12 months, India plans to obtain 60,000 tonnes from Burma, 1,00,000 tonnes from Thailand, 50,000 tonnes from Cambodia and 60,000 tonnes from the UAR, in addition to about 3,00,000 tonnes from the United States under PL 480. Purchase of rice from countries other than the United States will largely depend on satisfactory price arrangements.

Another meteorological rocket was fired the following day. Twenty-four similar rockets would also be sent up in this series during the next 12 months.

K. Record Production By Durgapur Steel Plant: The Durgapur Steel Plant has achieved a production rate in excess of its capacity, according to official figures of output for the first half of this year.

The Plant produced 5,18,474 tonnes of steel ingots in the last six months as against 4,81,049 tonnes in the corresponding period last year.

The output in the first half of this year was 18,474 tonnes more than the rated capacity of a million tonnes of steel ingots for a full year.

In pig-iron also the Plant's production during this period was 49,000 tonnes more than that of the corresponding period in 1963.

Pig-iron production in the first half of this year totalled 6,84,619 tonnes as against 6,68,840 in the same period last year.

The higher production helped not only to keep the melting shop fully fed but also to release larger quantities of pig-iron to the foundries which have been experiencing difficulty in obtaining adequate supplies.

L. Extension Of Congress To Jammu And Kashmir—National Conference's Decision: The working committee of the ruling National Conference decided on July 17 to "join the mainstream of national political life" by extending the Congress to Jammu and Kashmir. The decision was endorsed by the National Conference Legislature Party at its meeting in Srinagar on July 18.

The Conference authorized its senior Vice-President, Mr. G. M. Sadiq, to convey the decision to the Congress High Command, "particularly to Congress President, Mr. K. Kamaraj and the Prime Minister, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri."

Bakshi Ghulam Mohammed agreed to step down from presidentship of the National Conference in deference to the wishes of the Conference executive. This was announced at the conclusion of the overnight deliberations of the executive.

The executive had deputed Mr. Girdharilal Dogra, former Finance Minister, to convey its wishes to Bakshi Ghulam Mohammed and seek his reaction.

At the meeting on July 18, Mr. Dogra reported that the Bakshi wanted it to go ahead as it liked.

The executive then authorized Mr. Sadiq to discuss with the Congress High Command the question of setting up a Congress unit in Kashmir. The High Command's advice will be acceptable to the National Conference.

The executive meeting was immediately followed by a meeting of the National Conference Legislature Party, which also resolved to abide by the outcome of Mr. Sadiq's parleys with the Congress High Command.

N. Tourist Development Council Meeting: The Tourist Development Council, which ended its two-day meeting in Srinagar on July 19, has concurred with the decision of the Central Government to constitute two corporations to undertake commercial enterprises in the field of tourism.

One corporation would build hotels, while the other would organize special transport services, produce and distribute tourist publicity material and make arrangements to entertain tourists.

Some members urged that a few selected places connected with the freedom struggle should be developed. They also suggested that a committee be appointed to advise the Council in this matter.

The consensus at the meeting was that more funds should be allotted in the Fourth Five-Year Plan to promote tourism "which was one of the biggest foreign exchange earners". An outlay of Rs. 50 crores has been indicated on this account in the Fourth Plan.

On the question of permitting foreign artistes to enter India for working in hotels, it was suggested that proposals involving no foreign exchange could be sent for the Government's consideration. The Council called upon hoteliers to develop local talent and evolve some kind of indigenous entertainment for foreign tourists.

The Council was of the opinion that rigorous steps should be taken by the State Governments to preserve wild life. It recommended that special measures be adopted to promote tourist traffic to hill stations.

The Council agreed that more youth hostels of the right type and standard were needed, particularly in smaller cities and out-of-the-way tourist centres. The Council laid special stress on training personnel in tourist bureaux set up by the State and Central Governments.

O. Mr. Ram Kishen's Policy Statement: In his policy statement on July 8, which he described as "more in the nature of a pledge" the Punjab Chief Minister, Mr. Ram Kishen promised a clean administration. He said that the judiciary would be separated from the executive in three or four months.

"Realizing that corruption in the administration and business is doing incalculable damage to the social, economic and political fabric, we pledge to wage a war against corruption".

The Government would not interfere in the elections to religious institutions. "We will restore the confidence in, and preserve the impartiality of the Services so that a cadre of efficient, unbiased and fearless public servants can go about their job.

"We will enforce law and order at all costs. We will take steps to see that the honest citizen is saved from harassment and the dishonest and unscrupulous effectively curbed."

He said the new Government was irrevocably committed to democratic socialism and pledged to adopt a progressive and comprehensive educational policy aimed at promoting the creation of a socialistic pattern of society.

A promise to stabilize the price level was included in the policy statement which said that the Government would reduce the prices of consumer articles, particularly grain. No quarter would be given to the unscrupulous trader, but the honest trader would be saved from harassment.

He gave the highest priority to agricultural development in the new Government's programmes. All impediments in the way of stepping up agricultural production would be removed.

He said that in an effort to consolidate democracy in Punjab the Government would encourage active co-operation and association of the Opposition parties.

He said he had made it clear to officials that the Government wanted to create a "moral climate" in which people could breathe "fresh air". He had sought their co-operation.

He had "several concrete steps" in mind to root out corruption, but wanted some time to implement them. He had had discussions with the Central Home Minister, Mr. G. L. Nanda, in this regard.

He said he did not want to let his promise of a "war on corruption" remain a slogan. "People will see that something is really being done. For the present the Sadachar Samiti will begin functioning in the State." He wanted officials to work fearlessly. "Their fingers have been maimed and crippled and their pen broken, but soon this will be a thing of the past."

Asked whether the Government contemplated "removing the injustice done to several officials including Mr. Grewal and Mr Kapur", he said: "I am strengthening my Law Department first." He felt "there will be no difficulty" for any official if he wished to return to the State, but "we have also to make a quota available to the Centre from among our officers."

INDONESIA

A. Soviet Assistance: Many development projects now under way are financed by credits from the Soviet Union.

Recently a protocol was signed on implementing the various development projects discussed by experts from both countries.

Six projects, under Agreements signed several years ago, included the Trikora steel plant in Tjilegon, West Java, with a proposed capacity of 100,000 tons of steel annually. Among the others are a superphosphate factory with a 100,000-ton annual capacity; a 662-kilometre road-building project in Borneo; a 100-seat Oceanology Institute in Amboyna; a 280,000-kwh electric power station at Sigguru-guru; an atomic plant in Djakarta and another in Serpong.

Negotiations have also led to the purchase of greater quantities of rubber direct from Indonesia.

Some Soviet projects in Indonesia will be the biggest ever undertaken in the country. The hydro-electric project on the River Asahan will create a huge reservoir. There will be a small re-inforced concrete dam. Water will be supplied through a tunnel leading to an underground power station built at a depth of 250 metres.

Electric power will serve an aluminium complex being built in the vicinity. This will also be Soviet-designed and-constructed. North Sumatra towns that have recently been building cotton, mineral, fertilizer, and plastic factories will benefit most from the power station.

Indonesia is going through a phase of acute economic difficulty. She is facing transport, production, and currency problems. Failure to receive promised foreign aid, amounting to some £144 million has aggravated the situation.

Among immediate steps taken to bolster the economy are economic measures to increase food production, improve land and sea transport, and simplify export procedures.

The Soviet Union will not be the only East European country playing a vital role in the present economic setback. Poland is playing a major role in improving the nation's shipping by building a number of ocean and coastal craft. Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Bulgaria, and Yugoslavia are building industries, the plants being mainly on credit terms. East Germany has sent a number of mining experts to assist in stepping up coal production, and is also building some industries.

ISRAEL

A. Mr. Levi Eshkol's Visit To USA: The Prime Minister, Mr. Levi Eshkol, arrived in Philadelphia on May 31 on an official visit to the United States.

The following day he arrived in Washington, where he was welcomed by President Lyndon B. Johnson.

In a welcoming statement, Mr. Johnson said peace was not only possible but imperative for the Middle East and for the world in general. "We know that Israel wants to live in peace with its neighbours." He also assured Mr. Eshkol that USA was prepared to continue its aid to promote Israel's technical advance, especially in the field of desalination of sea water.

He said the American people greatly admired Israel's progress and the way the people of Israel had mastered monumental problems. "Israel today is a symbol of the strength of its people." He recalled US aid to Israel in the past and assured Mr. Eshkol that the aid would continue.

He added that he knew well that Israel and USA were sharing a common goal: "the development of a peaceful world." He expressed confidence that the Premier's visit would result in further improving the already close ties between the two countries. "We are aware of the problems of political adjustment Israel faces with her neighbours. We know it is not only possible but imperative that these problems be peacefully resolved, bringing justice for all as well as security for all."

In his reply, Mr. Eshkol emphasized the leading role of the President in world affairs. Mr. Johnson, he said, "stands for peace, freedom and welfare for the people." This was a constant encouragement for nations around the globe struggling for these goals.

Then, citing in Hebrew the prophet Malachi, he asked: "Have we not all one father, hath not one God created us? From Jerusalem, city of immortal prophecy and peace, I bear with me the best wishes of the people of Israel, to you, Mr. President, the first citizen of this great country that fulfils the injunction of our sages, to love peace and pursue peace.

"Mr. President, from this great centre of Government here in Washington, symbol and repository of democracy, there has constantly gone forth a message of encouragement to nations in their struggle for liberty and the affirmation of human values.

"The aid and sympathy tendered to us by successive US Governments and by the people of USA are engraved for all time on the tablets of our renewed nationhood.

"Through you, Mr. President, I wish to convey from the people of Israel to the people of USA a heartfelt message of goodwill and of best wishes for their happiness and welfare."

Meeting With US Senators:

Mr. Levi Eshkol told US Senators on June 1 that Israel required modern tanks and jet aircraft to defend herself against a military build-up in Arab countries.

Senator John Sparkman, acting Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, told newsmen that Mr. Eshkol had expressed this view during a meeting with the Committee.

Senator Sparkman emphasized that the Israeli leader had not stated that he intended to ask USA to supply the tanks and jet planes. Mr. Eshkol declined to discuss the substance of his talks which opened at the White House on June 1 with President Johnson.

Asked what USA could best do to help Israel at this time, Mr. Eshkol replied: "To help us maintain our deterrent capacity and also to help us more in economic development, which is the most important thing."

Discussing the security situation in the Middle East, he said that President Nasser was "threatening Israel almost every week" and saying that "Israel is to be destroyed."

He said the Israelis heard that the Soviet Premier, Mr. Khruschev had promised Soviet arms to President G. A. Nasser during his recent visit to UAR, "so we take these threats to be real and it means that we must always keep up our deterrent power."

At another point, he appeared to discount the significance of Mr. Khruschev's support for the Arab cause.

He was asked what he thought would happen when Israel began to divert waters of the River Jordan and the Arab countries reacted.

He replied: "I personally am inclined to think that we will take our share of the waters without meeting stiff resistance."

Senator Sparkman told newsmen that every conceivable subject involving the Middle East was discussed by Mr. Eshkol and the members of the Foreign Relations Committee. He said the Prime Minister mentioned Israel's needs for modern tanks and jet planes when asked for his views about the military situation in the Middle East.

Joint Communique:

Mr. L. Eshkol ended his visit on June 3, backed by President Johnson's renewed pledge in a joint communique to help preserve peace and spur economic development in the Middle East.

President Johnson "re-iterated to Prime Minister Eshkol US support for the territorial integrity and political independence of all countries of the Near East and emphasized the firm opposition of the United States to aggression and the use of force or the threat of force against any country".

"In this connexion, both leaders expressed their concern at the diversion of vitally important resources from development to armaments."

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The communique reported that President Johnson emphasized to Mr. Eshkol the strong desire of USA for friendly relations with all Middle East countries and "its devotion to peace in the area and to peaceful economic and social development of all countries" there.

Mr. Eshkol expressed his deep appreciation "for the consistent interest and sympathy shown by the US and for the generous economic assistance rendered by the United States Government and the American people to Israel over the years."

"He was confident that Israel's development would continue unabated towards the rapid achievement of a self-sustaining economy. It was his deep conviction that peace and the maintenance of the territorial integrity and national independence of all countries in the Near East is of vital interest to the region and to the world."

The two leaders agreed that an arrangement to undertake joint studies on problems of de-salting sea water to provide urgently needed fresh water, provided concrete evidence of the US desire to continue to assist Israel to solve remaining economic problems.

Both countries viewed the project as part of a world-wide co-operative effort being undertaken to solve the problem of water shortage. They announced that the knowledge and experience obtained from the joint US-Israeli effort would be made available to all countries with water deficiencies.

"They declared their firm determination to make every effort to increase the broad area of understanding which already exists between Israel and the United States and agreed that the Prime Minister's visit advanced this objective."

TV Interview:

Mr. L. Eshkol said in a television interview on June 7 that there was a "peace camp" in the Arab world.

Asked to comment on reports of the "peace camp," he said: "Yes, they exist here and there but I wouldn't like to explain about it because it might endanger some of them."

Asked if he thought King Hussein hoped for improved relations with Israel, he said: "For very obvious reasons it would be bad if I should state these things in public."

He said he was sure Arab hostility to Israel would decrease. "It stands to reason. World opinion will not allow the Arabs to destroy a country like Israel."

He repeated that he did not consider Mr. Khruschev's speeches in Egypt in July a "go-ahead" signal to the Arabs to attack Israel.

While he thought it would be a "good idea" for Russia and USA to include the Arab-Israel dispute in any negotiations they might hold toward some kind of detente, he said that he was "not sure if the time is ripe" for such talks. He said, however, that he had mentioned the possibility in his discussions with President Johnson.

He gave as one reason for his optimism over peace with the Arabs—the high cost of armaments. Another was President Nasser's growing problem of raising the Egyptian standard of living.

News Conference In Los Angeles:

Mr. L. Eshkol told a news conference in Los Angeles on June 10 that Israel was several years behind UAR in weapons.

He said that UAR was obtaining weapons from the Soviet Union. "We are behind UAR, but we have a small, brave army." He added that when UAR received Russian MIG jet fighters, "we were left no choice but to try and keep up with them".

Asked if President Johnson had assured him of defending Israel in case of attack, he replied: "It is a known fact that President Johnson considers maintenance of Israel's borders of primary importance to the United States."

He said peace in the Middle East depended upon mutual recognition of boundaries and upon separate political systems —"Until peace comes, we must maintain our deterrent strength."

"The President gave me a clear picture of American policy round the world, including the Middle East. I was deeply moved by his dedication to peace and to the advancement of people everywhere. I shall return to my country encouraged by his friendship."

He said among the problems he had discussed with President Johnson "was the imaginative suggestion he has made that our two countries co-operate in the sphere of desalting. We reached agreement to embark upon a joint study of the possibility of desalting on a large scale for agricultural use."

He cast doubt that there would be a war with the Arab nations, but assured that his country would be prepared if war came.

He stressed that Israel had made no plans for installing or developing nuclear weapons, and expressed regret that the United Arab Republic was installing ground-to-ground missiles that could eventually be outfitted with nuclear warheads.

Second Communique:

On the eve of Mr. Eshkol's departure from New York on June 11, it was announced in a second communique that USA would actively participate in setting up large plants for desalting sea water in Israel. Blueprints for the plants would be prepared jointly by Israeli and US study groups later in 1964.

The two countries also announced that a "joint US-Israeli technical team will be appointed immediately to conduct, during this Summer, surveys to define the scope and requirements of the programme."

Mr. Eshkol had discussed the sweet water problem at some length with President Johnson, who showed considerable interest.

Following President Johnson's agreement with Mr. Eshkol to launch joint projects, expert talks were held in which the Israeli Deputy Defence Minister, Mr. Peres, the US Atomic Energy Commission Chairman, Mr. Glenn T. Seaborg, and officials from the AEC, the US State Department and the Department of Interior participated.

US-Israeli co-operation on what constitutes a vital problem for Israel will come in three stages:

(1) Appointment of a joint technical team to work out the ground rules for the future programme. Officials from the Departments of State and Interior and the Atomic Energy Commission are expected to visit Tel Aviv shortly for the first stage of consultations.

(2) Detailed engineering and economic studies by joint technical and scientific forces. Informed sources said it will mainly be cost efficiency studies to determine whether to employ dual-purpose reactors or use conventional methods for desalting sea water. A decision on specific projects is expected to come in this phase.

(3) Construction of desalting plants in Israel. "It is hoped that on the basis of these surveys and studies, an economic desalting project of mutual technological interest, producing substantial quantities of water for specialized agricultural and for industrial use will be undertaken in Israel, with active participation of the US."

The communique said the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna would be invited to participate and observe the studies and programme right from the start, and "the knowledge and experience obtained from this programme will be available to all countries with water deficiencies."

Report To Knesset:

Mr. L Eshkol reported to the Knesset on June 23 on his visit to USA.

In the course of his report he declared: "Israel will not waive her independent power to defend herself to deter the enemy and to repulse him."

At the same time, he said, he had every confidence in President Lyndon Johnson's determination to frustrate any aggression against Israel. He appreciated deeply the friendship and understanding he had met during his American visit. "During the 10 days I spent in the United States, we witnessed manifestations of sympathy and esteem, which were directed to the State and people of Israel, and to its work of national resurgence. My talks with President Johnson were marked by candour and mutual truth. Their content was serious and practical. I was profoundly impressed by the sincerity of the President's friendship for Israel and his interest in her welfare, security and prosperity. We follow with sympathy and esteem the efforts of this illustrious man to meet the great responsibilities that rest upon him.

"I have every confidence in the words of the joint declaration, which reflect the attitude of President Johnson; it speaks of firm determination to make every effort to increase the broad area of understanding which already exists between the two States, of devotion to peace, of the support of the United States for the territorial integrity and the political independence of all countries in the Near East, and the firm opposition of the United States to the use of force or the threat of force against any country. The President and his aides took pains to convince us that the will to prevent or frustrate any aggression against us is not merely the expression of a wish, but a firm political decision with all that this involves.

"In my talks with the President I explained the spiritual and historical reasons for the resurgence of Israel and its land, and against this background I explained our specific security problems in the light of our geographical situation and the constant threats directed against the last hope of the Jewish people...

"At the same time, we have never given up our claim on the nations for economic and other assistance and help in the creation of the political framework for our work, or exempted them from their responsibility for keeping the peace. We profoundly appreciate the concern of a Power like the United States for our security, and just as we shall not cease to maintain our defensive readiness—for there is no substitute for our own independent strength—so we shall demand the fulfilment of promises and obligations by those who gave them.

"I, therefore, asked for active support for our efforts to remain capable of bearing the responsibility for our nation's survival and destiny; I demanded the correction of any military imbalance that may arise in the area, so that we may be able to deter and to defend ourselves with all necessary speed...

"Our enemies have no problem of armaments. They receive generous supplies for next to nothing, as has been confirmed afresh during the Soviet Prime Minister's visit to Egypt."

Stand On Settlement With Arabs:

A Paris despatch on July 3 said Mr. L. Eshkol had shut the door on any settlement of the Arab-Israeli dispute on the basis of taking back Arab refugees.

He told Le Monde on July 2: "It would be rendering as bad a service to the Arabs as to the Israelis to propose such a step."

He said that he was also uncertain of the practicability of upholding multi-national States.

His entire thesis rests on the interpretation bitterly contradicted by non-Israeli Jews, that Jews constitute a nation or people rather than a religion. He would seem to think that multi-national States should be broken down into constituent elements.

"We are living in an epoch where multi-national States can only survive with difficulty. Take the example of Cyprus in the grip of a drama of inter-ethnic incompatibility."

His excuse for keeping Arabs out of their original homeland is that they, in the first instance, went out of their own accord in the hope of returning in triumph after an Arab victory and, furthermore, accepting Arabs back will not resolve the basic Arab-Israeli differences. To prove this, he pointed to President Nasser's threat that war between the two States was inevitable.

He said that there was no question of "morality being involved" in keeping Arab refugees out because in his opinion, Arabs would have showed no mercy to Jews if the former had won the 1948 war.

YEMEN

A. UN Assistance: A London report on June 5 said that the first financial and technical aid extended by the UN Special Fund to Yemen had been announced.

The Fund is to grant $5 million for the implementation of five projects and the first instalment of $1 million is to be paid after final routine approval has been obtained.

The five projects are: the creation of model farms and the training of Yemeni farmers in modern methods of agriculture; the introduction of agricultural machinery and the establishment of repair centres; the modernization of irrigation canals to bring more land under cultivation; the initiation of an overall geological study of the eastern region of Yemen, near the Empty Quarter, as a basis for prospecting contracts with oil companies; and a study of underground waters, including the digging of model wells and the installation of pumps. The Food and Agriculture Organization will also participate in the projects.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. US Civil Rights Bill Passed: President Lyndon B. Johnson of USA signed into law on July 2 the far-reaching and controversial Civil Rights Bill.

Instead of waiting until the US Independence Day—July 4—as expected, Mr. Johnson decided to place the Bill on the Statute Book within hours of its approval by the House of Representatives in the same form as passed earlier by the Senate.

A ceremony was arranged at the White House to mark the historic occasion and it was televised throughout the country. Distinguished Americans, including prominent leaders of the current Negro campaign for desegregation, were among the invitees.

Before signing the Bill, Mr. Johnson made it clear that the enactment did not mean the end of his endeavours. He made a number of announcements to see that the new Act was implemented with maximum speed and minimum friction.

Among the new measues was the appointment of a National Community Relations Service to smooth the path of enforcement. He also gave notice of his intention to seek additional funds from Congress to pay for the cost of enforcing the law in case it was not accepted voluntarily.

He made it known that he had summoned a Cabinet meeting to direct all Government agencies to see that the new law was faithfully implemented.

He recalled that it was his predecessor, the late President Kennedy, who had first proposed the Bill just over a year ago. But most observers agree that while it required Mr. Kennedy's vision to envisage the need for the Bill, it required Mr. Johnson's mastery of Congressional procedures to ensure its passage.

The new Civil Rights Act gives Federally-enforceable legal protection to Negroes claiming equal rights in the fields of voting, education, public accommodation, employment, public facilities and wherever Federal funds are utilized.

Before the House finally passed the Bill by 289 votes to 126, it received an encouraging indication that the Southerners were revising their attitude.

A young Representative from Georgia received an ovation when he rose to announce that he had decided to support the Bill. He said: "I will add my voice to those who seek a reasoned and conciliatory adjustment to a new reality."

A Washington message said enactment of the Bill does not mean, however, that racial conflict, in USA is at an end. In fact, it will probably increase in the coming months as Negroes strive to taste their newly-won rights and many whites do to resist them.

Civil rights is also likely to be drawn into the coming election campaign with many candidates for the numerous Federal, State and local offices trying to take advantage of racial passions.

The following are the major provisions of the Bill:

Public accommodations—bans discrimination in establishments offering food, lodging, gasoline or entertainment to the public.

Equal employment opportunity—prohibits discrimination by employers or unions in hiring, punishing, promotions, apprenticeship, training.

Federal programme—authorizing Federal agencies to withhold funds from any programme in which discrimination is found.

Public schools and facilities—authorizes the US Attorney-General to file suit to compel desegregation of public schools, parks, playgrounds, libraries and swimming pools.

Voting—tightens procedures in earlier civil rights laws aimed at preventing discriminatory denial of Negro voting rights in Federal elections.

Community relations service—establishes new agency to help local communities settle racial disputes on a voluntary basis.

Civil Rights Commission—extends its life until 1968 and gives it new powers to collect and disseminate information on a national basis.

Effective data—all provisions of the Bill became operative immediately except for the equal employment opportunity section, which goes into effect in one year.

B. World Grain Crop Prospects: Prospects for the 1963-65 total grain crop are that it will be better than last reason's record, according to a report by the Food and Agriculture Organization's Group on Grains, released on June 12.

A moderate decline in the coarse grains crop will be more than offset by increased wheat production. Prospects are "favourable" in all the regions of the world.

The report stated, however, that world trade in grains may be smaller this season than last, when record imports by USSR and by China brought trade levels to an "exceptionally high" level. At the same time, large purchases are expected by the major producing countries from the developing countries and perhaps also from mainland China. The possibility of some purchases by USSR is also not excluded.

The current world grain situation is characterized by a major increase in the volume of international trade in 1963-64. International prices of both wheat and coarse grains had risen in the second half of 1963, but they have weakened again in recent months.

Production of wheat outside the eastern trading area reached a new record level in 1963-64, estimated provisionally at 152 million tons; larger crops in North America and in the Southern Hemisphere more than offset substantial declines in Western Europe and parts of Asia.

Total production in USSR in 1963 was unofficially estimated at 55 million tons—about 16 million tons less than the previous year and the smallest since the mid-fifties. There was little change in the East European total, and the wheat harvest in mainland China was thought to have been slightly better than in recent years.

World production of course grains (outside the eastern trading area) increased more than that of wheat, mainly because of the expansion of production of maize and barley. World production of maize rose from 157 million tons in 1962-63 to 170 million tons in 1963-64, with an increase in almost all major producing countries.

"The remarkable increase in world grains trade in 1963-64 reflects mainly the substantial purchases of wheat by USSR and larger imports into both Western Europe and Japan". The Soviet Union in the past had exported about five million tons of wheat a year. This year it imported more than 10 million tons. "Imports into USSR are, by far, the largest made by any country in a single year."

In addition, the increased requirements of Western Europe (except Yugoslavia) and Japan, the rising volume of trade on special terms with the developed countries, and the continuation of purchases by mainland China also added considerably to the wheat trade.

Trade in coarse grains also reached high. levels. The increase in shipments of maize, barley and sorghum was expected to be particularly important in USA South Africa, Thailand and France. This situation was due to the rising long-term demand for animal products and imports of coarse grains by West European countries, which were likely to rise again in spite of considerably larger crops. The outlook for coarse grains was still better, and "for the 1963-64 July-June trade season, all major exporters expect to ship more than in the previous year."

E. Pope Paul On New Study Of Birth Control Problems: Addressing a group of 26 Cardinals of the Vatican Curia on June 23, Pope Paul VI gave a clear hint that the Roman Catholic Church might soon reverse its policy on the question of birth control.

He announced that a study was being made of new developments and it was hoped that a conclusion would be reached soon and made known in the appropriate form.

In the meantime, he said, the rules laid down by Pope Pius XII (which condemned the contraceptive use of birth control pills) were still binding and it was recommended "that no one, for the present, takes it on himself to make pronouncements in terms different from the prevailing norm".

The following is the text of the passage of Pope Paul's speech dealing with birth control:

"A problem, which everyone talks about, is that of birth control, as it is called, namely, of population increases on the one hand, and family morality on the other. It is an extremely grave problem.

"It touches on the mainsprings of human life. It touches on the feelings and interests closest to the experience of man and woman. It is an extremely complex and delicate problem.

"The Church recognizes the multiple aspects of it, that is to say, the multiple rights, in the forefront of which are certainly those of married people, their freedom, their conscience, their love, their duty.

"But the Church must also affirm her own rights, namely, that of God's law, interpreted, taught, favoured, and defended by her.

"And the Church will have to proclaim this law of God in the light of the scientific, social, and psychological truths which in these times have undergone new and very ample study and documentation.

"It is necessary to face attentively this development, both theoretical and practical, of the question. And this is in fact what the Church is doing. The question is being subjected to study, as wide and profound as possible, as grave and nonest as it must be on a subject of such importance.

"It is under study which, we may say, we hope will soon be concluded with the co-operation of many and outstanding experts. We will therefore soon give the conclusions of it in the form which will be considered most adapted to the subject and to the aim to be achieved.

"But meanwhile, we say frankly that up to now we do not have sufficient motive to consider out of date and therefore not binding the norms given by Pope Pius XII in this regard. Therefore they must be considered valid, at least until we feel obliged in conscience to change them.

"In a matter of such gravity, it seems well that Catholics should wish to follow one law, that which the Church authoritatively puts forward. And it therefore seems opportune to recommend that no one, for the present, takes it on himself to make pronouncements on terms different from the prevailing norm."

F. Earth Surrounded By Cosmic Dust—Soviet Scientists' View: Soviet scientists have claimed that the Earth is surrounded by a cloud of cosmic dust.

Speaking at the 11th Meteorite Conference sponsored by the Meteorite Committee under the Soviet Academy of Sciences, which opened in Moscow on May 26, Academician Vasily Fesenkov reported that according to observations the cloud fluctuates constantly.

This information was obtained through the study of the near-Earth zones of space by various methods, including rockets.

It was held by scientists, however, that it was difficult to keep track of the fluctuations of the cosmic cloud with the help of rockets as they could supply information from only one spot at a time. They believed that this cloud was formed chiefly as a result of the burning of meteorites when they enter into the Earth's atmosphere.

Prof. Boris Levin, who spoke at the Conference, said that the new facts established by studying meteorites gave ground for rejecting the idea of the similarity of the origin of the meteorite and terrestrial matter. He advanced his own hypothesis of the origin of iron meteorites.

He believed that the main role in their formation was played not by fusion but by diffusion—the process of the penetration of one substance into another in the solid state. He believed that the initial separation of metal and silicate could take place in cosmic conditions and result in the formation of small iron particles. Then at the expense of the energy operating on the surface of space objects these small particles could grow and gradually form a big iron body. As a result of the disintegration of the "parent object" from which the meteorite was formed, these iron bodies are separated from the surrounding stony matter.

This explanation logically accords with the monocrystalline structure of iron meteorites.

G. Radio Location Of Venus—New Series Of Experiments: It was stated in Moscow on July 3 that Soviet scientists, using the complex of facilities of the long-distance cosmic communication centre, had begun another series of experiments on the radio location of Venus.

The scientists were interested in finding out how the decisive check-up of reliability, precision and functioning of the new electronic equipment for location of the planet would work out.

The first radio location of Venus in 1960 produced for the first time a cosmic "echo" of this mysterious planet. The radio waves started from the Earth 463 times over and, bouncing off the surface of Venus, brought back information about its rotation, orbit, structure and surface particulars.

About 19 months later, when Venus and the Earth again approached closest to each other (about 40 million kilometres), the second stage of the experiments was held at the distant space communication centre. In November, 1962 the Soviet scientists sent to Venus the first radiograms: "Lenin", "USSR", "Peace". The rebounced radio waves showed that the surface of Venus was similar to that of the Moon. "Astronomical unit"—the main scale of the solar system—was further specified.

The sound of sirens, which disturbed the quietness of the steppe, heralded the third stage of the radio location of Venus. The siren indicated that a powerful radio-transmitter was switched on 10 kilometres from the distant space communication centre. (It is dangerous to be near the transmitting antenna at this moment; the thin beam of radio waves, which is focussed by aluminium reflectors, emits tremendous energy.)

It took about five minutes for the radio-wave to cover twice the distance now separating the Earth from Venus—88 million kilometres. Then the transmission was stopped and the reception started. The pens of the recorders quivered and the recorder discs began moving—the Earth was listening to the echo from Venus.

Sensitive aerials, huge structures made of steel, concrete and aluminium, track Venus with the precision of up to thousandths of a degree, a precision which exceeds that of any chronometer.

After receiving the data, the magnetic tape was taken to another building which houses special electronic analyzing machines designed for the preliminary processing of the radio echo. The scientists were satisfied; the equipment functioned splendidly.

A thorough analysis of the data, specialists believe, will make it possible to single out important structures of the Venus relief in the future. Systematic sounding of Mars, Mercury and Jupiter will be effected before long.

ASIAN RECORDER

August 12—18, 1964

Regd. No. D-727
Vol. X No. 33

ADEN

A. New Sultan Of Fadhli: An Aden message on July 11 said that Nasser Bin Abdullah (39), elder brother of Sultan Ahmed bin Abdullah, had been elected Sultan of Fadhli State.

Nasser Bin Abdullah's election followed the deposition of Ahmed bin Abdullah by the Supreme Council of the South Arabian Federation on July 9.

In Cairo, Ahmed Abdullah issued a statement saying that there was no provision in the Federal Constitution to prevent a Head of State from withdrawing from the Federation.

Sultan Ahmed Bin Abdullah Barred From Federation:

A decree barring Sultan Ahmed bin Abdullah from entering the South Arabian Federation was issued on July 9 at Al Ittihad, seat of the Federal Government.

A joint British High Commission and Federal Supreme Council statement said that after a meeting of the Federal Supreme Council the decree was issued under the Supreme Council's emergency powers. The decree stated that the Sultan had "unconstitutionally and falsely announced the secession of Fadhli State from the Federation and has been guilty of other conduct intended to affect the security and progress of the Federation".

It added: "So long as this decree remains in force Sultan Ahmed bin Abdullah al Fadhli shall be prohibited from entering the Federation of South Arabia and is hereby required to remain out of the Federation. Any contravention of or failure to comply with the provisions of this decree will be deemed an offence under the Public Emergency Decree of 1963. In addition Sir Kennedy Trevaskis, British High Commissioner for Aden and the South Arabian Protectorates has decreed the exclusion of the Sultan from Aden State under the legal powers invested in him as High Commissioner."

Sultan Ahmed announced his State's secession from the Federation the weekend when he was visiting Rome on his way to Cairo. He denounced the London Conference on the Federation's progress, which was still in session.

Tribal Chiefs' Threat:

The tribal chiefs in the "occupied south" declared before the UN Fact-finding Sub-Committee in Cairo on July 8 that if Britain did not respond to the demands of the people of the "occupied south" for independence, they would launch a fierce war against British military forces and civilians in the area.

Sheikh Mohammed Saleh El Musly, chief of the tribes of Upper Yafeh numbering about 300,000 people—asked the Committee for immediate UN intervention to stop "the war of genocide and starvation waged by the British" against the tribes of Radfan.

He called for an end to Britain's atrocities in the area. He said British forces had killed pregnant women in Radfan as well as children and unarmed shepherds.

Mr. Abdullah el Asnag, leader of the People's Socialist Party in Aden, said Britain had declared a war of genocide against the people of Aden and the "occupied south." "The British are killing women and children and destroying houses and have prevented representatives of the International Red Cross from entering the area."

He added that the British authorities were placing obstacles in the way of the Labour Party in Aden and were adopting a Gestapo system among the workers. The British authorities were also interfering in the affairs of the judiciary. "The London Conference was a farce and Britain resorts to such shame conferences when she is in a spot".

UN Sub-Committee's Statement On Aden:

The five-nation UN Sub-Committee on Aden (Cambodia, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Venezuela and Yugoslavia) completed its hearings in Cairo on July 10 and issued the following statement:

"The Sub-Committee on Aden, set up by the resolution of the Special Committee on Colonialism on April 9, 1964 went to Cairo on July 4, 1964.

"In view of the continuation of the State of Emergency and hostilities in the territory and the meeting of the London Conference, the Sub-Committee considered that it should visit the territory without delay. Following the refusal of the Government of the United Kingdom to permit this visit, the Sub-Committee considered it necessary to go to Cairo for the accomplishment of its task.

"The Sub-Committee held eight hearings of petitioners, from Monday, July 6 to Friday, July 10, 1964. It heard many people who were kind enough to appear before it, in particular the Sultan of the Fadhli State, the deposed Sultan of Lahej State, three members of the Aden Legislative Council belonging to the Independents' Group, leaders of political parties and organizations, representatives of tribes, women's associations, students, youth and agriculturists.

"The Sub-Committee also received numerous documents including memoranda from the different groups, stating their position with regard to the constitutional projects envisaged in the London Conference.

"It was also informed of the decisions taken by the People's Congress held in Cairo on July 5, 1964, in which national organizations, political parties and personalities of the Territory took part.

"The Sub-Committee had informed the representative of the United Kingdom at the United Nations of its wish to have discussions with the administering Power, in accordance with its mandate; it had indicated that it would be prepared to go to London if necessary. This request had been made on June 2 and was renewed in another letter on June 24, 1964. No reply has so far arrived.

"Pending the drafting of the report which it will submit to the Special Committee on Colonialism when it resumes work in September next, it considers that it should state its preliminary findings in the attached document.

"The Sub-Committee thanks the Government of the United Arab Republic for its hospitality and for the arrangements which it has made to facilitate the accomplishment of its task. It also thanks the Director and staff of the United Nations Information Centre for their full and complete collaboration."

The Document:

The document attached to the Sub-Committee's statement said:

"The Sub-Committee once again expresses its regret at not being able to go into the Territory. The United Kingdom, in refusing this admission, has not conformed with the resolution adopted by the Committee on Colonialism on April 9, 1964, and has not followed the recommendations of the resolution 1956 (XVIII) which renews the appeal for the complete co-operation of the administering Power as regard the tasks of the sub-committees on visiting groups.

"In going to Cairo, the Sub-Committee has been able to meet a great number of political personalities and representatives of national organizations of the territory, such as Sultans, representatives of tribes, members of the Aden Legislative Council, leaders of parties and representatives of various associations.

"The Sub-Committee, recalling its declaration of June 5, 1964 recommending the postponement of the Constitutional Conference or that representatives of all the political parties and organizations of the Territory should take part in its deliberations, expresses its regret at the fact that the Government of the United Kingdom convened the Conference in circumstances and conditions raising serious doubts on its validity and the compatibility of its conclusions and recommendations with the authentic aspirations of the people of the Territory.

"All the petitioners who appeared before the Sub-Committee contested the validity of the London Conference and showed their opposition to the conclusions of this Conference.

"The Sub-Committee has taken note of the declaration made by the Sultan of Fadhli with regard to the withdrawal of its State from the South Arabian Federation and to his refusal to accept the conclusions of the London Conference on the future of the Territory. The Sub-Committee has learned with regret the decision of the local authorities to prohibit the return of the Sultan to the Territory because of his attitude.

"The Sub-Committee has also taken note of the joint declaration of the national organizations of the Territory at the people's Congress in Cairo on July 5, 1964, in which they reject the conclusions of the London Conference, express their total support for the resolutions of the United Nations and for their fundamental principles, unanimously ask for the abolition of the Aden military base and the withdrawal of the British troops.

"The Sub-Committee has noted that, in their declarations, the petitioners support the arrangements mentioned in the resolution 1949 (XVIII) of the General Assembly dated December 11, 1963.

"The information on the maintenance of the State of Emergency and on the continuation of the military operations in the Radfan and Dathina areas causes anxiety to the Sub-Committee. Such a situation is contrary to the terms of the Declaration on the granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples and to those of the resolutions of the General Assembly and the Special Committee, and constitute a danger to peace and security in the area.

"The Sub-Committee supports the appeals made by several petitioners that international aid organizations, such as the International Red Cross or others, should be able to aid the civilian population which is a victim of the military operations.

"The Sub-Committee, according to its mandate, will continue to examine the situation in the Territory."

BURMA

A. Indian Repatriates: Several hundred Indian families returned to their Motherland from Burma in July.

These families had long since been settled in the country as small traders, cultivators or office employees. They had lost their means of livelihood as a result of the Government's measures towards Burmanization and State management of trade and commerce. Even for returning to India they experienced considerable hardship. Many did not have funds and had to leave their belongings behind.

The Government of India arranged ships for their repatriation. The number of reluctant repatriates was expected to reach 100,000.

The Indian Government made efforts to ameliorate the harshness of the regulations which the Burma Government at first applied to those who, finding their livelihood gone, decided to return to India.

The Burmese now allow those leaving to take out about Rs. 75 for each adult and Rs. 15 for each child, and also allow each family to take out up to about Rs. 250 of gold. Otherwise the repatriates have had to leave all their assets in Burma, and they reach India for the most part not far short of destitute.

In the main the repatriates have their family connexions, if any, in places in Orissa, Andhra Pradesh, or Madras, on the eastern seaboard, and they have been returning there to try to pick up the threads of a new life. The State Governments are helping with loans and, when possible, with jobs.

B. Burmese As Medium Of Instruction: The Education Ministry has made Burmese the sole medium of instruction in schools and colleges.

Indian and Chinese students, who form a sizable number, face the problem of their future education and are leaving Burma in increasing numbers. While Indian students are going to India, Chinese students are going to Kunming and other parts of Yunnan to continue their studies.

The services of Indian professors in colleges are being terminated.

C. Thakin Kodaw Hmaing Dead: Thakin Kodaw Hmaing, one of the most influential figures in the early days of political awareness in Burma and her subsequent progress towards Independence, died in Rangoon on July 23. He was 89.

The son of a carter, he was born in a village near Prome, and received a traditional Burmese Buddhist monastery education both in his village and the royal capital, Mandalay, where he witnessed the deposition by the British of the last of the Kings of Burma. In 1894 he moved to Rangoon to work in a printing press, and began his career as a playwright. More than 80 plays are known to have come from his pen.

In 1934 he lent his influence to the newly founded Dobama ("We Burmans") Association, of which he became President in 1936. He was able to advise the young men who were later to become the leaders of Burma, among them General Aung San, who negotiated Burmese independence, and U Nu, who was for many years Prime Minister. During the Japanese occupation, he worked with the Thakins, holding a Ministerial post in the Government for a while.

He was awarded the title of Alingakyawzwa for his services to Burmese literature. He became a member of the Burmese committee of the World Peace Congress and received the Stalin Peace Prize in 1954.

CAMBODIA

A. Charge Against Viet-Nam (RVN): The Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, told the opening session of Parliament in Pnom Penh on July 27 that Cambodia should give up hope of recognition of its frontiers by the Governments of South Viet-Nam, Thailand and Laos.

He denounced Britain's refusal to support the calling of an international conference to guarantee Cambodia's neutrality and territorial integrity and thanked, however, France, China, the Soviet Union and other "true friends in their firm and constant support."

A Government communique issued on July 28 alleged that South Viet-Namese planes had dropped a poisonous yellow powder in its region.

It stated that 76 persons had so far died from poisoning and many domestic animals had been killed.

It protested strongly against "this aggression by the aerial forces of South Viet-Nam against the civilian population of Cambodia."

It also protested to the UN Security Council, the co-Chairmen of the Geneva Conference—Britain and Russia—and the United States.

The charge was, however, completely denied by South Viet-Namese Government spokesmen.

UN Commission's Report:

Meanwhile, the Commission appointed by the UN Security Council to investigate border incidents between Cambodia and South Viet-Nam (see page 5903) submitted its report in the third week of July.

The Commission consisted of Mr. Sidi Baba of Morocco (Chairman), Mr. Manuel Pio Correa of Brazil and Mr. Moise Aka of Ivory Coast.

According to the Chairman, the Commission visited the frontier zones in Cambodia and had been able to observe visible evidence of the incidents which had motivated Cambodia's complaint against South Viet-Nam. In South Viet-Nam it visited the north, the centre and the Mekong delta region.

The Commission's report, released on July 28, said that the UN Security Council should send an observer group in an effort to prevent incidents on the border.

It said the UN Secretary-General should be entrusted with the implementation of the decision "in consultation with members of the Security Council." The Council should also recommend that Cambodia and South Viet-Nam "adopt whatever measures are necessary" to bring about resumption of diplomatic relations broken off in August, 1963.

It recommended further that the Council name "a person of high international standing", with the agreement of both the countries, to arrange for a preliminary meeting aimed at re-establishing relations and resuming talks on matters of dispute, particularly the delimitation and marking of the common frontier.

Prince Norodom Sihanouk announced on July 27 that he would visit China for a week from October 1 to attend Chinese Independence Day celebrations. He, however, emphasized that during his stay in China "I am not going to sign anything."

CHINA

A. Chinese Aid To Developing Countries—Soviet Criticism: The Soviet Union accused China on July 11 of defaulting on promises of aid to developing countries and said that many Chinese aid projects were "sub-standard."

Izvestia said that Chinese aid to Afro-Asian countries comprised only eight per cent of the foreign aid given by Russia and other Communist States.

It criticised China for making "slanderous" attempts to denigrate Soviet aid projects.

It accused Peking of professing friendship for Indonesia while supporting Malaysia by trade. "Chinese propagandists' bragging about the Chinese People's Republic's aid to young national Governments has no foundation."

In a reply to the recent Chinese criticism of Soviet aid to new nations, Izvestia bitterly assailed Peking's own foreign aid record.

A Chinese delegate to an Asian economic conference in North Korea had recently said that Moscow's foreign aid to new nations was "dictated by its Great Power chauvinism and national egoism."

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Izvestia described the Peking charges that Soviet aid was being used to meddle in the internal affairs of the recipient countries as "defaming, blackening, and slandering the disinterested aid by the Soviet Union..."

The Soviet organ again accused the Chinese of seeking to wield their influence in Asia and Africa against the Soviet bloc. But, the new nations had learned to judge their friends by deeds rather than words.

It said the Soviet Union was helping 1,223 projects, while China's commitments were only for 100 projects.

The Chinese had failed to keep to agreed time-tables, and developing countries complained about the slow way in which projects were completed.

The time-limit for Chinese aid to Nepal had expired in 1963, but none of the three projects planned had been built. In Guinea, only one out of seven projects had been started.

In Cambodia a cement factory which should have been completed in 1956 was still incomplete and China had so far failed to build plants negotiated with Burma and Indonesia in 1961. Many Chinese plants had a low technical standard.

Izvestia said closure of a Chinese factory in Cambodia was being discussed. The biggest of the Chinese aid schemes was a 400-loom textile mill to be built in Burma. But none of the projects was more than medium-sized because China itself had only recently begun industrialization.

Chinese Denunciation:

On July 13, China denounced the Soviet Premier, Mr. Khruschev, as a leader of a "privileged stratum" which was attempting to restore capitalism in Russia.

The denunciation was contained in a newspaper article.

The article was a further comment by the People's Daily and the Red Flag, the Chinese Communist Party newspapers, on the Soviet Communist Party's open letter of July 14, 1963, and appeared on the first anniversary of the letter.

The article said that the broad masses of the Soviet people were "seething with discontent in the face of oppression and exploitation practised by the privileged stratum".

The New China News Agency, which published the article, said it repudiated Mr. Khruschev's argument that the class struggle no longer exists in Russia.

It said Mr. Khruschev was using the signboard of communism "to fool the Soviet people and to cover up his effort to restore capitalism." He had "carried out a series of revisionist policies serving the interests of the bourgeoisie and rapidly swelling the forces of capitalism in the Soviet Union."

"He has widened and not narrowed the gap between incomes of the small minority and those of the workers, peasants and ordinary intellectuals." The new bourgeois elements had gradually risen to a ruling position "and formed a privileged stratum in Soviet society."

B. Relations With Pakistan: The Pakistan Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, in an exclusive interview to the official Chinese Hsinhua News Agency correspondent in London on July 19, listed four reasons for maintaining good relations with China.

These were: (1) China was a close and immediate neighbour of Pakistan. (2) Like Pakistan, China was situated in Asia. (3) Pakistan and China belonged "to the world of Asia and Africa. They subscribe whole-heartedly to Afro-Asian solidarity." (4) Both the countries had known "the disadvantages of foreign domination".

He praised China's reasonableness "during the boundary negotiations".

The Hsinhua despatch broadcast from Peking quoted Mr. Bhutto as refuting the assertion that Sino-Pakistani relations were good because both of them were engaged in disputes with India. This was not so. "The relationship between Pakistan and China is not of a negative character".

Earlier, on July 18, China and Pakistan expressed the "desire to develop further the economic and trade relations between the two countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit," the New China news agency reported.

It was quoting a communique issued at the end of the economic and trade talks in Peking between the Chinese Foreign Trade Minister, Mr. Yen Cai Chuang, and the Pakistan Commerce Minister, Mr. Wahiduzzaman.

The Pakistani Minister headed a delegation on a "goodwill visit" to China from July 10 to 18 at the invitation of the Chinese Government.

After inspecting a guard of honour by men of the Algerian armed forces, he was taken in a procession.

Later in the day, he drove to "Ketchou", the grand mosque of Algeria and offered Friday prayers. A large crowd which had assembled outsied the mosque cheered Dr. Hussain as he arrived.

Algeria's Minister for Religious Affairs, Mr. Tawfik El Madani, who received him, said Algerians were happy to learn that Muslim culture and religion were safe in India.

Algerian newspapers on June 26 announced Dr. Hussain's arrival in bold headlines and carried his photographs on the front page.

In a meeting between Dr. Hussain and President Ahmed Ben Bella in Algiers on June 26, the need for tightening social and economic sanctions against South Africa in view of her persistent policy of racial segregation was emphasized.

Both the leaders underlined the importance of Afro-Asian solidarity and expressed sympathy for the people of Mozambique and Angola struggling against Portuguese imperialism.

President Ben Bella conveyed to Dr. Hussain his country's feelings of "profound and sincerest friendship" for India.

Dr. Hussain told President Ben Bella that he felt honoured and thrilled to be face to face with a leader under whose guidance the people of Algeria had offered the supreme sacrifice for their freedom. He had brought the Algerian President a number of gifts and he said India would be happy to receive President Ben Bella at any time.

The gifts included a carpet, a brass and copper inlaid table, a raw silk suit length and choicest varieties of Indian tea and mangoes.

Dr. Hussain visited the Algerian National Assembly on June 29 as the guest of Mr. Ben Abdallah, President of the Assembly's juridical commission.

President Ben Bella on June 29 accepted an invitation to visit India, but said he could not give any date for the visit. The invitation was extended to him by Dr. Zakir Hussain.

Dr. Hussain called on Mr. Ben Bella to take leave of him at the end of his four-day visit to Algiers. This was the second meeting between the two leaders.

He had separate meetings with the President of the National Assembly of Algeria and members of the Politburo of the ruling National Liberation Front. He exchanged views with them on the working of Parliaments and various development plans of the two countries.

In Oran:

Dr. Zakir Hussain arrived in Oran, (western Algeria) on June 30.

There he visited a natural gas depot and a glass factory.

During his talks with Algerian leaders Dr. Zakir Hussain said he had found identity of views on many international issues. They emphasized the need for fighting racial segregation and expressed sympathies for the people still struggling for their independence.

He said later on the eve of his departure for Rabat—Capital of Morocco—that he had found in the hearts of Algerian leaders and people an echo of feelings of love and goodwill which he had brought for them from the people of India. "I met here kind and considerate friends, warm and cordial."

When newsmen asked Dr. Zakir Hussain for his impressions of Algeria he said: "The impressions are wonderful. They are impressions of a great effort which has succeeded and which has cleared the way for a much greater effort in which we in India are deeply interested."

In Morocco:

Dr. Zakir Hussain arrived in Morocco on July 1.

He was given a colourful welcome in the traditional Arab style when he arrived at Rabat airport on a five-day goodwill visit to the country. Tall Arabs donning red Turkish caps and wearing flowing white costumes offered him dates and milk, as he stepped out of his special plane.

Present at the airport to receive him were Prince Mouley Abdallah, brother of the King, Mr. B. K. Acharya, Indian Ambassador in Rabat, and members of the diplomatic corps.

King Hassan of Morocco decorated Dr. Hussain with the Grand Cordon of the Alaquite Dynasty—the second highest honour of Morocco—at a function held on July 1 at the Royal Palace in Rabat.

Presenting the decoration to Dr. Hussain, the King expressed Morocco's profound and sincere feelings of friendship for India and asked the Vice-President to convey them to his people.

Referring to the talks he earlier had with Dr. Zakir Hussain, he said they had resulted in strengthening the "permanent link" and deepening the feelings of friendship between the two countries.

The decoration was preceded by a dinner given by the King in honour of Dr. Hussain at which the Prime Minister of Morocco and his Cabinet colleagues were present. Moroccan artistes entertained the Vice-President with Indian and Moroccan music in the main hall of the fabulous palace.

On July 2, Dr. Hussain conferred with the Moroccan Foreign Minister, Mr. Ahmed Reda Guedira, on the international situation with special reference to the Maghreb (North African Arab States) and African countries.

They also discussed relations between India and Morocco which are united by a common policy of non-alignment and cultural links.

It was announced in Rabat on July 3 that King Hassan had accepted an invitation to visit India. The invitation was extended by Dr. Hussain. No date was fixed for the King's visit.

During their talks earlier, the King and Dr. Hussain stressed the need for resolving international disputes through peaceful means and felt that common bonds between India and Morocco must be strengthened.

The King evinced keen interest in India's development plans with particular reference to industrial projects.

Dr. Hussain had a series of separate meeting with Mr. Ahmed Balafrej, personal representative of the King, the Prime Minister, Mr. Bahnini, and the Foreign Minister, Mr. Guedira.

Mr. Balafrej gave a lunch in honour of Dr. Hussain. The Indian Ambassador also held a reception for him at his residence.

Dr. Hussain presented to the King a carpet and the Queen a pink brocade piece with a bag. He also brought for the royal couple and other Moroccan leaders choicest varieties of Indian tea and mangoes.

Questions relating to the influences currently at work in Africa were discussed at a meeting that Dr. Hussain had with Mr. Ahmed Balafrej, Mr. Bahnini and other Moroccan leaders. Moroccan leaders emphasized the need for mutual exchange of the experiences of under-developed countries in fighting common problems in the economic field. Both the sides felt that there should be closer commercial and cultural contact between India and Morocco.

The possibility of exchanging Moroccan phosphates with Indian tea and textiles was also examined. Ways and means for exchanging students between the two countries claimed special attention at the meeting.

News Conference:

Addressing a news conference in Rabat on July 4, Dr. Hussain said that his talks with King Hassan had been very interesting. He was impressed by the King's keenness and understanding of problems concerning Africa and the world.

He said that for better understanding between India and African countries it was necessary to establish more contacts beween them. There should be greater exchange of students and artistes.

He said that India's commitment to help those still under colonial domination remained as before.

Giving impressions of his visit to Algeria and Morocco, he said his most vivid impression was that of a people advancing towards a better life and determined to build a better future. Both countries were very friendly towards India.

He also answered a number of questions on India's relations with China and Pakistan and explained India's point of view.

He returned to Rabat on July 4 after a trip of 325 miles through the countryside which took him to the ancient city of Fez. Fez, the old Capital, is a seat of learning and the home of one of the world's oldest universities. Dr. Hussain examined rare manuscripts in Arabic, some dating back to 800 AD. He also visited the tomb of Moulay Idriss, founder of Fez, and offered prayers at the ancient mosque of 200 pillars.

He arrived in Casablanca on July 5 on the last stage of his Moroccan tour.

Speaking at a news conference afterwards, he said he was very happy to visit the Maghreb countries, which were conducting a difficult experiment with a will to build a better future. He expressed satisfaction at the friendly sentiments shown to him during the visit.

In Tunisia:

Dr. Zakir Hussain arrived in Tunis on July 6.

Tunis airport was decorated with Indian and Tunisian flags.

High-ranking members of the Tunisian Government including Mr. Mongi Slim, Foreign Minister and President H. Bourguiba's son were present at the airport to receive Dr. Hussain.

A detachment of the Tunisian Army presented arms as a military band played the two countries' national anthems.

Members of President Bourguiba's ceremonial bodyguard, in white and red silken robes and with white turbans, lined the tarmac with bare sabres in their hands as Dr. Hussain stepped out of the airliner to inspect a guard of honour.

During his talks with Tunisian leaders, Dr. Hussain conveyed India's thanks and sense of gratitude for their support at the time of the Chinese invasion.

He had a 50-minute meeting with Mr. Bahi Ladgham, Minister for Presidential Affairs and National Defence, Mr. Mongi Slim, Foreign Minister, and Mr. Habib Bourguiba Jr., Secretary-General to the President.

The Tunisian leaders told Dr. Hussain that they fully appreciated India's stand on the Sino-Indian border dispute and felt sorry that some countries did not realize the implications of the Chinese invasion and took a different attitude.

On July 7, Dr. Hussain met the Tunisian President, Mr. Habib Bourguiba. The two leaders had talks in private on various problems including India's relations with Pakistan and the problem of Kashmir. Dr. Hussain invited President Bourguiba to visit India in the near future.

The two leaders were understood to have discussed the possibility of increasing economic and cultural co-operation between India and Tunisia, Indo-Pakistan relations, problems of non-aligned States and developing countries, racial discrimination in South Africa and Southern Rhodesia.

During the talks, President Bourguiba paid tribute to the late Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru whom he described as a great champion of freedom. He said he would keep for ever the memory of his visit to India which he had made before he became President.

Dr. Hussain presented gifts to the Tunisian President. These included an ivory chess set, Indian tea and a saree for the President's wife.

Dr. Zakir Hussain travelled to Ben Metir, President Bourguiba's residence about 63 miles from the Capital, after laying a wreath on the tomb of Tunisian martyrs killed in the battle for independence.

Support To India On Border Dispute With China:

Mr. Mongi Slim, Tunisia's Foreign Minister, on July 9 re-iterated his country's unqualified support to India in her border dispute with China.

Mr. Slim, who entertained Dr. Zakir Hussain, to lunch at Hammamet, about 40 miles from Tunis, had a long talk which covered a wide range of subjects.

The two leaders stressed the need for forging closer links between India and Tunisia and mutual exchange of scientists, students and intellectuals was suggested by both the sides.

Earlier, speaking at a reception given to him by the municipality of Sousse, the beautiful port on the eastern coast of Tunisia, Dr. Hussain said that India was fully conscious of the friendship between President Bourguiba and the late Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru, and would do everything possible to strengthen the brotherly links between the two countries. India would continue the foreign policy of Mr. Nehru and stick to non-alignment.

Dr. Hussain arrived in Cairo on July 11 from Tunis after a two-week tour of North African countries and left for home on July 12.

Returns Home:

Dr. Hussain returned to New Delhi on July 13.

In a message to All-India Radio on July 14, he said that he had found in the countries he had visited genuine friendliness for India and touching affection for the late Mr. Nehru.

He said he felt that there was ample scope for extending the field of co-operation with these countries in cultural and commercial spheres.

"I wish our people knew these good people more. They are a very fine lot, they work hard and they have a sense of purpose... They are extremely courteous, generous and loyal and have all the qualities one expects in a friend. They can, and I trust will, make our very good friends. I am happy to carry this assuring experience back home."

He said that he saw in the countries he visited evidence of peoples' dedication to the task of reconstructing a good life. "They are engaged in bringing about land reform, in organizing and extending education, in establishing industry and above all in laying firm foundations for the State which should provide the frame-work for all these activities."

He said that ever since his student days, this region had a great charm for him. It had made great contributions to art, ethics and learning. The well organized movements of liberation in the recent past had brought freedom to all the three countries. "One notices the glow of this newly won freedom in these countries at every turn."

B. Loan Agreement With Britain: India will receive a loan of £10 million (Rs. 13.3 crores) from Britain under an Agreement signed in New Delhi on July 28.

The loan is part of an offer of additional aid amounting to £30 million made by the British Government at the meeting of the Aid-India Consortium held in Washington on May 26.

The whole loan of £30 million is to be committed in 1964-65 as part of the British contribution towards the foreign exchange costs of economic development under India's Third Five-Year Plan.

The loan is not tied to any development project and can be used for current import requirements. Official circles have described this as an especially welcome form of aid.

The Agreement brings the aid which the British Government has so far made available towards India's Third Five-Year Plan to a total of £135 million (Rs. 180 crores).

The Agreement was signed by Mr. Govindan Nair, Additional Secretary in the Ministry of Finance, and Sir Paul Gore-Booth, British High Commissioner in India.

C. Petroleum Agreement With USSR: Tass reported on July 25 that the State-owned Indian Oil Company had signed another long-term Agreement with the Soviet Union to meet India's demand for petroleum products.

Under the Agreement, which will be operative during 1964-66, the Indian Company will import approximately 1,800,000 tons of oil products—about 500,000 tons in 1964, 800,000 tons in 1965 and 400,000 tons in 1966.

The figure for 1966 is lower because the Indian Oil Company expects by that time to obtain a part of the petroleum products it needs from the three oil refineries under construction in India.

Two plants are being built with Soviet assistance—one in Barauni with an annual capacity of 2,000,000 tons, and the other in Koyali with a capacity of some three million tons. The third plant with a capacity of 750,000 tons is being built with Rumanian assistance near Calcutta.

Among the oil products to be imported are paraffin and diesel fuel.

D. Institute Of Russian Studies: India and the Soviet Union have agreed to the setting up of an Institute of Russian Studies in New Delhi for the study of Russian language and literature by Indian students.

The Institute will be set up by July, 1965. The Soviet Union has undertaken to provide Russian professors and books in Russian. It was stated that the Institute will be of great help in giving a short course in Russian language to Indian students proceeding to the Soviet Union for advanced studies in engineering and technology as also for trainees in industrial establishments.

Apart from this, the Institute will provide a three-year degree course in Russian studies.

A board has been set up with five Indians and five Russians for the setting up of the Institute.

F. Measures To Check Food Prices: The Central Food Minister, Mr. C. Subramaniam announced in New Delhi on July 27 a series of measures finalized at a meeting of the Prices Sub-committee of the Cabinet to meet the food crisis.

He quoted figures of internal production and imports to emphasize that three to four million tonnes more of food was available than last year. But because of the rising prices, producers and traders were holding on to their stocks.

Mr. Subramaniam, who made the announcements at a news conference, said the maximum prices of grain would be fixed in the Southern Zone by August 1. The question of fixing such prices in other zones was being considered and he hoped to take a decision soon.

Notifications would be issued under the Defence of India Rules to make producers, dealers and consumers declare their stocks in excess of particular quantities, as had been done in Maharashtra and Andhra Pradesh.

A Foodgrains Trading Corporation, wholly owned by the Centre and registered under the Company Law, would start operations on January 1, 1965. It would function in competition with private traders, but whenever the Government felt it necessary the Corporation would be authorized to take over wholesalers' stocks at declared wholesale prices. It would deal in rice and wheat.

The Corporation, which would be entitled to utilize co-operatives and private traders for its buying operations, would have a monopoly of movement of grain by train. This, he added, would mean that the private trade would have to depend on road transport and as such movement over long distances under private auspices would become difficult.

About prices, two committees were being appointed. One of these, to be headed by Mr. L. K. Jha, the Prime Minister's Secretary, would be required to work out grain prices for producers, wholesalers and retailers for the coming season beginning in September.

The other committee would study the price problem for the long term. It would have to make a detailed scientific and technical study of the factors that went into the producers' prices and recommend producers' and consumers' prices to be enforced from the 1964-65 season.

A third committee was proposed to be appointed to review the production, price and distribution of sugar for the coming season and suggest a pattern of price and distribution. It would also look into the licensing policy.

Admitting that the controls enforced in October, 1963 on the movement of gur and khandsari had not worked well, Mr. Subramaniam announced the immediate withdrawal of the restrictions on gur. He said some legal complications stood in the way of taking a similar step immediately in regard to khandsari.

In future indiscriminate sale through fair price shops of rice and wheat from Government stocks would be stopped and distribution arranged on the basis of household identity cards.

He did not think it wise to abolish the food zones in the middle of a season, but promised to review the position for the next season.

Reviewing the food position State by State, he said that Punjab, along with Delhi, Jammu and Kashmir and Himachal Pradesh, was in the unique position of going through a period of "low prices for producers".

The situation in Maharashtra and Kerala was critical, but the steps taken so far had helped them to meet their difficulties, although the position could not be said to be very satisfactory.

He called UP the "sick child" and said that more wagons had been allotted to carry wheat to that State; the more important towns were being supplied from Central stocks.

In the eastern region, the position in Assam and Orissa was satisfactory. He was not under much pressure from Bihar, but despatches of food for that State had been stepped up.

He complimented West Bengal for "the heroic manner" in which it was trying to enforce the maximum food prices. The State had done fairly well so far and if it could get over the coming difficult period it would have set a good example for other States in enforcing a price pattern.

J. Release Of 23 Communist Detenus—Supreme Court Order: The Supreme Court ordered on July 23 the immediate release of 23 Communist workers detained under the Defence of India Act by the Tripura Administration.

The workers were detained for their alleged activities among tribals, which were considered dangerous for the security of the State.

The workers had contended that a review order had not been passed as required by Rule 30-A (8) of the Act.

It had also been contended that the relevant rule required that the decision to continue the detention of a detenu must be reduced to writing and communicated to the detenu. It was submitted that since these two conditions had not been complied with, the continuance of detention was invalid in law.

The Chief Justice, Mr. P. B. Gajendragadkar, who delivered the judgment, said that the requirement of the relevant rule asking the appropriate authority to record its decision clearly and unambiguously had not been complied with.

The Chief Justice said that the order continuing the detention of these persons issued on July 2, 1963 would also be of no avail because it could not be reasonably construed as containing a decision of the appropriate authority under Rule 30-A (8) of the Act. The conclusion necessarily meant that the requirement of the relevant rule had not been complied with and that inevitably made the continuance of detention invalid.

The Prime Minister, Lt.-General Taher Yahya in a policy statement said that together with his colleagues, he would continue his endeavours for the realization of the noble aims of the Revolution.

These aims could be outlined in securing the stability of the country and having security prevailed for citizens under the banner of the sovereignty of the law, justice for all, adhering to the unity of national rank, enabling all loyal citizens in this good country to work for the prosperity, progress and development of the country in the various political, economic and social fields.

He said that with his brother Ministers he would do all that was possible for the prosperity of the people. Besides, on the Arab level, he would endeavour for the implementation of the Agreement with UAR and the resolutions of the "Summit" Conference. He would, as well, endeavour for supporting Arab struggle for the liberation of the occupied part of Palestine, the Yemenite South and Oman within a unified policy with Arab League and would go on with the implementation of the Ministerial Programme.

He added that his foreign policy was based on positive neutralism, non-alignment, peaceful co-existence and adherence to the principles of United Nations and the resolutions of Bandung Conference; all these would be within an Arab frame-work.

B. Trade Co-ordination With UAR: A Cairo message on June 20 said that a joint UAR-Iraq economic committee had recommended the lifting of quota restrictions and avoidance of competition between the two countries.

In a statement issued after nine days' talks aimed at economic co-ordination, the committee said that UAR and Iraq should also revise trade and economic relations with other countries in the light of their attitudes to the "Arab struggle against Zionist expansion". There should be co-ordination of policies towards world economic groupings.

It recommended use of the land-sea route between Baghdad, Amman, Aqaba, Suez and Cairo as a means of communications between Iraq and UAR, "in spite of the establishment of Israel by imperialists to divide the Arab countries".

JAPAN

A. Move For Revision Of Constitution: An advisory body to the Cabinet on July 3 submitted to the Prime Minister, Mr. Hayato Ikeda, a report urging the revision of the Constitution, including the Article renouncing all war potential.

The advisory body—the Constitution Research Council—consisted of 19 members of the ruling Liberal Democratic Party and 19 experts. The Opposition Socialist Party boycotted the Council.

The report urged that the Emperor should be retained as a "symbol of the State," but said he should be defined as "Head of State" in foreign relations.

The majority of the Council urged clarification of Japan's right to possess military forces for self-defence and to co-operate with UN and other world bodies to maintain world peace.

The Liberal Democratic Party said that the report proved the present Constitution had been compiled under abnormal circumstances and strong occupation leadership.

The same day (July 4) over 2,000 people marched through central Tokyo in Left-wing demonstrations protesting against proposals to amend Japan's "no war" Constitution.

The police arrested nine people, including several students who staged "snake dances" and sit-down demonstrations.

B. Mr. H. Ikeda Elected President Of Liberal Democratic Party: In the election to Liberal Democratic Party (ruling party) presidentship held on July 10, the Prime Minister, Mr. Hayato Ikeda, won by a narrow margin.

The victory assured him of continuing as Prime Minister for another two years.

He was the first Liberal Democratic Premier to win a third party term. His majority in the closest and most uncertain party fight since the War was only four more than the required 238 simple majority of the 475 valid votes cast.

His chief rival, Mr. Eisaku Sato, obtained 160, Mr. Aiichiro Fujiyama (72), and one vote went to Mr. Nadao, the Education Minister, a "write in". However, Mr. Sato and Mr. Fujiyama had a coalition in case of a second ballot, so Mr. Sato came within sight of victory.

In the event Mr. Sato was disappointed in his hopes of breaking the traditional hold of the party factions, five of whom supported Mr. Ikeda, though the figures show that he had made serious inroads.

New Cabinet:

On July 17, Mr. Ikeda named a new Cabinet retaining only three of the Ministers who had served in his Government during the last year.

The re-shuffle had little effect on the basic policies of the conservative Government.

Neither Mr. Fujiyama nor Mr. Sato, who challenged Mr. Ikeda to a showdown in the party presidential race, received a post, but their followers were represented in the new Government. The job of Finance Minister was retained by Mr. Kakuei Tanaka, a member of the Sato faction, after it was reported to have been turned down by Mr. Shigesaburo Maeo, an Ikeda backer and former party secretary-general.

Mr. Masayoshi Ohira, Foreign Minister since 1962, was replaced by Mr. Etsusaburo Shiina (66), a businessman and politician who has had no previous background in foreign affairs.

In an appearance on television shortly after his appointment, Mr. Shiina acknowledged that he was not very experienced in foreign affairs. His appointment was interpreted as meaning that Mr. Ikeda would largely determine his own foreign policy, but observers also felt Mr. Shiina would stress the "economic diplomacy" that Mr. Ikeda's Government has been promoting in conjunction with Japan's rapid industrial growth.

The new Cabinet was Mr. Ikeda's fourth since he took office in July, 1960. He was said to have made his own selections without the customary close consultation with competing factions.

However, the shuffle exemplified the sort of "musical chairs" that occurs frequently in Japanese politics, with the party faithful being paid off for their support and incumbents yielding their posts, just about the time they have become familiar with their duties, so that someone else can have a turn. The practice of putting political expediency before job qualification has drawn widespread criticism.

Leaders of the opposition Socialist and Democratic Socialist Parties immediately criticized the new Government and predicted that it would be short-lived.

The new Cabinet consists of:

Premier—Mr. Hayato Ikeda;

Justice Minister—Mr. Hitoshi Takahashi;

Foreign Minister—Mr. Etsusaburo Shiina;

Finance Minister—Mr. Kakuei Tanaka;

Education (also director of the Science and Technological Agency and chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission)—Mr. Kiichi Aichi;

C. Relations With China And Formosa: Two parallel but apparently conflicting events have developed in Japan's relations with China—one concerning Communist China and the other Formosa.

The first involves final agreement between the Government and private trade circles on the entry terms of Peking trade officials for implementation of the Trade Agreement between the two countries.

The second is the visit of Japan's Foreign Minister, Mr. Masayoshi Ohira, to Formosa to "promote friendly relations and dispel misunderstanding" between Japan and Formosa.

While the former event is acclaimed as a notable milestone in promoting trade relations between Japan and Communist China, the latter is described as a "victory" for Formosa, which has long remained bitterly critical of Japan attempting to enter into close relations with Peking not only in the economic held put in other aspects also, short of full recognition.

Observers believe that Mr. Ohira will face Formosa's critical appraisal of Japan's real intention in regard to the China problem.

Reports from Taipeh indicate that Formosa is preparing four conditions as prerequisites for "normalising" relations with Japan, disrupted since 1963 over Japan's sanction of credit for exporting a synthetic fibre plant worth $20 million and the deportation of a would-be defector back to the mainland last Autumn.

The four conditions are: (1) Japan will not provide long-term export credit to Peking; (2) No such trade arrangement as will suggest a virtual recognition of the Peking regime will be concluded: (3) No political relations of any kind will be established between Peking and Tokyo; and (4) No strategic materials will be sold to Peking.

Mr. Ohira recently wrote in International Affairs, published in London: "Japan regards the maintenance of friendly relations with it (Formosa) as a matter of prime importance. For Japan this is the only right and proper position to assume both as a member of the 'free world' and from the standpoint of our own national security."

On the other hand, just before the departure, he agreed to 'generalise and relax" the rigid terms that had earlier been worked out in granting entry permits to five Chinese trade officials from Peking. They are to stay, in Japan, one year at a time, to supervise trade, which is expected to exceed $20 million this year. The figure will be larger than the volume of trade with Formosa.

The entry terms, as generalized, are that the Chinese officials will refrain from participating in political activities. The earlier terms minutely itemized activities such as appearances on television and radio broadcasts. Other terms agreed to include restrictions on travel and residence.

The agreement on trade officials is also interpreted as expediting the exchange of newspaper correspondents, long pending between Tokyo and Peking. The exchange of trade officials and correspondents is considered as a package deal.

Though the Government has moved against granting an export credit for a $30-million synthetic fibre plant, which will have been the second of such projects some time ago, there are moves in the Government in favour of establishing a private monetary institution for providing export credit which is now handled by the Government-operated Export-Import Bank. Also, a high-power economic mission consisting of top economic leaders is expected to visit Peking this Autumn.

Mr. Ohira instructed his Ministry some time ago to study the advisability of holding Ambassadorial contacts with their Chinese counterparts in third country points.

D. Claim To Kuriles—Mr. Mao Tse-tung's Support: Members of a Socialist Party delegation who met Mr. Mao Tse-tung in China on July 10 disclosed two days later that he had supported return to Japan of the Southern Kurile islands of Etorofu and Kunahiri, occupied by the Russians since 1945.

The Chinese leader received the leader of the Japanese delegation, Mr. Kozo Sasaki, and its other members in Peking. The meeting lasted over 2-1|2 hours.

The members of the delegation briefed Japanese correspondents in Hong Kong on July 12 about their meeting with Mr. Mao and accounts of the news conference were carried in Tokyo papers.

According to these accounts, the Japanese Socialists asked Mr. Mao for his views on Japan's territorial claims against the Soviet Union in the north and the Chinese leader was said to have expressed his support in principle to the Japapnese demand. He was reported to have declared that the Soviet Union had taken too much land in the Amur area which borders on Manchuria in Northern China, as well as in Eastern Europe.

Mr. Mao's censure of the Soviet Union of "land grabbing" is tantamount to levelling the charge of imperialism against it. Previously Chinese statements had made implied charges that Russia had taken much territory from China by force.

However, this was the first time that China had expressed support to a capitalist country's territorial claims against the Soviet Union.

Support of Japan's claims to Etorofu and Kunahiri is undoubtedly part of the current Chinese campaign to nullify Soviet attempts to gain Japan's support for its co-existence line and especially to preclude the possibility of Japan backing the Soviet Union as an Asian Power.

The Socialists also quoted the Chinese Premier, Mr. Chou En-lai as saying that Peking was willing to conclude a non-aggression pact with Japan after Japan and China established diplomatic relations—regardless of Japan's Security Treaty ties with the United States.

The Sasaki delegation's visit to China followed a visit by an official Japanese Socialist Party delegation to Moscow, where the Soviet authorities were reported to have refused to discuss the question of the Southern Kuriles.

[The Kurile Islands were given to the Soviet Union under the terms of the 1945 Yalta Agreement between the United States, Britain and the Soviet Union, which brought the latter into the war against Japan.]

KOREA (South)

A. Foreign Exchange Position: By the end of 1964 the country's foreign exchange requirement may face a deficit of about $20 million; this compares with an actual net deficit of $30 million in 1963.

Gross official reserves are expected to fall to about $102 million by the year's end. Payments in foreign exchange are also likely to come down by $34 million to some $213 million. This would be due largely to reduced Government spending.

Imports by the private sector are estimated to increase to $132 million, a rise of $7 million. Exports, if they continue with what looks like a favourable trend, may rise above the $105 million level.

Meanwhile, the economy has had to face a new exchange rate for currency. The South Korean currency won was exchanged at the rate of 130 to a US dollar, but under the devaluation it would now be worth 255 won to the dollar.

USA has been known to favour such a devaluation, and the effect on the economy cannot for the moment be ascertained. But, in what seems to be an attempt to reduce the burden of the Government, USA has promised aid in the form of an additional $10 million, plus 250,000 tons of surplus grain, to "cushion the effects of the new exchange rate."

While the economy cannot be considered as heading for any general improvement, plans to strengthen its domestic structure continue to be made.

MALAYSIA

A. Formation Of Vigilance Corps: Malaysia's National Defence Council decided on June 30 to set up a vigilance corps for Malaya and Borneo to help combat Indonesian saboteurs.

The Prime Minister, Tengku Abdul Rehman told newsmen after a Council session that the "watch-dog service" would be on a voluntary basis similar to the one already set up in Singapore.

He said the Council was briefed on the latest developments involving Indonesian sabotage and guerrilla activities in Malaya and Borneo and "a number of measures will be introduced to deal with subversion."

He said that the Security Committee which had functioned during the anti-communist war in Malaya would be revived and extended to all states to keep the people informed of Indonesian confrontation tactics. There would be special safeguards for Malaysian fishermen who had been robbed of outboard motors, nets and catches by armed and uniformed Indonesians in fast gunboats.

He referred to a proposal by President Macagapal of the Philippines that there should be another meeting of the Foreign Ministers of Malaysia, Indonesia and the Philippines to try to resolve their dispute. He considered that some time should elapse before there was another meeting in view of the failure of the Tokyo talks.

He said on July 3 that Chinese youths from Singapore and other Malaysian states of Johore, Malacca and Perak were receiving military training in Indonesia and were expected to return to the peninsula soon to begin an attack on the security forces on a large scale.

He said that the Malayan Communist Party, which had withdrawn to the Malayan-Thailand border after its defeat in 1960 after a 12-year struggle, was making plans to launch a new campaign of terror.

He said that the communists "were defeated because they failed to get the support of the Malays. Now they have made contact wtih the Indonesian Communist Party. With their co-operaion they expect to get support from the Malays, who are of the same race, and religion (Muslim) as the Indonesians.

He said that while they had been on the border the Malayan Communist Party had instigated Malays in south Thailand to support them and had promised that if they succeeded in overthrowing the Central Malaysian Government, the provinces in south Thailand would be set free from Thai rule.

Situation In Sarawak And Sabah:

On July 6, the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Defence, Tun Abdul Razak, said in the House of Representatives that the situation in Sarawak and Sabah may become more serious "in view of the massive Indonesian build-up along the border and Indonesian declarations of the intention to intensify confrontation."

Malaysia, he said, must be prepared for a protracted war of nerves. The leaders of the 'free world' and others who desired peace and international understanding had the responsibility of assisting in deterring Indonesian aggression because if the present trouble grew many other countries would be involved.

In "this hour of national crisis" he appealed to the House and the country to stand solidly behind the Government to defend Malaysia's independence, integrity and honour.

"Let us show the enemy that we are determined to resist hostility to the bitter end."

The House was told that since December, 1963 89 people had been arrested in Malaya and 60 in Singapore in connexion with Indonesian subversive activities.

B. New Regulation On Admission To Universities: The House of Representatives approved on July 14 on a voice vote an amendment to the Internal Security Act which would regulate the admission of students to universities and other seats of higher education.

The amendment was stated officially to be necessary because of communist infiltration at Nanyang University, in Singapore, which had resulted in the detention of more than 50 students for alleged subversive activities. It applied from August 1.

The amendment empowers chief education officers to withhold certificate of entry to universities and colleges from students known to be security risks. The Government assured the House that the authority would be used with restraint with the widest possible margin of tolerance. The education authorities will issue the certificates after inquiries made by the Special Branch.

Dato Ismail, the Minister of Home Affairs, who introduced the amendment, said that it was in the nature of a preventive measure, designed to prevent dedicated communists from entering the universities and subverting other students. An opposition member said that the passing of the Bill would make the country the laughing stock of the academic world.

A student who is denied a certificate can appeal to the Minister, who has stated that he will give the appellant the benefit of the doubt. He has also promised that the process will not involve delays; if inquiries are not completed in time for the beginning of the academic year the remaining applicants will be granted permits, which can be withdrawn.

Critics, both in the House and among representatives of the unions and professional organizations, contend that the amendment will militate against academic freedom. The reply is that the communists at Nanyang University themselves inhibited this right by coercing non-sympathizers and by dominating the staff.

Malaysia has three universities—Nanyang in Singapore, a division of the University of Malaya in Kuala Lumpur, and a division in Singapore.

University Vice-Chancellor Resigns:

The Executive Committee of the Nanyang University Council has accepted the immediate resignation of the Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Chuang Chu-lin.

Dr. Chuang, who has been criticized by the Singapore Government, tendered his resignation after the arrest of 51 students of the University for alleged communist activities.

Mr. Lau Geok Swee, the Council's vice-chairman, announced that he would resign from all posts in connexion with the University. A week before, he had persuaded about 500 students to end a hunger strike held in protest at the arrests.

C. Politics To Be Kept Out Of Nanyang University: After four years of negotiations, the authorities of Nanyang University in Singapore have agreed with the State Government to divorce the institution from politics.

This is obviously a direct result of the arrest of about 50 undergraduates suspected of communist activities to overthrow the Singapore and Central Governments.

The Singapore Government has agreed to recognize Nanyang University degrees and is hoping to persuade the Central Government to be equally liberal.

Nanyang University's main language will be Chinese and the Singapore Government will have six of the 28 seats on the University Central Council.

MONGOLIA (Outer)

A. Withdrawal Of Chinese Workers: The last Chinese cadre engaged in Mongolia's development under the 1955 Mongolian-Chinese Treaty left Ulan Bator for home on July 9.

The New China News Agency acknowledged that the last Chinese team had left by "arrangement with the Mongolian Government."

It said that thousands of Chinese working in groups had in the past nine years erected buildings in Mongolian towns and in the countryside with a total floor space of 2,700,000 square metres, built more than 190 bridges and laid more than 200 kilometres of roads and 900 kilometres of power lines.

They had advanced Mongolian industry, agriculture, transport etc. and more than 600,000 Mongolian workers had mastered many techniques from them.

In what, according to the Agency, was a touching farewell gesture, the Chinese, on leaving, presented their fellow Mongolian workers with the tools which they had brought from China.

The Agency did not mention why the Chinese workers were required to leave Mongolia.

PAKISTAN

A. President Ayub Khan's Visit To Afghanistan, Iran And Turkey: President Ayub Khan arrived in Kabul, Capital of Afghanistan, on July 1 on his way to London to attend the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference.

According to a Kabul message, he had free and frank discussions on questions of mutual interest with King Zahir Shah. The two leaders along with their aides were closeted together for over 2½ hours in the royal lounge at Kabul airport.

A brief joint Press statement issued at the end of the talks said the two leaders had agreed to explore all possibilities to further improve relationship in a spirit of co-operation and understanding.

The statement said they had exchanged views on questions of mutual interest. The exchange took place in an atmosphere of sincerity and understanding.

According to Radio Pakistan the talks covered a number of international problems and matters affecting this part of the world.

The Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, who was present during the talks, told newsmen that the talks had led to a better understanding between the two countries.

In the course of his four-hour stay in Kabul, President Ayub also exchanged gifts with King Zahir Shah. In addition to a collection of Allama Iqbal's Persian works, Pakistani mangoes, pineapples and bananas were presented to the King.

A plate made of lapiz lazuli was presented to President Ayub Khan by his Royal host. The President's daughter, Mrs. Jamila Ameerzeb, presented a silver brocade and a silver coffee set to Princess Bilqis of Afghanistan.

In Iran:

President Ayub Khan arrived in Tehran (Iran) on July 1 on a two-day visit. He was received at the airport by the Shah of Iran.

Formal talks between the two leaders began on July 2. They were joined by their Foreign Ministers, Mr. Bhutto and Mr. Abbas Aram.

The talks ranged over topics such as Turkish Cypriots, issues concerning the Islamic world, the proposed Second Afro-Asian Conference and the role of CENTO in the Middle East.

Earlier, President Ayub Khan had a two-hour separate meeting with the Prime Minister, of Iran, Mr. Hassan Ali Mansour. Mr. Mansour told Pakistani newsmen later that "no two countries could have better relations than those existing at present.

He said there were no problems in which they differ. They had discussed economic, commercial and political relations between Iran and Pakistan, including the issue of passport and visa and collaboration in the field of oil industry. The CENTO pact and development of even closer relations between Pakistan, Iran and Turkey were also reviewed.

He said: "On Cyprus, Iran shares the feelings of Pakistan that Turkish interests should be saved and that the conflict be solved according to international law.

"I am extremely unhappy to see that our friends, the Turks, have been hurt on the Cyprus issue." He believed that nations everywhere should get their problems solved peacefully and through negotiations."

He made the following other points on international questions:

(1) India-Pakistan relations and Kashmir: The future of Kashmir should be decided according to the will of Kashmir people. "We desire that India and Pakistan settle their differences peacefully.

(2) US aid to India: "I don't think US military aid would be more than what India needs purely for purposes of defence and the US will ensure that this aid is not used for aggressive purposes. Iran condemns any type of aggression from the side of any country."

(3) Afghanistan: "President Ayub's visit to Kabul proves that he has sincere desire to promote good relations with Afghanistan. The Shah has played an important part in bringing Pakistan and Afghanistan closer. Afghanistan is a Muslim country with the same culture and common background with Pakistan and Iran. There are no complicated problems which, given goodwill, could not be solved."

In Turkey:

Replying to an address of welcome on arrival in Ankara (Turkey) on July 3, President Ayub Khan said that the Turkish and Pakistan peoples would "stand by each other through thick and thin."

The people of Pakistan had complete faith and full reliance on the people of Turkey and "I am confident that the Turks will have faith and reliance on the people of Pakistan."

President Ayub Khan disclosed at a news conference in Ankara on July 4 that he had proposed a new "united front between Turkey, Pakistan and Iran" in his talks with Turkish leaders.

He said: "We need each other. If anything happens to Turkey, the effects of this shall be seen in Iran and Pakistan. Let us come together and raise our voice jointly."

In a broadcast to the Turks from Radio Ankara the same night, he again emphasized the need for closer collaboration between the three Muslim countries.

He called for greater co-operation in as many fields as possible to preserve the vital interests of the region. "It was in this way that the three countries could build sound economies and raise their peoples' standard of life."

In his broadcast, he said such ideas were not new and had been talked of before. The time had now come to translate them into concrete terms. He said "if Turkey, Iran and Pakistan were to collaborate in such a manner as would impart strength to their economies and bring about greater understanding, it would establish a new era for our peoples. It would not benefit only our own countries but would also be a massive contribution of peace in the area, and also to the cause of world peace."

At a news conference, he said that only through the united front would it be possible to take these countries under guarantee. "Both your and our important case is to reach stability in the political and economic field."

The following is the text of the joint communique issued at the end of the talks between President Ayub Khan and President C. Gursel:

"President Ayub Khan of Pakistan paid a visit to Turkey from July 3 to 5, 1964, at the invitation of Gen. Cemal Gursel, President of the Republic of Turkey. The President was accompanied by Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, Minister for Foreign Affairs of Pakistan and other members of his party.

"During this visit the two Heads of States conferred together. Also present at the talks were Mr. Ismet Inonu, Prime Minister of Turkey, the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of State, Mr. Kemal Satir, the Foreign Ministers of both countries, Mr. Bhutto and Mr. Feridun Cemal Erkin, as well as their respective advisers. In these talks the world situation in general and the problems of the area in particular were reviewed.

"The two Heads of States expressed grave concern over the worsening situation in Cyprus. They re-affirmed that pending the achievement of an agreed solution to the problem of Cyprus the Constitution and treaties creating the Republic of Cyprus constituted the only valid legal basis for the restoration and maintenance of law and order and normal life in the Island.

"Stressing their belief in the sanctity of international treaties and agreements embodied in the preamble of the UN Charter as a basis for the conduct of international relations, the two Presidents expressed their conviction that the efforts of the United Nations to establish law and order in Cyprus will be in conformity with the existing Cypriot Constitution which continues to enjoy the full force of law. They expressed their firm hope that the persecution of the smaller community which formed part of the Cypriot people and had the equal right to live in peace and harmony would be immediately stopped and their right to life, liberty and property would be effectively protected and ensured by the UN Force in fulfilment of the principles of the UN Charter and the Declaration of Human Rights.

"The two Presidents expressed their regret that the Kashmir dispute which posed a serious threat to the stability of the region still remained unresolved. They agreed that the continuance of the dispute impaired the growth of friendly relations between Pakistan and India. The two Presidents called for an early solution of this dispute in accordance with the Security Council resolutions.

"The President of Pakistan reviewed the problem of the eviction of the Muslim minority from India. Hope was expressed by both Presidents that this human problem would be resolved expeditiously through negotiations between India and Pakistan and that the solution of this question would constitute a positive factor in fostering friendly relations between the two countries.

"The two Presidents welcomed the decision arrived at the Djakarta Conference to convene the Second Afro-Asian Conference which they believe, will render a positive service to the cause of Afro-Asian unity and to world peace.

"The two Heads of States happily noted once again that full harmony existed in their views and they re-affirmed their determination to continue to contribute their share to the maintenance and promotion of world peace and security and to join their efforts to safeguard a just and durable peace in the general area of the Middle East.

"The two Heads of States also noted the progress achieved within CENTO.

"The talks were held in an atmosphere of extreme cordiality and friendliness which have always marked the relations between the brotherly and allied nations of Pakistan and Turkey."

Foreign Ministers Of Pakistan, Turkey And Iran Agree To Meet Thrice A Year:

The Foreign Ministers of Pakistan, Turkey and Iran have decided to meet three times a year to achieve greater collaboration among their countries in the fields of developmental and cultural activities.

A communique, issued in Ankara on July 5 on the conclusion of the two-day talks held between Mr. Z. A. Bhutto of Pakistan, Mr. Feridun Cemal Erkin of Turkey and Mr. Abbas Aram of Iran, said that they would next meet in Tehran from October 22 to 23.

The Foreign Ministers, who reviewed the world situation, with particular emphasis on their region, found complete conformity of views on all issues.

Regarding international co-operation in regional planning, while appreciating the resolution adopted by the Trade and Development Conference of United Nations, they affirmed the necessity of further co-operation between the three countries in economic, technical and cultural fields.

Finding that there exists a field co-operation beyond the frame-work of CENTO, they decided to collaborate in national projects in the sphere of communications, agriculture, mineral resources, education and health through technical co-operation.

They also reached a decision for increased cultural contacts in view of the common heritage they share through the ages.

On Cyprus, they held the view that the Constitution and treaties on which the Republic was founded could be the only logical basis for the restoration and maintenance of law and order.

They also noted with regret the continuance of the Kashmir dispute and called for an early solution of this dispute in accordance with the Security Council resolutions.

They expressed their firm belief that the strict observance of treaties and international agreements is one of the basic principles governing international relations.

A despatch in The Times, London on July 3 said the announcement of the tripartite talks had aroused interest in diplomatic circles in Ankara, as they gave the impression that the three "regional" members of CENTO want to get together without the presence of Britain, or of the United States, which, though not officially a member of CENTO, participates in all its work.

There is unofficial talk in the Turkish Capital of the possibility of some new line-up between the three countries outside CENTO and that an approach is contemplated by the three Powers to Afghanistan, which was visited by President Ayub Khan on his way to Turkey.

It was also significant, in the light of recent anti-Western feeling in Turkey over Cyprus, that Turkey should be taking part in talks with Iran and Pakistan, both of which had in recent years adopted a more flexible policy towards the Soviet Union and China.

President Ayub Khan left Ankara on July 5 for London.

Visit To Ireland:

President Ayub Khan visited Ireland from July 16 to 19.

In a joint communique issued on July 19, the Prime Minister of Ireland, Mr. Sean Lemass, expressed "concern at the continuation of the Kashmir dispute" and hoped for its peaceful settlement through negotiations between India and Pakistan.

The communique said the President had conveyed to Mr. Lemass the "....appreciation of the people and Government of Pakistan for the initiative taken by the Government of Ireland to sponsor in the United Nations Security Council the resolution of June, 1962."

According to the communique, "this resolution, re-affirming the previous resolutions passed by United Nations which called for the settlement of the Kashmir dispute by the application of the principle of self-determination, urged early negotiations between the Governments of Pakistan and India with a view to arriving at a peaceful settlement of the question."

The communique added: "The Prime Minister (of Ireland) expressed concern at the continuation of the Kashmir dispute, particularly in view of the many existing dangers to peace in Asia and elsewhere, and voiced the hope that negotiations between the Governments of Pakistan and India—with each of whom Ireland has the most friendly relations—would lead to a peaceful settlement so that both Governments could co-operate whole-heartedly for the benefit of their two peoples and for the cause of world peace."

President Ayub Khan returned to London on July 19.

B. Barter Agreement With India: Pakistan and India signed in Rawalpindi on July 17 a Barter Agreement under which Pakistan will supply "kangni" and "joshi" rice to India valued at Rs. 3.65 crores. In exchange, India will supply coal, railway equipment and other "specified commodities".

While the rice will be supplied in six months, supplies from India will be spread over one year.

By another Agreement the two countries will exchange fresh fruit worth Rs. 50,00,000 each way during the next 12 months.

Pakistan assured the Indian delegation which signed the Agreement that she would be ready to supply more rice if necessary. A spokesman said that Pakistan was in a position to spare more rice to help India tide over her food shortage.

The Rice Agreement was signed by Mr. Y. T. Shah, Joint Secretary, Ministry of Finance, and leader of the Indian delegation, and Mr. M. Khurshid, Secretary of the Pakistan Food Ministry.

The Agreement for the import of Indian goods was signed by Mr. Shan and the Pakistan Commerce Secretary, Mr. M. Aslam.

Mr. Shah said under the two Agreements India and Pakistan would exchange goods worth Rs. 8.50 crores. "It is a worthwhile figure".

A joint communique issued at the end of the negotiations, which started on July 1, said: "The Governments of Pakistan and India today concluded an agreement under which Pakistan would supply 'kangni' and 'joshi' rice to India valued at Rs. 365,00,000 during the next six months. In exchange India would supply Pakistan coal, railway equipment and other specified commodities over a period of 12 months".

Both Indian and Pakistani representatives declined to disclose the price at which rice was being sold to India on the ground that prices in the Agreement were of a commercial nature and were not usually disclosed. It was, however, learnt that the quantity that India would buy would be between 60,0000 and 70,000 tons.

According to Indian delegation sources, Pakistani rice will be unloaded at Bhavnagar, Bombay and Cochin. Indian ships will carry the rice from Karachi.

Mr. Khurshid told newsmen after the signing ceremony that his country was satisfied with the Agreement and added they should have more such Agreements.

Mr. Aslam said that coal was the principal commodity that Pakistan would be importing from India. Other items in the list were railing equipment, spices, bidi leaves, stone boulders, limestone, etc.

Commodities which Pakistan would import were those for which she had been paying in sterling earlier.

C. Progress Of Indus Valley Road: A despatch from Rawalpindi on July 15 said that the Indus Valley Road along the Karakoram Range which would link Gilgit with Pakistan is expected to be completed by October, 1965. Now only 36 miles of the 168-mile road remains to be built.

Pakistan Army engineers are busy round the clock in this difficult terrain to finish the work three months ahead of schedule.

The Indus Valley Road, being financed by the Ministry of Communications, is essentially a civil project designed to provide a land route between the settled areas and the northernmost regions of West Pakistan. The road will provide a snow-free motor road to Gilgit through Swat and Hazara. The distance from Rawalpindi to Gilgit via Swat and Abbottabad will be 470 miles and 420 miles respectively.

The road starts at Karora, about 52 miles north-east of Saidu, and meets the Indus at Hesham, nine miles from Karora, and follows the river almost till Gilgit. Another road from Abbottabad joins the Indus Valley road at Hesham for the onward journay.

At present Gilgit is linked with Rawalpindi by a land route through the most difficult terrain of Kaghan. The narrow jeepable road crosses the 13,690-foot Bahusar Pass and is open to traffic only for three months in the year. All the essential supplies consequently have to be airlifted.

The Indus Valley Road will link the northernmost part of Hunza with Rawalpindi. The road passes through virgin mountains which in places are not even mapped. From Abbottabad it will run along the foot of Pir Sar where Alexander the Great fought his famous battle in 326 BC. The estimated cost of the road is Rs. 33 crores. So far the project has claimed 23 lives.

D. Third Plan Allocation For Family Planning: The Central Minister for Health, Mr. Abdallah Zaheeruddin Lal Mian, disclosed in Lahore on July 16 that the Centre had allocated Rs. 15 crores for the implementation of family planning schemes during the Third Five-Year Plan.

He said that family planning was a very important task before the Government and if implemented successfully would help strengthen the economic condition of the people.

He said that more lady doctors were required for the successful introduction of family planning in the country. The Government had also decided to establish a few more medical colleges for women so that the required number of lady doctors were trained.

These medical colleges, he added, would be set up during the Third Plan. Research facilities in birth control would be made available at these institutions.

TURKEY

A. "Summit" Talks Between Pakistan, Iran And Turkey: "Summit" talks began in Istanbul on July 20 between President Ayub Khan of Pakistan, the Shah of Iran, and the Turkish Prime Minister, Mr. Ismet Inonu.

Mr. Inonu in his opening speech, urged closer economic ties between the three countries.

Following Mr. Inonu's speech, Turkey's Finance Minister, Mr. F. Melen, read a working paper prepared earlier in Ankara.

A proposal for setting up a joint airline by Turkey, Iran and Pakistan was placed before the meeting.

The joint airline, which may be called Aviation Tupair or by some other name representing the three member-States, will have an initial share capital of $15 million and it is expected to merge most of the existing international services operated by Pakistani, Turkish and Iranian airlines. The joint airline is not likely to concern itself however with domestic air services in either of the three member-States.

The services to China now operated by the Pakistan International Airlines and those to Israel by the Turkish Airlines will likewise be excluded from the new airlines schedules.

As for the PIA services to London via Moscow, these may come under the joint airline or continue independently under PIA.

By contributing nearly half of the joint airline's share capital, PIA is expected to become its major share-holder. The registration of the aircraft in the names of its three partners will be covered by their respective shares.

Joint Statement:

The following is the text of the Joint Statement issued by the Heads of State of Iran, Pakistan and Turkey at the end of their summit talks on July 21:

"The Heads of State of Iran, Pakistan and Turkey, Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, President Ayub Khan, and President Cemal Gursel, met on July 20 and 21, 1964, in Istanbul.

"The Heads of State re-affirmed their belief that regional co-operation is an essential factor in accelerating the pace of national development and in contributing to peace and stability.

"They expressed their conviction that the strong cultural and historical ties which bind the peoples of their countries and have already provided them with a solid basis for collaboration should be strengthened further and developed for the common benefit of the peoples of the entire region.

"To this end the Heads of State resolved that appropriate ways and means should be adopted to enlarge and develop further co-operation in the existing relations in all fields.

"They unanimously expressed the belief that this new collaboration should be carried out in a spirit of regional co-operation notwithstanding their activities as members of other organizations of a regional character.

"The three countries would be pleased to consider the participation of other countries of the region in this co-operation.

"Having reviewed the practical steps taken by the Foreign Ministers in the field of co-operation among the three countries during their meeting on July 3 and 4, 1964, in Ankara, the Heads of State expressed their full appreciation for the progress already achieved in this respect. They endorsed the recommendations made by the Ministerial pre-summit meeting of the three countries held in Ankara on July 18 and 19, 1964, on subjects of common and regional interest.

"The Heads of State noted with approval the creation of a Ministerial Council composed of the Foreign Ministers with the participation of other Ministers of their respective Governments in order to take and implement appropriate decisions on matters of common interest.

"They noted with satisfaction the decision of the three Heads of Governments to establish a regional planning committee composed of the Heads of the three plan organizations dealing with work relating to regional collaboration and harmonisation of development plans. To this end they have worked to establish secretariat arrangements to serve the Regional Planning Committee and the Ministerial Council.

"They agreed in principle: (1) to free movement of goods through all practical means such as the conclusion of trade agreements; (2) to establish closer collaboration amongst existing Chambers of Commerce and eventually a joint Chamber of Commerce; (3) to the formulation and implementation of joint purpose projects; (4) to reduce the postal rates between the three countries to the level of internal rates; (5) to improve the air transport services within the region and the eventual establishment of a strong and competitive international air line among the three countries; (6) to investigate the possibilities of securing a close co-operation in the field of shipping, including the establishment of a joint maritime line or "conference" arrangements; (7) to undertake necessary studies for construction and improvement of rail and road links; (8) to sign at an early date an agreement with a view to promoting tourism; (9) to abolish visa formalities among the three countries for travel purposes; (10) to provide technical assistance to each other in the form of experts and training facilities.

"Furthermore, the Heads of State have directed to explore all the possibilities for expanding the co-operation in the cultural field among countries of the region. Cultural relations should be particularly oriented towards creating mass consciousness of the common cultural heritage, disseminating information about the history, civilization and culture of the peoples of the region inter alia through the establishment of chairs in Universities, the exchange of students, the grant of scholarships, the establishment of cultural centres and the joint sponsoring of an institute for initiating studies and research on their common cultural heritage.

"The activities planned within the present scheme of collaboration shall be carried out under the name of Regional Co-operation for Development.

"The Heads of State expressed the hope that the spirit of perfect harmony and of regional solidarity which prevailed throughout the celebrations of the Istanbul Conference would ensure the attainment of the objectives formulated at this Conference.

"They are confident that the combined efforts of their peoples to this end will open new vistas of hope and opportunity for them and thus contribute to world peace and to the prosperity of the whole region."

Regional Co-operation For Development:

Under the plan of "regional co-operation for development" agreed to by the Heads of State on July 20, there would be annual summit meetings as well as more frequent meetings of the organization's Ministerial Council in the Capitals of the three member-States by rotation.

During the first year of the existence of tripartite organization to promote "regional co-operation for development", its headquarters will be located in Tehran and the Shah of Iran is to be its chairman.

The body's Secretariat will be provided by the Planning Department of the Iranian Government.

The Conference set up 12 working parties to work out detailed implications of the decisions announced in the communique and these working parties will set themselves to the task immediately and prepare reports for the first meeting of a Ministerial Council to be held in Tehran in October. The Regional Planning Committee will also meet in Tehran on September 7.

According to Conference sources, the Secretariat will rotate between the three countries in the beginning, but the position will be reviewed after a year or 18 months.

The Airlines Committee will start work in August and present a detailed study report to the Tehran conference.

Working groups will prepare reports on co-operation in the fields of air, sea and ground transport. Another working group on commercial affairs was set up to study action for developing trade.

One working group will deal with co-operation in the field of prospection, exploitation, transport and distribution of oil and natural gas.

Another working group will establish the ways of applying the decision made in principle concerning the removal of visa formalities for trips between the three countries.

Still another working group will draw up measures to be taken for co-operation in the field of banking and insurance.

The Regional Planning Committee will aid the Ministerial Council. It will look after all problems concerning regional co-operation, will hold detailed preparatory discussions, and will make recommendations to the Council. It will have at its disposal the reports of the working groups, which will be linked with it.

Comment:

A London despatch on July 21 said:

"The meeting which began on July 20 on the Bosphorus between the President of Turkey, President Ayub Khan of Pakistan, and the Shah of Iran is to formalize the understanding which already exists between the three to stand by each other in their international claims and ventures, according to diplomatic sources in London.

"The claims are Kashmir in the case of Pakistan, Cyprus in the case of Turkey and general support for Iran against the Arab States' hostile propaganda.

"President Ayub Khan visited Tehran and Ankara three weeks ago on his way to London to attend the Commonwealth Conference. It had been reported then that he had obtained assurance of backing on Kashmir from Iran and Turkey and had promised the latter specific support on Cyprus.

"The Pakistan part of the undertaking was put into effect by President Ayub Khan on the second day of the Commonwealth Conference when he supported the claims of Turkish Cypriots. During the discussion on the communique, his Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, strongly opposed an effort of the Cyprus Foreign Minister, Mr. Kyprianou to get into the communique a reference to a democratic solution of the Cyprus problem, which would have implied a majority decision.

"The Turkish Cypriots are in a minority and Mr. Bhutto would not have for Cyprus what he urges for Kashmir and the reference was watered down. Indeed during the Conference, Pakistani correspondents were briefed that the Indian delegation was siding with the Greek Cypriots and that a tussle had occurred in the Conference between the two delegations.

"A call by Mr. Kyprianou on Mrs. Indira Gandhi to convey condolences on her father's death was also depicted by them as a political mission.

"The present meeting in Turkey is expected to formalize the understanding between the three countries. All are members of the CENTO, but for various reasons, including alleged lack of support on Cyprus and Kashmir, Pakistan and Turkey are annoyed with their Western allies and are forming an inner ring of Muslim States outside the CENTO. They hope, according to diplomatic observers in London, to get Afghanistan into their company eventually.

"The association will be represented as purely one of non-Arabic Muslim States and as such non-aligned, though individual members may pursue independent policies. The entry of Afghanistan will, in the Pakistan calculation, go a long way in healing the differences which have existed between them for many years."

AFRO-ASIAN RECORDER

Regd. No. D-727
Vol. X No. 34

ADEN

A. Aden Government Dissolved: A proclamation dissolving the Aden Legislative Council was issued on July 25 by the British High Commission.

It appears that the Government of Mr. Zain Abdul Baharoon has decided to hold General Elections for a new Legislative Council. The proclamation said nothing about the future elections, nor has the Government yet fixed polling day. It is expected, however, that the elections will take place in the first week of October. Under the 1955 ordinance, elections must be held within three months of dissolution of the Legislative Council.

Under the 1962 agreement on Aden's merger with the South Arabian Federation, the Council's four-year term was extended by one year, and last year Mr. Baharoon, the Chief Minister, extended the Council's life by a further six months in order to hold elections. In March he amended the elections ordinance to restrict the vote to all males aged 21 and above who were born in Aden or whose fathers were born in Aden or were British naturalized subjects. They must also be domiciled in Aden and able to speak and understand Arabic. Only 9,635 males out of Aden's estimated population of 220,000 have registered, and the authorities believe that this figure includes nearly everybody qualified to vote under the amended ordinance.

The new Government emerging from the elections will have the responsibility of negotiating with Britain Aden's status in the South Arabian Federation, which is expected to obtain independence before 1968.

Many members of the Baharoon Government are expected to contest the elections, but the Chief Minister, when asked about his own intentions, said: "At the moment I do not think I am interested."

B. British Aid To South Arabian Federation: According to Mr. Abdullah Salem Basendwah, the Federal Finance Minister who returned to Aden on July 19 after attending financial talks in London, Britain had made a grant of about £9,000,000 towards the South Arabian Federation's Budget for 1964-65.

The Federal Budget, normally brought before the Federal Council (the legislative body) on April 1 but this year delayed pending the allocation of the grants, is now expected to be submitted for the Council's approval before September.

The amount includes £3,300,000 in a grant to the Federal 1964-65 Budget and £1,200,000 for the development budget for the period ending March, 1966, covering health, education, agriculture and road schemes. A further £500,000 is allocated for current development projects.

Mr. Basendwah said the British grant also included about £4 million for the 1964-65 Federal defence budget for the Federal Regular Army and the Federal National Guards. The Federal Army has now four battalions and a fifth is being formed.

It was learnt that the Federal delegation, which also included the Federal Ministers of External Affairs and Defence and the Emir of Beihan, asked for more aid, and the British Government was said to be urgently considering the request, particularly for the development of rural areas like Radfan, where British and Arab forces for the past three months have been trying to subdue the dissident tribesmen.

AFGHANISTAN

A. Progress Of Five-Year Plan: It was stated on July 17 that work on the projects of the Second Five-Year Plan was progressing satisfactorily.

Communications at present have priority in the development programme. The road between Torkham, on the Pakistan border, and Kabul is almost complete and the asphalting should be finished in a month or two. It is also hoped to have the Salang tunnel in the Hindu Kush ready for use before the next snowfall.

The Agency for International Development has authorised a loan of $7.7 million for the construction of an all-weather highway from Herat to Islam Qala, on the Iranian border.

In the field of industry, Afghanistan is now producing textiles, sugar, cement and light engineering requirements and has a well-developed marble industry. To meet the needs of these developing industries, planners are giving their attention to power potential. The main source of hydro-electric power is in the Pamirs and it is hoped to exploit this when heavy industry is taken up in Afghanistan. To meet the shortage of man-power the Government has decided to mechanize agriculture and to take steps to encourage women to take over many office posts at present filled by men.

CEYLON

A. Budget Proposals: The Finance Minister, Dr. N. M. Perera, presented to Parliament on July 30 Budget proposals for the next financial year.

The estimated Budget deficit of Rs. 658 million, arising from the expanding social services, food subsidies and provision for economic development, was covered, but a sizeable surplus was anticipated depending upon the extent of hoarded currency and wealth to be recovered before the end of the year.

Much relief was afforded to income-tax payers below the Rs. 15,000 income level and there was a slight wage increase for over 90,000 public servants at the lowest rung of employment.

Over 70,000 teachers will pay less by way of pension contributions. A five-day week with increased working hours has been proposed instead of the present 5½ days. The Budget deficit is to be covered by revenues provided in the estimates, leaving a surplus of Rs. 14 million.

Dr. Perera announced that exchange tax on remittances abroad by non-nationals had been increased from 10 per cent to 20 per cent.

Retirement funds, however, will continue to be exempted from this tax.

At present, non-nationals are allowed to remit Rs. 25,000 per year out of the balance of their assets remaining in Ceylon. Now no subsequent annual instalments would be allowed to be remitted.

Hitherto the remittance abroad of profits, interest and dividends had been freely permitted. The total of such remittances in 1963 amounted to about Rs. 7,00,00,000.

He said: "Considering the present critical position of the country's foreign exchange reserves, I have decided to declare a moratorium on all remittances of profits, dividends, interest and other investment income for a period of one year in the first instance. When the external assets position improves, it would be possible to reconsider this decision."

He also announced the proposal to create a new Export-Import Banking Corporation which would be jointly owned by the Government and the foreign banks. Fifty-one per cent of the capital of this Corporation would be subscribed by the Government and 49 per cent by the nine foreign banks, if they accept this proposal.

He, however, did not make it clear what the position would be if the banks did not accept the proposal.

The Budget Proposals:

The Budget proposals numbered over 40, but the more important were the following:

(1) A tax of 33.33 per cent on hoarded assets (cash, gold, gems and jewellery) during the amnesty period.

(2) Wealth tax, which so far has been used to raise revenues, will in future virtually fix the ceiling on wealth of over Rs. 1 million to Rs. 2 million with a penal tax of 5 per cent.

(3) Perhaps one of the most important measures proposed is a tax on houses and on property over and above one residence of whatever value, and on other house property to the value of Rs. 1,00,000 there will be a penal rate of 12 per cent of the value from August, 1965.

(4) Rent control will be extended to all houses, and tenants will be helped to purchase their houses on easy terms. This measure is regarded as a painless way of liquidating the idle rentier class which has charged blackmarket rents.

(5) There is to be a moratorium on remittance abroad of profits, interests and dividends, which last year amounted to Rs. 10 million.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

(6) Ceilings have been placed on the transfer of capital assets and the maximum has now been reduced to Rs. 1,50,000 for the non-Indian group and Rs. 75,000 for the Indian group. Subsequent annual remittances of Rs. 21,000, which are at present allowed, have also be stopped.

(7) To control foreign banks, it has been proposed to set up a new Import-Export Banking Corporation with a Government holding of 50 per cent and foreign banks' holding of 49 per cent of the shares.

All existing foreign banks will be made branches of this new bank and business will go on as usual. This is regarded as a major step in which foreign banks are brought under State control.

(8) The duties on petrol, kerosene and diesel oil have been increased, but the increase will be absorbed by the Petroleum Corporation and not passed on to the consumer. Similar duties have been imposed on tobacco, but not to be passed on.

(9) Pending the report of the Press Commission, advertisement tax has been imposed on advertisement income of the daily and Sunday newspapers at the rate of 33.33 per cent on advertisements in excess of 20 per cent of the total printed column space.

Classified advertisement on social and domestic events, public meetings and cultural events are excluded. This tax is intended as a warning to the monopoly trade interests.

The Budget proposal included measures which bring even the private sector industry and commerce into the sphere of planned economic priorities, price fixing and quality control.

State trading in essential goods and total control over all imports will be insisted on to prevent malpractices.

Important measures to increase economic activity and production in the rural sector were announced. There have also been significant changes in the system of taxing the tea industry. Whereas earlier there has been an ad valorem export duty on tea depending on the price (this had led to malpractices), in future there will be a flat rate of export duty and acreage tax depending on the quality of tea produced.

[Prev. ref. 5399:CEY:A]

B. Film Commission's Report: The Film Commission, appointed by the Government, has recommended an immediate reduction by one-third of the import of Indian films into Ceylon.

The Commission felt there should be a quota for the import of the Indian films (which get about 65 per cent of the screen time in the Island now). South Indian films are the principal competitor, against which the indigenous films must be protected.

The quota system was necessary, the Commission said, not only to grant economic relief to the indigenous film industry "but also to arrest the infiltration of a foreign cultural outlook and to prevent the debasing of taste of local film audiences."

At present, Sinhalese films get only 29 per cent of the screen time. The Commission expected the output of Sinhala films to double in the near future, and the screen time for this must come out of the time made available to Indian films.

The Commission suggested the formation of a National Film Corporation, which would take over the distribution of films in the Island. It would also provide facilities for the training of technicians.

CHINA

A. Opposition To World Communist Conference: It was made public in Peking on July 30 that China had told Russia it would "never take part in any international communist conference."

It said the Chinese Communists were "firmly opposed to a schismatic meeting" convened by leaders of the Soviet Communist Party.

Peking's refusal to attend a show-down meeting of the world's communist parties was contained in a letter dated July 28 from the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party sent to the Soviet Communist Party.

The Chinese letter said that the Soviet Communist Party, in its letter of June 15, laid down "a divisive organizational line" for an international meeting of the fraternal parties. "This shows that you are determined to prepare and call such a meeting arbitrarily, unilaterally and illegally, with the aim of effecting an open split in the international communist movement... you want to convene a grand assembly for a split—rather it should be called a minor schismatic gathering."

It said that there were some parties which "dance obediently in response to your baton, but their number is dwindling." "Since you have made up your minds, you will most probably call the meeting. Otherwise, by breaking your word would you not become a laughing stock down the centuries? As the saying goes, 'You can't dismount from the tiger you are riding'. You are caught in an insoluble dilemma. You are falling into a trap of your own making and will end by losing your skin.

"If you do not call the meeting, people will say that you have followed the advice of the Chinese and the Marxist-Leninist parties and you will lose face. If you do call the meeting, you will land yourselves in an impasse without any way out. In the present historical juncture this is a grave crisis for you revisionists, a crisis of your own making."

The Chinese letter denied a Soviet charge that the Chinese party had made a volte face in first agreeing to a meeting of international Communist Parties and subsequently opposing it. It said the Chinese position had consistently been that a conference of this nature should be very carefully prepared and that there should be no hurried conference in an attempt to split the international communist movement.

It was the Soviet Party that had made a volte face and was trying to prepare and convene an international conference in "a blitzkrieg-like manner" Only in February of this year China had suggested first a resumption of bilateral talks between the Chinese and Soviet Communist Parties (including the parties of Cuba, Japan, Italy, and France).

The letter accused the Soviet Party of having in February sent a letter "directed" against the Chinese party to fraternal parties in a plot to take "collective measures" against the Chinese. "We have repeatedly asked you to send us a copy of this letter. However, to this day you have refused to do so, and still have an obligation to us on this score."

Another passage of the letter said: "In substituting the concept that 'the imperialist reactionaries are led by the wild men of the United States and other imperialist Powers' for the concept that 'United States imperialism has become an enemy of the people of the whole world' ...you actually want to ally yourselves with the United States ruling clique, whom you call 'wise men' and in partnership with United States imperialism to carve up the world and oppose the revolutionary struggles of the people of all countries."

The letter referred more than once to the Soviet Communist Party waving its "baton" and said it regarded all the fraternal parties as puppets "qualified to move only at your command". It said that such practices were permeated with the spirit of Great Power chauvinism and of "a patriarchal father party".

It strongly re-iterated charges that the present programme of the Soviet Communist Party was "revisionist", as were the 20th and 22nd Congresses of the Soviet Party in 1956 and 1961. It said that these two Congresses (the first of which denounced Stalin and declared there was more than one road to socialism) were the root causes of the present divisions within the international communist movement.

It also declared that it was the Soviet party, not the Chinese, which had begun the polemics and "kindled the fire". It said that the number of communists in the world who really believed in revisionism was only a small fraction and they were "bound to come to grief."

The letter concluded with an appeal addressed to "Dear Comrades" which said: "Once again we sincerely advise you to rein in on the brink of the precipice and not to prize such false and useless face-saving. But if you refuse to listen and are determined to take the road to doom, well, suit yourselves."

B. Military Training: China announced on July 29 that regular military training was being given throughout the country to thousands of students and workers by officers and men of the country's regular army.

A New China News Agency report said that in the Peking area alone tens of thousands of students and workers had taken part this Summer in "military camping activities."

More than 5,000 student militia men from Peking's universities and colleges attended army camps around the capital. Militia men in factories, schools and Government offices in Nanking, Wuhan and other cities were being drilled. Thousands of students were participating in military exercises at camps set up by the armed forces in Shanghai.

The military works of Mr. Mao Tse-tung, Chairman of the Chinese Communist Party, were being studied by the trainees.

The Peking correspondent of the Soviet Government newspaper Izvestia in a despatch published on July 28 said "total militarization" was now underway in People's China.

It reported that the general staff and the political leadership of the Chinese Army had issued a decree setting up "military camps" to give military training to the Chinese population. "Large masses of workers, employees and students are to be trained in these camps."

The paper added: "In addition to military training they will digest the spirit of the people's army of liberation" and taught "correct political foundations."

The paper reported that slogans advocating discipline and an organization on the pattern of the armed forces had been posted even in primary schools. Chinese newspapers were also paraphrasing a poem by Mr. Mao Tse-tung in the form of a slogan: "Chinese women do not like smart dresses. They like arms."

The paper said that alongside the slogan, pictures were displayed showing Chinese women firing rifles, machine-guns and pistols.

C. Supply Of Explosives To South Africa: According to Borba, the Yugoslav official newspaper, China has been supplying explosives to South Africa and also carrying on trade in other goods with that country in complete violation of the call by Afro-Asian countries for a total trade boycott of South Africa.

Borba quoted a UN report on international trade to point out that China was supplying explosives to the racist regime in South Africa. It culled material from official Chinese data to call "the Chinese bluff" that Peking had joined other countries which had applied trade sanctions against South Africa.

It said that China had imported from South Africa goods worth £3 million and exported to it goods worth £700,000 and that this two-way trade "is being intensively continued."

"These data," it said, "are hardly compatible with the ultra-revolutionary phrases from Peking on China's solidarity with the enslaved peoples and her support to the free African countries."

Observers in Belgrade said the Chinese behaviour, as revealed by Borba, was in contrast with that of even some of the Western Powers which, while not agreeing in principle to trade embargo, have refrained from exporting to the Verwoerd regime weapons and accessories capable of being used against demonstrators.

The article in Borba also dealt with China's new foreign trade orientation, analysing its economic relations with socialist countries and the West.

It said the facts available belied the Chinese allegation that Russia had applied pressure on China by drastically cutting down its aid. It said that until the open conflict between the two countries, a third of the entire Soviet aid to socialist ountries went to China. "China received practically as many machines and experts as she wanted and even more than she could absorb usefully."

On the question of recent development of trade relations between Peking and the West, Borba expressed the view that the West was obviously not yet ready to replace Russia in providing assistance for intensive industrialization of China, possibly in view of Chinese inability to repay debts.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Chinese Military Activities In Ladakh; Issue Of Supply Of British Frigates; Air Agreement With Nepal; Supply Of US Wheat.

A. Chinese Military Activities In Ladakh—Indian Protest: A strong protest has been lodged with China by the Government of India against her continued military activities in Ladakh.

In a Note handed over to the Chinese Embassy in New Delhi on July 28, the Government of India said that on May 30 Chinese military personnel were seen eight miles north of Fukche, well within the demilitarized zone specified in the Colombo proposals.

Recalling earlier protests against Chinese intrusions south of Longju in April, 1963 and also at Rezang La in July, 1963, the Indian Note pointed out that Peking's efforts to convey the impression that it had accepted the Colombo proposals stood exposed by continued activities by Chinese troops in the demilitarized zone.

In another Note India rejected the Chinese charge that Indian aircraft had intruded into Tibet.

Texts Of Notes:

The following are the texts of the Notes exchanged between the Government of India and the Chinese Government:

[Note given by the External Affairs Ministry to the Chinese Embassy in India on July 28]:

"The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the Embassy of the People's Republic of China and has the honour to draw their attention to certain serious and objectionable activities of Chinese military personnel in Ladakh, and to firmly protest against the continuance of these military activities in this region.

"On May 30, 1964, seven armed Chinese military personnel were observed eight miles north of Fukche in Ladakh. This area, as China is aware, falls in the 20-km demilitarized zone specified by the Colombo proposals.

"The Chinese military personnel returned towards Changla, after coming all the way up to Dumchele. Similar military activity was also observed in the Kongkala, Jarala, and Changla areas. These Chinese intrusions amply prove the falsity of the statement in the Chinese Government's Note dated March 31, 1964 that 'Chinese frontier guards have never entered the 20-km zone' after the so-called unilateral withdrawal by Chinese forces in February, 1963.

"In their Note dated May 27, 1963, the Government of India had lodged a protest about the intrusions by a Chinese party into Indian territory in the area south of Longju on April 26, 1963. The Government of India in its Note dated June 7, 1963, had again protested about the intrusion at Rezangla in Ladakh by a Chinese force of 200 men with 80 or more horses.

"In its Note dated July 5, 1963, the Government of India had protested about the Chinese military patrols which had intruded into Sikkim near Sebula. These land intrusions, it must be stated, were over and above a number of violations of Indian air-space by Chinese aircraft.

"The Chinese Government has so far sought to convey the impression that it has accepted the Colombo proposals in principle, although it has continued to maintain reservations of substance in regard to these proposals. This posture of the Chinese Government stands fully exposed by the above-mentioned Chinese action in the 20-km demilitarized zone.

"The Government of India hereby lodges a strong protest in regard to this continuous military activity by Chinese troops in Indian territory. This aggressive activity, the Government of the People's Republic of China should realise, not only adds to tensions in the area, but is in open contravention of the provisions of the Colombo proposals and the declarations of the Chinese Government itself."

[Note given by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of China to the Embassy of India in China on June 4, 1964] :

"The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of China presents its compliments to the Indian Embassy in China and has the honour to state as follows:

"At noon time on May 24, 1964, an Indian aircraft intruded into China's air-space and wantonly carried out reconnaissance and harassment for a long time over a number of important cities and towns in Tibet.

"The Indian aircraft intruded into the air-space over Tibet around 12.05 hours on May 24, flew successively over Tsona, and Damshune, turned westwards to overfly Gyantse, Shigatse, Lhatse and other places and then left in the south-west direction. Its illegal flight over Tibet lasted over four hours and 20 minutes and the scope of its intrusion exceeded 230 kilometres from south to north and 430 kilometres from east to west.

"The Chinese Government hereby lodges a strong protest with the Indian Government against this serious incident in which an Indian aircraft intruded into the air-space of Tibet, China, for prolonged reconnaissance and harassment over vast areas in such an unbridled way."

[Note given by the Ministry of External Affairs, New Delhi, to the Chinese Embassy in India, July 28, 1964]:

"The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the Embassy of the People's Republic of China and has the honour to refer to the Chinese Government's Note dated June 4, 1964, alleging that an Indian aircraft had 'carried out reconnaissance and harassment for a long time over a number of important cities and towns in Tibet.'

"This allegation is not only completely baseless but is, obviously, yet another attempt by the Chinese Government to serve the ends of its anti-Indian propaganda. The fictitious and propagandist nature of the charge is demonstrated by the fact that these false allegations were first publicised in a New China News Agency report of May 26, 1964 and the same have been incorporated in a formal Note of the Chinese Government more than a week later.

"The Chinese Note under reference dated June 4, 1964 has made the fantastic allegation that the flight of Indian aircraft 'over Tibet lasted over four hours and 20 minutes and the scope of its intrusion exceeded 230 kilometres from south to north and 430 kilometres from east to west.' This Chinese charge appears particularly absurd in the context of the Chinese Government's statement in its Note of October 17, 1962 that the Chinese side, upon discovering any intruding alien aircraft in China's air-space, will immediately force them to land or shoot them down.' It is patent that the Chinese Government has concocted these false allegations for propaganda purposes only, in order to step up tension on the Sino-Indian border.

"As has been stated repeatedly in earlier Notes of the Government of India, all Indian aircraft have strict instructions to keep within the international frontiers of India and these instructions are being scrupulously observed. There is, therefore, no question of any Indian aircraft having at any time intruded into Chinese air-space. The Government of India accordingly firmly rejects the Chinese protest in its Note of June 4."

B. Violation Of Cease-fire In Jammu And Kashmir—UN Observers' Verdict Against Pakistan: A clear verdict of violation of the Cease-fire Agreement was given against Pakistan by the UN Chief Military Observer in Kashmir in five instances during the last week of June.

In one of his awards relating to the Poonch sector, the UN Chief Military Observer found Pakistani troops guilty of "crossing the cease-fire line, raiding an Indian post, killing two Indians and taking away one of the bodies."

It may be recalled that about 50 Pakistani troops armed with sten-guns, light machineguns and grenades, raided an Indian post in the Poonch sector in the early hours of June 21. As a result of the raid two Indian police personnel were killed.

The other four awards related to violation of the Cease-fire Agreement by Pakistan in the Tithwal sector on June 27, Mendhar sector on June 25 and 30, and in the Akhnur sector on June 25.

More instances of Pakistani troops firing on Indian posts and patrols were reported in the Poonch and Akhnur sectors on July 27 and 28.

Five Razakars crossed the cease-fire line five miles south-west of Poonch on July 27. The Indian posts in the area fired on the intruders. One Razakar was seen dropping while the others fled across the cease-fire line. Simultaneously, Pakistani troops fired at Indian posts from across the cease-fire line. The firing was ineffective. A complaint of violation of the cease-fire line has been lodged with the UN Observers.

In the Akhnur sector also, the Pakistani troops fired at five Indian posts and a patrol in the area, 25 miles west of Akhnur, on July 27 and 28. The firing was ineffective.

Pakistani troops were seen digging trenches and constructing bunkers in the Uri sector on July 27. New sangars (stone breastwork) and bunkers were seen at two places, a few miles south-west of Poonch. The digging of communication trenches and laying of wires at the new post by Pakistani troops numbering about 20 were also observed in the same area on July 28.

Another Incident:

Yet another protest was lodged with UN Observers following the unprovoked firing by Pakistani troops on an Indian post, eight miles from Tithwal village, on July 28.

There were no casualties on the Indian side.

This was the sixth incident in one week in this sector in western Kashmir.

Pakistani Use Of American Bombs—Mr. C. Bowles' Denial:

Pakistani troops fired on Indian posts and patrols at different places in the Naushera and Chamb sectors and in Poonch on July 23 and 24. Besides using medium and light machine-guns and mortars, the Pakistani troops were reported to have also used 81 milli-metre bombs, stated to be of American make, in the firings.

The Pakistani troops fired without provocation three rounds of American-made 81-mm bombs on an Indian patrol at a place ten miles south-east of Naushera on July 24.

The US Ambassador, Mr. C. Bowles, told a news conference in New Delhi on July 30 that "81-mm" bombs were not produced in USA.

He was replying to a question whether it was a fact that Pakistani troops had recently fired "81-mm" bombs of American manufacture against Indian border patrols across the cease-fire line in Kashmir.

C. Supply Of British Frigates—Sir Alec Douglas-Home's Statement In Commons: The British Prime Minister, Sir Alec Douglas-Home, said in the House of Commons on July 28 that the question of British frigates for India raised the whole balance between economic and military aid which Britain gave to India.

He was questioned about Leander frigate deals with India and Spain.

He described the Spanish deal as a matter of "straight trade". The Indian deal was quite a different matter and a "red herring".

Mr. John Stonehouse (Labour) asked Sir Alec what answer he gave to the official request of the Indian Prime Minister for supply of frigates to India.

Sir Alec replied that he received no such request from the Prime Minister of India. The Government of India had been negotiating with a British firm in connexion with their project for the manufacture of Leander class frigates in India. Britain greatly valued this commercial service link.

The Government of India had estimated its requirement of foreign exchange at £13,660,000 spread over 10 years, and had asked the British Government for financial assistance. As far as this was concerned, Britain was already giving India considerable economic and military aid.

The Indian Defence Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan, was going to discuss this during his visit to Britain, but his visit had to be postponed because of the death of Mr. Nehru. He would now be coming to Britain later this year.

Mr. Stonehouse asked if this meant that Sir Alec was now willing to grant the credits India required to buy these supplies. Was it not abnormal, he asked, that these negotiations had had to go on for so long and as a result India had to look elsewhere? This was not the only example where a Commonwealth country had endeavoured to obtain supplies from Britain and had been "fobbed off" for quite a long time.

Sir Alec objected to the use of the expression "fobbed off" and said that as it had been used by Mr. Stonehouse he would tell the House something of what had been done.

In September, 1962, the British Government offered £19,000,000 to India—more than £15,000,000 had already reached India. In August, 1963, Britain offered to supply further military aid and equipment. Agreement was reached and the equipment was on order. In May, 1964, more military aid was offered, and discussions as to the type of equipment to be supplied were now in progress with the Indian Government. Over the last six years, military and economic aid from Britain to India had been more than £200,000,000.

Replying to questions by Mr. John Biggs-Davison (Conservative), Sir Alec said that Britain had tried and he thought had succeeded—in consultation with the Indian Government—to give India the type of military aid she wanted at the time. Then there was danger of a land attack on India. If priorities changed, the British Government would consider them.

Mr. Harold Wilson asked whether Sir Alec was aware that the request for frigates for India had been going on now for 18 months. In view of the repeated insistance that full employment in Britain could only be based on exporting frigates, Mr. Wilson asked why there was this delay.

Sir Alec replied that the kind of military aid Britain gave to India depended on the threat to India. The threat up to now had been a land attack. If Mr. Chavan wished to change the priorities, Britain would consider the matter of frigates.

Mr. Wilson asked: "In view of the haste which the Prime Minister has shown in supplying frigates to non-Commonwealth countries, will he say what kind of attack he envisages in respect of Spain?"

Sir Alec, in his reply said that "the matter of frigates for Spain was a matter of straight trade. This particular matter of India raised the whole balance between economic and military aid which this country gives to India. That is quite a different matter and a red herring raised by Mr. Wilson."

D. Air Agreement With Nepal: The Indo-Nepalese air talks ended in New Delhi on August 1 with the initialling of a draft Agreement.

The agreed text was approved by the two Governments.

The Agreement envisages possibilities of increased operation of air services between the two countries. The Nepalese delegation was said to have indicated that at a suitable future date, the Royal Nepal Airlines might operate services beyond India.

At the invitation of the Indian Government the Nepalese delegation visited the Avro factory at Kanpur and other factories in Bangalore before returning to Khatmandu.

E. Supply Of US Wheat: The US Ambassador, Mr. Chester Bowles, announced in New Delhi on July 30 that the US Government would supply 4,000,000 tons of wheat to India during the seven months from July, 1964 to February, 1965.

He explained that the wheat would arrive at the rate of 500,000 tons a month during the first few months.

He also announced a programme of substantial US assistance to Indian agriculture. "In response to the urgent request of the Government of India, USA is doubling the rate of wheat shipments."

The new decision will mean that two ships (each of 10,000 tons) laden with wheat will be arriving daily in Indian ports.

He said USA was sending 15 per cent of its total wheat production and an equal share of its rice output to India. "We have no intention of letting you down in the future."

Asked about the prospects of a fresh Wheat Agreement between India and USA, he said legislation on the subject might take a little more time, but the intentions of the US Government to continue supplying wheat on a large scale to India were never in doubt.

G. Air Marshal Arjan Singh Takes Over As Chief Of Air Staff: Air Marshal Arjan Singh took over from Air Marshal A. M. Engineer as Chief of the Air Staff in New Delhi on July 31.

In a special Order of the Day to all ranks and civilians of the Air Force, Air Marshal Arjan Singh said: "It is indeed an honour to be appointed the Chief of the Air Staff and I have taken over the duties today from Air Marshal Engineer, who has retired after serving the Indian Air Force with distinction for a period of 32 years. I am sure you will join with me in wishing him luck in his new assignment as Ambassador of India to Iran. My thoughts turn to our late Chief, Air Marshal Mukerjee, the father of the Indian Air Force, for his distinguished service to the IAF, and also to those hundreds who have sacrificed themselves in building up our Air Force. You have served the country loyally and often under very trying conditions. During the operations against the Chinese, our Air Force was able to assist the Army with skill and courage, and the credit goes to all of you. You will always bear in mind the increasing danger to our Motherland and the vital role our Air Force has to play in her defence in future. Due to service requirements you are living in remote places lacking in proper accommodation and amenities. It will be my endeavour to provide these essentials as early as possible. The expansion of the Air Force has made inevitable many quick changes and postings. I shall try to reduce these to the minimum, in keeping with the operational efficiency of the Air Force. I wish you all—officers, airmen and civilians—the very best of luck in your service to the country and the Air Force."

Air Marshal A. M. Engineer's Farewell Message:

In a farewell message to all ranks and civilians of the IAF on the eve of his departure on leave preparatory to retirement, Air Marshal A. M. Engineer said:

"On the eve of relinquishing my appointment as Chief of the Air Staff, I convey to all of you who are serving with the Indian Force my thanks for the loyalty and support I have at all times received from you. It has indeed been my privilege and good fortune to have had the opportunity to command such a fine Service as the Indian Air Force—a Service which I have seen develop from a small flight in the early days into the powerful force that it is today. During this period we have had our trials and tribulations, but, working as a well-knit team, we have managed to overcome all obstacles. I will always cherish many happy memories of my association with the Indian Air Force. The Service will now be in the capable hands of Air Marshal Arjan Singh and we all look forward to a still brighter future for our Air Force. In bidding you farewell, I say this to you now—have the fullest confidence in your own ability, for I have no doubt that you will, in co-operation with the other two Services, hold the frontiers of our country inviolable at all times against any aggressor. I wish you the very best of luck in the years to come."

The order, called the Delhi Prevention of Hoarding of Foodgrains Order 1964, was issued under the Defence of India Rules.

In the case of cultivators, the minimum stock limit is 25 quintals of any type of foodgrain and 40 quintals for all types of foodgrains. This limit will apply to the cultivator's own produce only.

J. Registrar Of Newspapers' Annual Report: According to the annual report of the Registrar of Newspapers for 1964, there were 7,790 newspapers and periodicals published in India in 1963 compared with 7,397 at the end of 1962.

The report estimated an increase of 5.4 per cent in the circulation of newspapers and periodicals in the country during the period under review. The total circulation attained by 4,570 papers in 1963 was 202,91,000 compared with 192,58,000 by 4,467 papers in 1962.

The rate of rise in the circulation might have been higher but for the continuing need to ration newsprint and other allied requirements of newspapers because of the difficult foreign exchange position. The rate of increase in 1963 compared unfavourably with that in 1962, that is, 8.8 per cent. The abnormal momentum which the Press had received in 1962 owing to the Chinese invasion and the General Elections gradually petered out and was replaced by a more steady tone during 1963.

The report revealed that the Congress Party owned the largest number of papers, namely, 29, followed by the Communist Party of India which had 25 papers. The Praja-Socialist Party came next with nine papers. From the point of view of circulation, however, the Communist Party led with a circulation of 82,920.

Monopolistic trends continued in the newspaper industry in 1963, but their growth was retarded by curbs on newsprint allocation to combines because of the foreign exchange.

The report for the first time included papers published from Goa and Pondi-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

cherry with the extension of the Press and Registration of Books Act to these Union Territories. From Goa 24 papers were being published and from Pondicherry 20.

Dealing with common ownership, the report said that "six papers owned by big business enjoyed a monopolistic position." The number of dailies under common ownership increased from 130 in 1962 to 143 in 1963. The 143 dailies controlled 68.4 per cent of the total circulation of dailies in the country as against 65.9 per cent commanded by 130 papers in 1962. The actual circulation increased from 35,40,000 in 1962 to 33,17,000. Nine owners —four chains, three groups and two multiple units—among them published 43 dailies and commanded a total circulation of 23,35,000 or 41 per cent of the total circulation of all dailies.

The total number of newspapers controlled by chains, groups and multiple units during 1963 was 203 and they had a total circulation of 50,37,000—an increase of 4,20,000 over last year.

The increase in the circulation of papers under chains, groups and multiple units was not due to an increase in the number of papers but to improvement in their circulation. The percentage of circulation of papers under common ownership to the total circulation of all papers rose from 23.9 per cent in 1962 to 24.8 in 1963.

The report incorporated a study made for the first time to assess the local monopolistic position of different papers in various regions and languages. The study revealed that six daily papers owned by big business enjoyed a monopolistic position in their respective language or regions and eight daily papers not connected with big business also enjoyed a similar monopolistic position. (A monopoly has been defined to exist where a paper enjoyed a circulation of more than 50 per cent in a particular language or region.)

The report said that from the study conducted, it was evident that "monopolistic trends continue to exist. This growing trend would have been higher and the rate of growth much faster had it not been for the inevitable curbs which had to be placed on the allocation of newsprint to newspaper combines who have, during the past 18 months, from time to time, approached the Government for additional quota to bring out new publications, dailies, weeklies and monthlies. It is, therefore, the shortage of foreign exchange that is retarding the growth of these combines.

"Of late there has also been some informal moves by the big newspaper combines to purchase and merge with them some medium and small newspaper units which offered for sale their undertakings. Some of the small and medium newspapers which are unable to withstand competition and lack financial and economic stability have made these offers. Such merger, had they come through, would have accelerated the growth of monopolies. But this was not possible under the existing newsprint control restrictions."

Based on a study of ownership pattern in respect of 4,737 papers, the report noted that the predominant form continued to be "individual" accounting for 50.2 per cent of the total. The other pattern were societies and associations (22.8), firms and partnerships (7.5), joint stock companies (8.1) and others (1.4).

Taking the language-wise break-up of circulation, the report said that English continued to command the highest circulation (52,57,000 compared with 47,59,000 in 1962). Hindi papers (142) followed with a circulation of 35,08,000 compared with 33,64,000 the previous year. Tamil came third with a circulation of 26,05,000.

In 1963 there were 1,648 Hindi papers including dailies showing an increase over any other language paper.

An important change introduced in the report was a study of Press statistics confined to what is formerly called "A" category of papers. The former "B" category papers including market bulletins, school magazines and house and publicity organs have been separately dealt with. The differentiation has been made in line with practice in USA and other countries where publications of limited circulation are excluded from the scope of the national Press statistics.

The total number of papers and periodicals including these miscellaneous papers at the end of 1963 stood at 9,750. Among them there were 503 dailies: (Hindi 142, Urdu 64, English 54, Marathi 41, Malayalam 39, Kannada 34, Gujerati 33, Tamil 29, Punjabi 15, Telugu 13, Bengali nine, Oriya five and Assamese and Sanskrit one each). There were 11 dailies in other languages.

Nine dailies had a circulation above 1,00,000, taking into account only single edition. The highest circulation of 1,46,819 was claimed by a Bengali daily, Ananda Bazar Patrika, Calcutta. In periodicals, the highest circulation of 2,68,074 was attained by a Tamil weekly Kumudam, Madras.

Statewise, Maharashtra had the largest number of daily papers (74). The report observed that shortage of foreign exchange made prospects of adopting latest tele-type setting and other production methods dim. Five thousand one hundred and ninety-nine journalists were engaged in the production of 308 dailies.

During 1963, circulation claims of 467 papers including 179 dailies at 28 centres were investigated by the Press Registrar. As a result, circulation of these papers was reduced by a total of 9,27,075 copies. A consequent national saving of Rs. 24,00,000 in foreign exchange on account of newsprint quota was estimated.

K. "Rivers Of Mud" Below Bay Of Bengal—US Scientists' Survey: American scientists on July 26 reported finding a score of huge channels at the bottom of the Bay of Bengal off the coast of India, carved out by "rivers of mud" which move with avalanche force about once or twice each century.

This was stated by the coast and geodetic survey oceanographic research vessel Pioneer which was on a 27,000-mile cruise that ended on August 11 at Oakland, California.

Dr. Robert Dietz, one of three American oceanographers taking part in a 20-nation study of the Indian Ocean, said: "These channels are of enormous dimensions. The largest surveyed by our scientists, located about two miles below the surface of the sea, was about four miles wide and 300 feet deep.

"We estimated that it carried a volume of water 25 times larger than that of the Mississippi river. We followed it for about 200 miles before we lost it."

He explained that mud is deposited on the continental shelf by many rivers that flow into the Bay of Bengal. "Possibly about once or twice each century, this mud suddenly moves with compelling force from the shelves, across the bottom of the sea through these huge channels. What triggers these sudden avalanches of mud at the bottom of the sea is not known.

"But the mud is apparently funneled down submarine channels cut into the steep continental slopes, which link the continental shelves and the ocean bottom, and pours across the almost flat sea floor for hundreds of miles. At some time in the distant past, the mud avalanches cut these enormous channels out of the sea bottom."

Each time this phenomenon occurs, he said, "it fills the sea channel to overflowing with huge, massive fluid rivers of mud. The volume is so great that in overflowing the channels it builds its own levels or walls, just as the Mississippi river does on land. These mud rivers run along the bottom of the sea like a flood of mercury."

He said it was not known how long the avalanches lasted, but he described them as a "truly remarkable phenomenon of the sea."

A. Dr. R. Subandrio's Visit To USSR: The Soviet Premier, Mr. N. Khruschev, and other leaders reiterated their support to the Indonesian policy of "confrontation" with Malaysia during the visit of the Foreign Minister, Dr. R. Subandrio, to Moscow in the second week of July.

Indonesian reports suggested that the Soviet Union had agreed to give Indonesia a wide range of arms. This military aid would supplement the estimated $1 billion worth of arms already provided on easy purchase terms.

Earlier, the Soviet Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Anastas Mikoyan, paid an 11-day visit to Indonesia. The visit ended on July 2. He declared the full support of the Soviet Union to Indonesian opposition to Malaysia and also discussed with Indonesian leaders the draft for a long-term Trade Agreement apart from military assistance.

The Communique:

The following are excerpts from the joint Indonesian-Soviet communique issued on July 17 in Moscow at the conclusion of Dr. Subandrio's visit:

"The Indonesian Government delegation held important talks with the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of USSR, N. S. Khruschev, which went smoothly in a cordial and friendly atmosphere prevailing between the representatives of Indonesia and the Soviet Union.

"The delegation also held talks and meetings with A. I. Mikoyan, the First Deputy Prime Minister, the Foreign Minister of USSR, A. Gromyko, the First Vice-Premier for Defence of USSR, Marshal A. Grechko and the Chairman of the State Committee for Foreign Economic Relations, S. A. Schejkov, together with other Soviet Union officials.

"During these talks mutual understanding was reached regarding important international questions which have the attention of the two States, especially in their common struggle against imperialism, colonialism and neo-colonialism.

"The Soviet Union, as was stated by N. S. Khruschev, sympathizes with the freedom struggle of the people of North Kalimantan and together with the Indonesian nation and other nations, opposes the British schemes of neo-colonialism in Malaysia and other regions of Asia.

"Both parties realise that, especially in this struggle against colonialism and imperialism, the solidarity of all progressive forces in the world which are anti-imperialist and anti-colonialist must be constantly promoted and strengthened, whilst it must be ensured that these huge combined forces are not divided and split.

"Various important spheres of co-operation between the two States could be further strengthened, both in the field of defence and in the field of Indonesian economic development.

"Special talks were held in this connexion, including talks held by the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, Lt.-General, A. Yani, the Minister for Fisheries, Commodore Hamzah Atmohandoyo, and Deputy to the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Umaryadi, with the officials of the Government of the Soviet Union concerned.

"In the fields of defence, questions were discussed of the further despatch of military equipment for the needs of the Indonesian Armed Services in execution of their task of defending the Republic of Indonesia. In the fields of co-operation in Indonesian economic development, besides discussion of implementation of agreed projects, an agreement on co-operation between the Government of the Republic of Indonesia and the Government of the Soviet Union in the field of fisheries was also signed. An Agreement was reached in the sphere of trade to increase the exchange of goods between the two States on the basis of the Agreement just signed in Djakarta between the Government of the Republic of Indonesia and the Government of the Soviet Union.

"In connexion with the agreements which have been reached, a delegation of civil and military experts will shortly be sent from Indonesia to Moscow.

"The two Governments express their satisfaction with the results and common understanding reached in the discussions between the delegation of the Government of the Republic of Indonesia and the Government of the Soviet Union.

"The delegation of the Government of the Republic of Indonesia extends its thanks to the Government and the people of the Soviet Union who received the delegation of the Republic of Indonesia with deep feelings of sincere friendship and a sense of being engaged in a common struggle for the liberation and independence of nations. While in Moscow, the delegation from the Government of the Republic of Indonesia also had an opportunity to further promote Indonesian-Soviet Union friendship, amongst other things through giving lectures and information to the Soviet society.

"The two Governments are convinced that the recent visit to Indonesia of the delegation of the Soviet Union's Supreme Soviet, headed by the Soviet First Deputy Prime Minister, A. Mikoyan, followed by the present visit to Moscow of the delegation of the Government of the Republic of Indonesia, under the leadership of the First Deputy Prime Minister/Foreign Minister, Subandrio, has further strengthened the friendly relations and the common struggle of the Republic of Indonesia and the Soviet Union to oppose imperialism and wipe out all vestiges of colonialism in whatever form, for the sake of the independence, peace and happiness of mankind".

Supply Of Guided Missiles And Warships:

On July 20, Rear-Admiral Eddy Martadinata, the Indonesian Naval Chief of Staff, announced in Djakarta that more guided missiles and rocket-equipped warships would arrive soon from the Soviet Union.

He said that 58 anti-submarine helicopters would also arrive this year from France and the Soviet Union.

Malaysian Criticism:

The Soviet offer of increased military assistance to Indonesia was strongly criticised by Malaysian leaders and spokesmen of the British Government.

Britain's High Commissioner to Malaysia, Lord Head, said in Kuala Lumpur on August 2 that the Soviet Union must not involve itself in the border incursions by Indonesian guerrillas in the Borneo territories. Otherwise it would eventually lead to world war.

He called on Russia to stop giving military aid to Indonesia for its anti-Malaysia campaign.

He was speaking to newsmen at the airport on his return to Kuala Lumpur from a brief visit to Singapore.

He referred to Tengku Abdul Rehman's request to President L. B. Johnson of USA to use his influence to stop the Soviet aid to Indonesia and said that the United States should take a "firm stand on this vital issue."

B. Dutch Export Credit: The Netherlands Government has approved an export credit of $30 million to Indonesia for 1965.

This was stated in Djakarta on the departure of the Dutch Foreign Minister, Dr. Joseph Luns, after an eight-day official visit. Details of the credit are to be worked out at The Hague.

Dr. Luns, who returned the Indonesian Foreign Minister, Dr. R. Subandrio's visit to the Netherlands early this year, (see pages 5792 and 5839) discussed with Indonesian officials economic and technical co-operation, establishment of Embassy replacing the office of Charge d'Affaires and expansion of trade between the two countries.

Dr. Luns' visit is of major significance for Indonesia. Indonesian-Dutch relations were severed in 1957 and were partially resumed only in 1962 after the Netherlands transferred Irian Barat to Indonesia. Since then there has been steady improvement in their relations.

IRAN

A. Review Of Economy: The economic state of the country was spotlighted late in June by statements of the Prime Minister, the President of the Chamber of Commerce, and by the annual report of the Central Bank.

The Central Bank report for the financial year March, 1963-March, 1964 indicated that credit extended to both public and private sectors last year was three times that of the year before—3.7 billion rials as opposed to 1.2 billion rials. This increase had been made possible because money was being taken out of savings and put into current accounts, a trend away from the hoarding practice that became widespread during the recent period of recession.

The Prime Minister claimed that after three months in office his Government had led the way to the recovery which had now been achieved. Prices had remained stable and development funds had been increased from 145 to 2,000 billion rials, the construction industry showed signs of recovery, while administrative and legislative reforms such as the creation of new Ministries of Water and Power and Housing and Development, the setting up of a Stock Exchange and the new tax regulations were all designed with a view to increasing the country's economy.

The President of the Chamber of Commerce did not share the Prime Minister's optimism, but after analysing the situation produced some practical suggestions for recovery. He suggested that the Government, the merchant community and the banks, all of whom he blamed for the recession, should co-operate more closely together. Banks should also co-ordinate their credit policies and be prepared to grant longer-term credits, the business community must adapt itself to modern business methods, while the Government should by the revision of taxation and company laws take the lead in creating an efficient administration.

In an interview on June 28, Mr. Mohammad Khosrowshahi, the Chamber of Commerce Chairman, praised the recent Trade and Payments Agreement signed with the Soviet Union as the most important step ever taken to improve trade relations with the Soviet Union, which had in the past often been the most important importer of Soviet goods. Owing to the proximity of USSR, deliveries and settlement of accounts took place quickly, allowing for the capital of the exporter to be turned over several times a year, whereas only one turn-over a year or perhaps three in two years is possible with exports to Europe.

B. Phosphate Discovery In Fars: It was reported on July 5 that a large phosphate deposit near Kazerun in Fars Province had been discovered. This was the first such recorded find in Iran.

If it proves capable of commercial exploitation it should allow the production of chemical soil fertilizers in Iran. Hitherto the fertilizer plant at Shiraz has been exporting ammonium nitrate and urea because lack of local sources of phosphates had prevented the manufacture of a chemical soil fertilizer. Iranian soil requires large quantities of phosphate-based fertilizers to counteract excessive salinity.

The UN Technical Assistance Board has appointed Mr. R. E. Stevens, on American, as Chief Chemist at the Geological Survey Institute in Iran for a period of three years. This Institute with its four departments covering the fields of Geology, Mineral Resources, Ground Water and laboratory work was established two years ago as a joint venture by the Iranian Government and United Nations. Iran will contribute $2,765,400 and UN $1,425,300 towards the project over a six-year period.

C. Budget For 1964-65: The Prime Minister, Mr. Hassan Ali Mansour, presented the Budget for 1964-65 to the Majlis on July 12.

As anticipated, it was a deficit Budget, an expenditure of 144,426,000,000 rials being offset against revenues of 140,952,000,000 rials (212 rials=£).

The overall Budget comprises the Government's ordinary Budget, the Plan Organization Budget, and the Budget for special Government agencies, as detailed below:

Revenues (million rials)

	Ministries and Government	Specialized Agencies	Total
Ordinary Budget	50,604	49,748	100,352
Plan Budget	40,600	—	40,600
Total	91,204	49,748	140,952

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Expenditures (million rials)

	Ministries and Government	Specialized Agencies	Total
Ordinary Budget	54,078	46,498	100,576
Development	36,600	3,250	39,850
Non-Development	4,000	—	4,000
Total	94,678	49,748	144,426

This Budget shows an increase in expenditure over the provisional March Budget of 2,000 million rials, which the present Government claims is largely accounted for by additional calls for credit by official agencies and Ministries, and by the repayment of foreign debts, both items having been largely ignored by the Alam Government. An increase in revenue of 3,200 million rials over the March Budget is made up of an estimated 1,000 million rials from direct taxation, 500 million rials from customs revenues, 800 million rials from unexpended allocations from last year and a small increase from most other Government service operations.

The figures of 50,604 million rials in revenues and 54,078 million rials in expenditures, producing a deficit of 3,474 million rials for this year's ordinary Budget may be compared with last year's ordinary Budget which showed a deficit of 3,003 million rials (revenues of 52.145 million rials offset by expenditures of 55,148 million rials) this year's deficit thus being approximately 16 per cent higher than last year's. Last year the special Budget was made to balance, which has been the normal procedure up to now.

The Plan Organization Budget is also a deficit budget, expenditure of 40,600 million rials being set against revenues of 26,700 million rials, i.e. a deficit of 13,900 million rials. Details are as follows :

Revenues (million rials)

Oil revenues share	21,600
Existing foreign loans	4,500
Miscellaneous	600
Total	26,700

Expenditures (million rials)

Development (less Tehran refinery)	32,500
Tehran refinery	4,100	36,600
Non-development (administration and loan financing)		4,000
Total		40,600

Deducting the 4,000 million rials required for administration and loan financing, 36,600 million rials remain for investment, of which 4,100 million rials are earmarked for the Tehran Refinery. The Central Bank will provide credit for the sum required for the refinery this year and a further 3,000 million rials for other development projects. Treasury bonds should produce 1,000 million rials, but a further 5,800 million rials (of which 2,800 million rials are under negotiation) remain to be borrowed. While such heavy borrowing might not prove feasible, it is likely that this sum may not in fact be required and if the Central Bank's credit for the Refinery is allowed to be diverted to other projects, the Plan Organization Budget may yet balance.

IRAQ

A. Economic Protocol With Italy: An Economic Protocol was signed in Rome on July 3 between Iraq and Italy in accordance with the Agreement for economic and technical co-operation signed between the two countries in 1963.

The leader of the Iraqi delegation, Mr. Abdul Hady el Hafez, Under-Secretary in the Ministry of Economy, said the two sides exchanged views on the credit facilities offered in Italy to companies wishing to tender for development schemes in Iraq.

He added that the Italian side said it was willing to set up vocational training centres in Iraq and send Italian experts to work in industry projects for generation of electricity. A number of Iraqis would also receive training in Italian institutes.

He said that Iraq offered several schemes in which Italy could co-operate. They included a number of factories for petro-chemicals, textiles, sugar, dates, cement, paper, spare parts, the assembly of motor cars, storage, packing and surfacing of roads. Iraq had also sought technical advice on major irrigation and rural development schemes.

[Article 4 of the Agreement for technical and economic co-operation between the two countries calls for the setting up of a joint committee to supervise the Agreement and to study the technical, economic and financial aspects of schemes planned for the execution under the Agreement. The joint committee also encourages exchange of technical information and views between the two countries, exchange of information on economic legislation and exchange of literature containing technical information, exchange of experts and registration of patents. It also assigns engineers, technicians and skilled workers for the execution of schemes and establishes contact between economic, technical and scientific organizations in the two countries in the fields of industry, agriculture, construction, transport, trade and tourism.]

B. Economic Integration With UAR—Co-ordinating Committee's Recommendations: A joint communique was signed by the two parties of the Co-ordinating Committee for economic integration between UAR and Iraq at its meeting in Cairo on June 29.

The Committee held talks with a view to putting into effect the Economic Integration Agreement which was concluded between the two countries in November, 1958 and which had been kept in abeyance by the former "deviationist, regionalist rule in Iraq."

Important recommendations were made by the Committee's nine specialised sub-committees in various aspects of economic integration between the two countries.

The following is the text of the communique:

"In an atmosphere of genuine Arab brotherhood, for the purpose of putting into effect the Economic Integration Agreement which was concluded between the two countries in November, 1958, in application of Article 5 in the Agreement and in order to complete the economic talks which took place in Baghdad in February, 1964, the Iraqi Republic representatives led by Mr. Taleb Jamil, the Economy Ministry Under-Secretary, and the UAR representatives led by Mr. Mohammed Aly Amer, the Economy Ministry Under-Secretary, have held several fruitful meetings in Cairo.

"The meeting of the two parties came after the disappearance of the deviationist, regionalist rule in Iraq, the regime which, from the moment of the signing of this important Agreement, had prevented such brotherly meetings and had done its utmost to isolate Iraq from its sisters in the Arab homeland. The two parties did, in fact, meet to establish an obvious reality, which is one of the Arab demands for comprehensive unity, and to proceed with the operation of planning, development and construction, together with the rising Arab march to achieve their aspirations, raise their living standards, and to crush their common enemy.

"The Committee decided at its first meeting that nine specialized sub-committees should be formed of its members to study all the necessary methods for the attainment of economic integration between the two sister countries in various economic fields.

"These sub-committees were the Customs and Transit Sub-Committee; the Financial Affairs Sub-Committee; the Currency Affairs Sub-Committee; the Trade Affairs Sub-Committee; the Agricultural Development Sub-Committee; the Co-ordinating Sub-Committee for Industry, Planning and Oil Wealth; the Labour and Social Affairs Sub-Committee; the Economic Sub-Committee; and the Communications Sub-Committee.

"In addition, there was the tenth Sub-Committee entrusted with drawing up the international system for regulating the work and meetings of the Permanent Economic Co-ordination Committee.

"Each sub-committee has made important recommendations. The Customs and Transit Sub-Committee has recommended lifting import quota restrictions between the two countries; giving preference to importation of products of the two countries; encouraging the establishment of joint investing companies; and regarding manufactured products in which man-power and local raw materials represent 25 per cent of their production cost as homemade instead of the former 50 per cent principle.

"The Customs and Transit Sub-Committee has also recommended that the foreign commercial representation offices, trade centres and exhibitions of the two countries should work in full co-operation and direct contact in serving the two countries together. The import and export systems in the two countries should co-operate on a large scale and co-ordinate import and export operations in such a way as to avoid any competition between them on foreign markets and to ensure obtaining the best terms and prices.

"The Sub-Committee, in implementation of the Arab Summit Conference resolutions, has recommended that the two countries should reconsider their economic and commercial relations with all other countries in the light of their attitudes towards the legitimate Arab struggle against Zionist ambitions. They should also co-ordinate their economic policies vis-a-vis economic blocs.

"The Communications Sub-Committee has recommended large-scale co-operation between the Iraqi Marine Transport Company and the Egyptian General Marine Transport Organization as a nucleus for co-operation between the UAR and Iraqi merchant fleets. It has also recommended using the Baghdad-Amman-Aqaba-Suez-Cairo road as a means of linking the two countries geographically, despite the establishment of Israel as a barrier erected by imperialism to divide the Arab countries.

"The Economic Planning and Industrial Co-ordination Sub-Committees have recommended that the development plans in the two countries should be co-ordinated.

"The other Sub-Committees have made recommendations for the unification of legislation and systems, the co-ordination of agencies in the two countries, the exchange of experts, and the exchange of personnel for training in various fields in order to effect economic integration.

"Thus, the outcome of these meetings has laid the foundations of economic unity as a pillar for the political unity sought."

C. Nationalization Of Banks And Firms: The Government announced on July 14 that it was nationalizing banks (including two British branch banks), insurance companies and 32 leading industrial firms.

The announcement, by Lieut-Gen. Taher Yahya, the Prime Minister, over Baghdad radio, came on the sixth anniversary of the Revolution which overthrew the monarchy.

He said that employees of the nationalized companies would get 25 per cent of the profits in future.

Financial sources in Baghdad estimated that the total capital of the nine banks affected by the decree was about ID10 million (£10 million). The nationalized firms include cement works, textile factories, and import-export concerns. He said that owners of firms taken over would be given State bonds redeemable after 15 years.

He assured holders of accounts in nationalized banks that their deposits would not be affected and affirmed that, except for some amendments to the tax laws, the decrees represented "all the Government intends to promulgate in this case".

An economic organization with three departments would be set up to run the nationalized companies. He warned that any one convicted of sabotaging any of the nationalized firms could face the death penalty or hard labour for life.

In addition to the two British concerns —the British Bank of the Middle East and the Eastern Bank—other banks affected included the Credit Bank, formerly the Ottoman Bank, which has combined Anglo-Iraq capital.

Charter Of Arab Socialist Union:

President A. S. Arif later announced at a mass rally the Charter of Iraq's Arab Socialist Union, into which all Iraq parties and organizations will be merged.

Reviewing Arab history over the past few years, he said that the Suez campaign had been a turning point in contemporary Arab history. "Today we are on the threshold of the building stage."

He said the Charter was similar to that of the Egyptian Arab Socialist Union in asserting the faith in unity of thought, organization and common objectives of the Arab nation. (The Egyptian Arab Socialist Union is the one political organization permitted in the United Arab Republic.)

He added: "We consider the United Arab Republic the national liberation base in the Arab homeland and the nucleus of Arab unity".

D. Iraqi-Tunisian Economic Talks —Joint Communique: A joint communique on the economic talks between Iraq and Tunisia was issued in Tunis on July 6.

The communique said:

"As a result of the visit of Mr. Mongi Slim, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Tunisia, and Mr. Habib Bourguiba Jr., Minister of State for Presidential Affairs to Iraq last month, a joint communique was issued in Baghdad providing for sending an Iraqi economic delegation to Tunisia to discuss the possibilities of developing and increasing the size of commercial exchange between the two brotherly States, and the consolidation of brotherly relations existing between them.

"Accordingly, an Iraqi delegation visited Tunisia during the period between June 30-July 7, 1964. The Iraqi delegation held many meetings with the Tunisian delegation which was presided over by Mr. Bashir ar-Naji, Chief of the Diwan of the Minister of Planning and Finance, during which they reviewed the possibilities of developing economic co-operation between their countries. The Iraqi delegation visited the Ministry of Commerce, the Ministry of Grain, the Tunisian Navigation Company, Oil Refining Company, and other economic firms where they held similar talks. The delegation also met a great number of Tunisian exporters.

"In Tabarca city, the delegation was received by His Excellency Habib Bourguiba, the President of the Republic of Tunisia, in the presence of the Minister of Planning and Finance, and the Ambassador of the Republic of Iraq. The delegation put forward before the President the great possibilities available for economic co-operation between the two brotherly countries. The delegation also interviewed the Minister of Planning and Finance. They visited other Tunisian cities, i.e. Manzil Bourguiba, Bizerte, and Susa where they saw the Cotton Factory, and the Oil Factory at an-Nafidha. Then they visited Qairwan and Monastir.

"As a result of the contacts of the Iraqi delegation, it became clear that there were great possibilities for increasing commercial exchange between both countries, and that Iraq could import large quantities of Tunisian goods. The Iraqi party offered to extend any technical assistance the Republic of Tunisia wished to make use of, by deputation of technicians and experts. The Tunisian party welcomed the offer. The Iraqi party put forward the possibility of establishing co-operation between the Iraqi Maritime Transport Company, and the Tunisian Navigation Company by establishing a joint transport company, by opening joint navigation lines, and by co-operation in all transport and navigation affairs. The Tunisian party welcomed this offer too. It was decided that experts of both companies should study that proposal immediately. They also agreed to establish co-operation between insurance and re-insurance companies in both countries.

"To facilitate the import of Tunisian goods, the Iraqi party proposed that the Government Purchasing Service should represent Tunisian companies and establishments. The Tunisian party agreed. They also agreed to the proposal of establishing a commercial fair in co-operation with the Tunisian Ministry of Commerce in order to sell Tunisian goods at Iraqi markets. Both parties agreed to encourage participation in the fairs established by each of their countries.

"As an immediate measure for selling Tunisian goods at Iraqi markets, the Iraqi party expressed their readiness, through the Government Purchasing Service, to purchase Tunisian goods to the value of ID500,00 covering oil, olives, tomato paste, all kinds of juices, sardines, other canned food, and butter.

"The Iraqi party also expressed the readiness of its Government to give priority to Tunisian exports in importation. Among these exports are lead, zinc, cork, chemical fertilizers, batteries, bottles, wine, oils, hides, and high quality leather.

"It is expected that this will raise Iraqi imports to about ID1,000,000 next year. The Tunisian party requested the cancellation of the payment agreement concluded between both countries on January 28, 1960 so that payments between both countries could be settled in any exchangeable currency agreed upon by both parties.

"The Iraqi party agreed to cancel the above agreement, and to amend Article 7 of the Commercial Agreement so as to ensure settlement of payments, in free currency. In order to facilitate importation of Tunisian goods to Iraq and to ensure the privilege of customs exemption and discount, the Iraqi party stressed the importance of Tunisia's joining the Economic Agreement concluded within the frame-work of the Arab League, including the Agreement Facilitating Commercial Exchange And Regulating Transit Trade between nations of the Arab League, which granted exemptions and discounts in terms of customs charges imposed on goods exchanged between the member-countries, and because the Tunisian goods that could be imported to Iraq were provided in the exemption and discount tables annexed to the above Agreement. Until this proposal is fulfilled by Tunisia, the Iraqi party will take the necessary measures to grant Tunisian goods the same exemptions and discounts granted to the countries of the Arab League in accordance with the above Agreements.

"The Iraqi delegation also stressed the importance of joining the proposed Joint Arab Market on the part of Tunisia due to its important contribution to the standardization and co-ordination of foreign commercial policy of Tunisia, Iraq and the other Arab countries, so that these sisterly countries could enter the international market as one mass, a fact that would give Tunisian goods exported to the outside world a great competitive strength. The Tunisian party showed complete understanding of this issue which was under study by the Tunisian authorities concerned at the time.

"A protocol including the points agreed upon by both parties concerning the development of commercial exchanges between both countries and the settlement of payments in free currency was signed."

ISRAEL

A. International Trade Fair: The Tel Aviv International Trade Fair, 1964 ended its 19-day run on July 7 with the announcement that the next Fair would be held in 1966.

An average of 32,000 people visited the Fair each day it was open—23 per cent more than in 1962. There were participants from 40 countries, many more than last time. Sales totalling I£50,000,000 were made.

At a signal by President Zalman Shazar, a million watts of light went on over the 9th Tel Aviv International Trade Fair. An audience of over 2,000 invited guests including Ministers of State, members of the diplomatic corps, heads of public agencies and others watched as President Shazar pushed a button which illuminated the Flying Camel which was the emblem of the Fair.

The Fair was initiated in the 1930's and revived in 1962.

The Minister of Finance, Trade and Industry, Mr. Pinhas Sapir and the Mayor of Tel Aviv, Mr. Mordecai Namir, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Fair management welcomed the guests. Mayor Namir called the names of each of the 40 participating nations and the lights went on over the flagpoles of the 36 nations who were officially represented at the Fair. The Tel Aviv municipal youth-band marched around the podium as each of the exhibits was illuminated.

In his speech of welcome, Mayor Namir pointed out that this year's Fair was the largest held since the 'thirties, with 40 countries participating as compared with 33 in the 1962 Fair. He expressed regret at the non-participation of the Arab countries in the Middle East, whose efforts to have the Fair boycotted had not borne fruit. He hoped that the day would not be far off when the Arab nations, too, would contribute their share to this international venture, for the mutual benefit of all peoples of the region.

The Minister of Finance and Commerce and Industry, Mr. Pinhas Sapir, brought the Government's greetings. The large participation at the Fair attested to the power of attraction of the Israeli market. It also proved that Israel was an important factor in international trade and development, as well as a bridge between advanced nations and developing countries.

Welcoming participating nations and industrial enterprises. President Shazar announced the opening of the Fair, and a little later thousands of visitors began to stream into the 17 pavilions, where over 1,100 exhibitors were represented with a variety of goods in eight basic categories: machinery and metallurgy; development and building materials; electronics and electrical goods; agricultural equipment and products; vehicles and automotive equipment; textiles, leather and fashions; glass, ceramics, rubber and plastics; timber and furniture.

Participating countries included 19 European nations, nine from the Americas, four from Asia and eight from Africa. The US exhibit features the latest achievements in the electronic field and has at the entrance a full-scale model of a Mercury manned spacecraft, as well as Telstar and Relay II satellites. The French pavilion, which was three times larger than at the last Fair, exhibited, among other products, some of the best examples of the aeronautics and space industry. The pavilion of Canada, which took part for the first time, dramatized the use of nuclear energy for peace. The Latin American States, which do not ordinarily participate in fairs outside their continent, also made their debut at the 1964 Fair. West and Central African countries presented some of their raw materials, minerals and agricultural products. Many of these nations hoped to find out at the Fair where to get the investment goods for their development, while the industrialized nations expected to find new markets for their products.

Two-thirds of the exhibit area served as a showcase of a cross-section of Israel's industry, including production machinery, electronics, building materials, textiles and fashion goods, chemicals, cosmetics, food, furniture, household appliances, agricultural products and implements, and transport equipment for sea, air and land travel.

To implement business transactions, an Exhibitors Club was established and special buyers' days were held regularly. An Advisory Economic Committee, made up of Government officials and economic experts, stood ready to give advice. An international bazaar, exhibiting the national products of 17 nations, was the only place where the public at large could do some shopping. It offered for sale handicrafts from America, souvenirs from the Philippines, cosmetics from USA, toys and canned goods from Canada, Murano glass from Italy, home-crafts from the Arab villages in Israel and a new edition of the Bible.

Other attractions included a Swiss cable-car swaying over the exhibit grounds, go-cars for driving fans, the Camel Night Club and a 2,000-seat amphitheatre.

JAPAN

A. Sino-Soviet Ideological Dispute —Communist Party Supports China: Statements were published in Moscow and Tokyo on July 19 by the Communist Parties of USSR and Japan accusing each other of slander and attempting to break up the Communist movement.

The Japanese Communist statement came after the publication by Tass of letters sent by the Soviet Party Central Committee to the Japanese Party.

The Soviet letters said that a delegation of Japanese Communists had visited Moscow only a year after being invited and then "avoided a frank talk" and refused to discuss the joint struggle against world imperialism and a concerted line of action on other important questions.

Accusing the Soviet Party of "distributing slanderous materials to reactionary factions backed by the United States," the Japanese statement said that the Russians had "started the process of disintegration of the international communist movement."

The statement said that the Japanese delegation had been delayed by elections in Japan, and frank discussions had not been possible because the delegation had "no authority... to make frank expressions about the international Communist movement as a whole."

The delegation had been sent only to discuss the partial nuclear test ban Treaty and did not refuse to talk about the anti-imperialist struggle. It had not signed a joint communique because the Soviet Party "tried to force us to issue a joint communique which had nothing to do with the content of our talks...."

The Japanese statement of July 15 was issued after a meeting of Communist workers in Tokyo. It said the Soviet Union had broken an agreement made in Moscow to refrain from publicising matters between the two parties by revealing the contents of the Soviet Party's letters.

The statement, which the Japanese said had been sent to the Soviet Party, said: "What you really want is for us to... unconditionally obey your edicts and follow your opinions. But you have no right to request any such thing. We firmly reject your unjust and unprincipled request."

On July 24, the Japan Communist Party made further polemical attacks on the Soviet leadership, especially Mr. Khruschev for the first time.

The accusation in the sharpest words was contained in two articles printed on four full pages of the newspaper Akahata (Red Flag).

The articles said "it was Mr. Khruschev who opposed the partial nuclear test ban Treaty three years ago. But later he changed his course by making compromise with US imperialism".

The Russians had accused the Japanese Communist Party of opposing the anti-nuclear Treaty signed by Russia, Britain and the United States.

The articles said the Soviet Communist Party had interfered in the internal affairs of the Japan Communist Party by supporting its "anti-party elements."

The Japan Communist Party had expelled two of its leaders—Mr. Yosvio Shiga and Mr. Ichizo Suzuki from the party recently for voting in favour of ratification of the tripartite Test Ban Treaty in the Japanese Parliament.

The paper said the Soviet leaders had increased their attacks on Japanese Communist Party leaders, "trampling down fraternal relations between the two parties and strengthening a policy of splitting the international Communist movement."

Soon after the Sino-Soviet confrontation flared into the open early in 1963, the Japan Communist Party tried to tread an uneasy middle path. Subsequently, however, it has leaned more towards Peking. Mr. Mao Tse-tung has long been the inspiration for Mr. Sanzo Nozaka and other Communist leaders in Japan. Many years before and during the War Mr. Nozaka was in exile at Mr. Mao's headquarters and returned to Japan only after the War.

The total elimination of pro-Soviet elements from positions of leadership in the Japan Party came with the purging of veteran pro-Soviet leaders Mr. Shiga and Mr. Suzuki last Spring.

JORDAN

A. New Cabinet: A Beirut message on July 7 said that a new Cabinet had been formed.

This time King Hussein had chosen again Mr. Bahjat Talhouni, who was Prime Minister from August, 1960 to January, 1962. His predecessor was assassinated. Mr. Talhouni has remained close to the King in the Palace post of Chief of the Royal Cabinet, and since King Hussein attended the Arab "Summit" Conference in Cairo in January Mr. Talhouni has represented him at further talks and meetings there.

In a statement in Amman on July 7, Mr. Talhouni said his Government's policy would continue to be "in accordance with the spirit of the Arab Summit Conference and based on King Hussein's instruction".

Sherif Hussain bin Nasser, the outgoing Prime Minister, became in turn head of the Royal Cabinet. He took over a "caretaker" administration in May, 1963, and formed a Government the following July. He had held office longer than it was thought his health would allow and had lately returned from a holiday in Europe.

Among five new-comers in the Cabinet was Mr. Kadri Toukan, Minister for Foreign Affairs. Mr. Toukan is a professor better known in academic and scientific life than in politics and has had an association with Nablus College, on what is now the west bank of the Jordan, which goes back to Palestine mandate days. He is a member of the Egyptian Academy of Sciences and the good relations both he and Mr. Talhouni have with Egypt point to what King Hussein partly has in mind.

Mr. Toukan's predecessor as Foreign Minister was Mr. Anton Atallah, managing director of a real estate bank, who had been in office only a short time. He had recently visited capitals abroad as part of a chain of travels by Arab Foreign Ministers to try to enlist more support against Israel.

B. Field-Marshal A. H. Amer's Visit: UAR's First Vice-President, F-M A. H. Amer paid a visit to Jordan from July 14 to 16.

Waiving protocol formalities, King Hussein greeted F-M Amer on his arrival at Amman airport along with members of the Cabinet. A 21-gun salute was fired as the Field-Marshal got down the plane accompanied by 12 officers and civilians. King Hussein had sent a special mission of honour to Cairo which accompanied the Field-Marshal.

On the first day of his visit, F-M Amer met a number of officers at the Army Headquarters and attended a dinner given in his honour by King Hussein.

The following day, he visited the holy places in Jerusalem and frontier villages, accompanied by the King, with whom he had a prolonged exchange of views regarding matters of common interest.

F-M Amer's Statement:

When F-M Amer left Amman for Cairo at the end of his visit, he made the following statement:

"I last visited Jordan about seven years ago. During my latest visit I saw for myself great changes, obvious expansion, construction and progress in all fields.

"His Majesty the King has taken good care of us during our stay in Jordan, and we look upon him as a friend and brother. The mutual sincerity on Arab objectives between Jordan and the UAR has been obvious since the convening of the Summit Conference and the meeting between President Gamal Abdul Nasser and King Hussein.

"I believe that this close co-operation between Jordan and the UAR will continue and grow. The Jordanians are a staunch people convinced of their objectives. So long as Arab objectives are sincere and people believe in their mission, they will be successful. I believe that we have started along the right path.

"The people of the UAR and its Government support the people of Jordan to the furthest extent conceivable—in every field, especially in the face of the Zionist danger. It is inconceivable that Jordan could be left to fight Zionism single-handed. It is inconceivable that the UAR will not support it (Jordan) from the first moment.

"The co-operation which has begun between the two peoples and between the leaders in the two countries will be for the benefit of all Arabs. This statement will be put into actual effect, it is not just high-sounding words. All the Arab peoples will see the result."

On his way home, he sent the following cable to King Hussein:

"Brother, His Majesty King Hussein, of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan.

"In my name and in the name of the members of the UAR delegation, it pleases me to thank you for the great hospitality and sincere brotherhood expressed by Your Majesty personally, and by the Government and the brotherly Jordanian people."

C. Settlement Of Bedouin—Agreement With FAO: The Jordan Government and the UN Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) signed on June 22 an Agreement to co-operate in carrying out an experimental programme aimed at the settlement of Bedouin families in the south of Jordan.

FAO, under the World Food Programme, is to contribute $521,000 to provide food and cattle fodder and wages for the Bedouin workers. Underground water in the Jafr desert is to be used to reclaim land for agriculture.

The Agreement also provides means for the improvement of methods of sheep breeding by maintaining a stock of fodder to be used in dry seasons.

E. Canaanite City Discovered: The Minister for Information, Mr. Salah Abu Zeid, announced in Amman on July 26 that an American archaeological team, led by Mr. Joseph Galloway, had discovered a walled Canaanite city dating to 1,200 BC, north of Jerusalem.

Mr. Zeid said that the finds and the results of the excavations proved that the city was Canaanite.

The excavation site is 12 miles north of Jerusalem and near Deirdabwan village. The masonry of the Canaanite city was of the Bronze Age, and buildings included a temple and a palace.

KOREA (South)

A. Martial Law Lifted: Martial Law imposed on June 3 by President Park Chung Hee was lifted on July 29, but informed sources said it did not mean that the situation had become normal.

The measure was taken because of the insistence of the National Assembly, which had grown strong enough to influence policy decisions by the Executive.

No basic solution had been worked out during the nearly two months of military rule. Commodity prices continued to rise while popular resentment and dissatisfaction grew deeper under military rule, even though no violent reaction was discernible.

Both the majority and Opposition political parties had joined forces to bring pressure upon the administration. Never had South Korean politicians co-operated so closely as they did this time.

KUWAIT

A. Relations With Japan: A Ministerial source said on July 15 that Kuwait had decided not to provide any further facilities to the Japanese-Arabian Oil Company which operates in the neutral zone between Kuwait and Saudi Arabia.

However, the source added, the Kuwait Government had not decided to boycott Japanese trade as reported locally and abroad.

The source said that the decision against the Japanese-Arabian Company was taken in view of Japan's "pro-Israel sympathy".

About 700 employees, including 105 Japanese, work for the Company. The source said in future if the Company submitted a tender and another company submitted a similar one, the Japanese one would be rejected. Certain facilities at present given to Japanese employees of the Company would now be stopped.

The source said that a large number of Kuwaiti traders had decided to restrict their trade with Japan in future because of her "hostile attitude to the Arabs."

Another official source said Kuwait at present traded with Japan on a large scale and Japanese goods were flooding the Kuwait market.

A Kuwaiti newspaper said that the Arab League had advised Kuwait to give Japan another chance to explain the alleged unfriendly treatment of the Kuwait Foreign Minister in Tokyo in April.

The English language Kuwait Times, quoting authoritative sources, said the Emirate had decided to delay a demand for pan-Arab action.

Earlier, Kuwaiti Press reports had said the Government had ordered "all forms of economic, technical and commercial" dealings with Japan to stop. The Kuwaiti Government felt Japan's attitude towards the Foreign Minister, Sheikh Sabah al Ahmad al Jabbah called for collective Arab retaliation.

But it added that Arab League member-States felt positive action should not be taken until all other steps were exhausted, and thus advised Kuwait to give the Japanese explanations "some more chance of success."

Meanwhile in Tokyo, the Foreign Ministry said it was embarrassed by reports that the Kuwaiti Government was suspending economic relations with Japan. A spokesman called the affair "a complete misunderstanding", and said that all protocol had been observed during the visit.

An economic boycott could deal a serious blow to Japan, especially if applied to Japan's offshore oil concession from Kuwait which produces an average of 36 million barrels a year. However, Japan's Arabian Oil Company, which runs the Kuwait concession, said it had heard nothing to indicate its operations would be affected. Japanese exports to Kuwait average $25 million annually.

The Japanese Ministry spokesman said the visiting dignitary was met by Japan's Vice-Foreign Minister and other officials at Tokyo airport as called for in such situations.

The visiting Sheikh was received in audience by the Emperor and Empress, and conferred with the Foreign Minister, Mr. Masayoshi Ohira at the latter's office for 45 minutes. The Sheikh said he got only 10 minutes.

Officials in Tokyo speculated that one reason for the Sheikh's reported displeasure may have been that April 29, the day after his arrival, was a Japanese national holiday, as a result of which no programme had been arranged for him.

LAOS

A. New Pathet Lao Offensive: The Ministry of National Defence announced on July 16 that Pathet Lao forces had launched an offensive against Muong Soui, the principal neutralist stronghold in north-central Laos.

The Ministry said that Pathet Lao forces, supported by North Viet-Namese troops, had crossed the Nam Ngum river and were driving westward on Muong Soui. Four battalions were said to have been involved in the attack.

Muong Soui guards the approaches to the road net-work leading south to Vientiane, the administrative capital, and north to Luang Prabang, the Royal Capital.

General Kong Lae, the neutralist military commander, made Muong Soui his main base since his troops were swept westward off the Plain of Jars by the Pathet Lao offensive launched in the middle of May. The position was being held by 2,500 neutralist troops, supported by a number of light, Soviet-made tanks.

The statement said Laotian T-28 fighter-bombers were attacking the Pathet Lao forces.

Earlier, the Prime Minister, Prince Souvanna Phouma, said in an interview that he no longer had any hope of arranging peace talks with Pathet Lao. For several weeks he had exchanged messages with Prince Souphanouvong, the Pathet Lao leader, on the possibility of arranging a summit meeting to discuss terms for sending a unified Laotian delegation to a conference of the 14 nations that signed the 1962 Geneva Agreement on Laos.

The US Ambassador, Mr. Leonard Ungr, said his country might give military support to the forces defending Muong Soui. But he stressed that American action would be based on the developments.

In the following few weeks, the battle continued and many positions changed hands several times. Prince Souvanna Phouma said on July 19 that Neutralist forces, under the command of Gen. Amkha Tukhavong, had launched an attack against Pathet Lao forces in the Muong Soui sector.

He said that according to initial but unconfirmed reports, the Neutralists might have recaptured Phou Koutt hill, about six miles north of Muong Soui.

Russian Proposal For Geneva Conference:

The Soviet Union on July 26 called for a new Geneva Conference on Laos in August and said she was reviewing the question of continuing as co-Chairman of the existing Geneva Agreement on Laos.

Britain is the other co-Chairman of the 1962 Conference which reached agreement on keeping Laos neutral. The Soviet announcement came on the eve of a visit to Moscow by the British Foreign Secretary, Mr. R. A. Butler.

The announcement on Moscow Radio said the Soviet Government had suggested a meeting of the 14 Governments which signed the Geneva Agreement to discuss "immediate measures" to bring about a peaceful settlement.

It said that US interference in Laos had caused "extreme aggravation" and the Geneva Agreement was in danger of being undermined.

It said: "In connexion with the continuing deterioration of the situation in Laos, the Soviet Government, as one of the parties to the Geneva Agreements on Laos, deems it to be its duty to call the attention of all the signatories of the above-said Agreements to the following:

"It is becoming more and more obvious of late that some States have embarked upon the road of gross interference in the internal affairs of Laos and of violating the Geneva Agreements, which, as it is known, commit their signatories to respect the independence and neutrality of Laos.

"Contrary to the Geneva Agreements, the United States maintains in Laos its military personnel, various military and semi-military organizations and services, while continuing to render unilateral military aid to the reactionary forces of the country. With the help of the United States these forces staged a coup de force in Vientiane this April, which brought to a head the political situation within the country, paralyzed the activities of the coalition Government, whose establishment in itself constituted a success on the road to the implementation of the principles underlying the Geneva Agreements. This threatened to foil completely the Agreements signed in Geneva.

"Grossly violating the sovereignty of Laos, the American Air Force overflies the territory of the country for purposes of reconnaissance, bombs and strafes areas controlled by the Pathet Lao. Repeated calls of the Soviet Government, as a co-Chairman of the Geneva Conference on Laos, to the United States Government, urging it to discontinue interference in the internal affairs of Laos and violation of the Geneva Agreements, were of no avail. Despite the numerous repeated calls of the co-Chairmen, talks have still not been resumed between the three political forces of Laos on a peaceful settlement in the country in conformity with the Geneva Agreements.

"The Soviet Government was the first to support the proposal of the Head of the Cambodian State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, on the calling of the new 14-nation international conference on Laos. Considering the tense situation in Laos, the Soviet Government proposed to convene this meeting at Geneva in June, 1964. However, at that time the proposal to call a conference did not meet the support of the United States and some other nations.

"The proposal of the Polish People's Republic to hold consultations with the participation of the three political forces with the purpose of preparing a new international conference on Laos has also been rejected under different groundless pretexts.

"The Soviet Government can no longer put up with a situation when the Geneva Agreements on Laos are being torpedoed, when some of their signatories avoid the discussion of the obtaining dangerous situation in Laos, which threatens the peace and security of not only this country, but of all the South-East Asian region. This stand is dictated by the fact that under the existing conditions the co-Chairmen of the Geneva Conference are placed in a false position, which prevents them from discharging their functions.

"The Soviet Government, therefore, addresses all the Governments that have signed the Geneva Agreements on Laos with the proposal to call this August a 14-nation international conference on Laos to discuss the urgent measures which would guarantee a peaceful settlement in Laos, conforming to the Geneva Agreements of 1962, strict and unswerving fulfilment of these Agreements by all the States concerned. Such a meeting could be held in Geneva or in another city acceptable to all the participants of the conference. This new proposal is dictated by the sincere desire to contribute to the implementation of the Geneva Agreements.

"The Soviet Union is ready, as always, to promote all efforts aimed at accelerating the calling of the above-said international meeting. A negative attitude of other States to this proposal will place the Soviet Government in a position where it will be compelled to consider the question of the possibility of the Soviet Union discharging the functions of co-Chairman, inasmuch as the role of co-Chairmen is being rendered useless and fictitious by the gross and systematic violations of the Geneva Agreements by some States."

American Opposition:

The US State Department re-iterated on July 27 that it could see no useful purpose in a new 14-nation conference on Laos until the fighting there stopped and Pathet Lao forces withdrew to the positions they had held before their mid-May offensive.

Asked for the Department's reaction to the Soviet call for a new Geneva Conference, the Press Officer, Mr. Richard Phillips said that the Soviet Charge d'Affaires had delivered a copy of the Soviet declaration to the Under-Secretary, Mr. George W. Ball.

"We are studying the communication," Mr. Phillips said. "We note that it does not take into account the known position of Prime Minister Souvanna Phouma which we support—that a cease-fire and a Pathet Lao withdrawal to previously-held positions are prerequisites. The Pathet Lao have rejected the Prime Minister's reasonable proposals for a tripartite meeting to discuss these two important points."

British Stand:

Britain told the Soviet Union on July 29 that she would co-sponsor a 14-nation conference on Laos provided new efforts were made to stabilize the situation there.

Authoritative sources said a British message delivered to the Soviet Foreign Ministry on instructions from Mr. Butler listed three main conditions for a conference:

(1) Establishment of a united Government under Prince Souvanna Phouma, the Neutralist Prime Minister;

(2) A cease-fire in Laos; and

(3) The return of rival Laotian troops to positions held in February.

The Soviet Union promised to study the new British call for a cease-fire.

A breakdown of the Geneva Powers on the question of convening a conference immediately shows that those in favour are Russia, France, China, India, Poland, Burma, Cambodia and North Viet-Nam.

The views of South Viet-Nam and Thailand coincide with USA. Canada, like the British, would like to have a conference but obviously does not want to displease the United States, Prince Souvanna Phouma would wish the pre-conditions to be fulfilled.

According to observers quoted in Western Press reports, Russian insistence on a conference may be due to Soviet embarrassment in not being able to exert any influence on Pathet Lao leaders who were stated to prefer heeding Peking rather than Moscow.

ITSC Report:

The International Truce Supervisory Commission (ITSC) for Laos in a majority report dated June 20 expressed concern about the consequences that could flow from the recent changes in military postures of the opposing forces in Laos. They would almost inevitably lead to open civil war.

The text of the report along with related documents was issued by the British Foreign Office on July 24. The report was approved by the Indian and Canadian members of the Commission, but not by the Polish member who did not take part in its formulation.

As for investigating the allegations regarding the presence of Communist Viet-Minh forces alongside the pro-Communist Pathet Lao, the report said the Commission was again hampered by the persistent refusal by the Pathet Lao to permit it to enter its territory except under very strictly controlled conditions.

"This denial leads the Commission to infer that the Pathet Lao has something to hide. Otherwise freedom of entry and movement within the Pathet Lao area would be readily granted."

New Delhi As Venue For Talks—Proposal Rejected:

A Vientiane report said on July 22 that the Pathet Lao leader, Prince Souphanouvong, had rejected the proposal of Prince Souvanna Phouma that a conference of the leaders of the three factions—Rightist, Neutralist and Pathet Lao—be held in New Delhi.

Prince Souphanouvong, in a letter dated July 20, said that New Delhi "is not at all suitable" for the meeting and reminded Premier Souvanna of a Pathet Lao proposal of Pnom Penh or Djakarta.

Prince Souvanna had refused the Pathet Lao proposal in a letter to Prince Souphanouvong on July 2 and proposed New Delhi.

Prince Souphanouvong in a telegram said the spirit of the meeting was more important than the choice of place.

On July 27, the Pathet Lao leaders asked for the immediate withdrawal of the Indian medical team from Laos.

A New China News Agency message said that the Pathet Lao had urged India (Chairman of the International Commission) "to renounce its position of satisfying the wishes of USA".

It must "correctly discharge its duty" as Chairman, said the statement, issued by the Central Committee of the Neo Lao Haksat, the political arm of the Pathet Lao.

The statement also called on Britain to discharge "correctly" its duty as co-Chairman of the Geneva Conference.

It accused Britain of "collaborating with and following USA in interfering in the internal affairs of Laos".

It also demanded the speedy convocation of a 14-nation conference on Laos. "In the face of the attempt of US imperialism and its lackeys to rekindle the war on a nation-wide scale, the most urgent and practical question is to reconvene the 14-nation conference to settle the Laotian question peacefully."

B. Soviet Proposal For 14-Nation Conference—Chinese Support: In a Note to the Soviet Union on August 2 supporting Moscow's call for a 14-nation conference (see above), China said it "hopes the Soviet Government will truly shoulder its responsibilities as a co-Chairman of the Geneva Conference."

China in its Note urged the Soviet Union to persuade the United States to drop its "unreasonable conditions" for 14-nation conference. (Russia had proposed an unconditional conference in August of the 14 signatories to the Geneva Agreements of 1962 guaranteeing the neutrality of Laos. At the same time it said it was reviewing the question of continuing as co-Chairman—with Britain—of the Geneva Conference because of the "negative stand" of other States).

The Note said Russia should also try to persuade Britain to return to an attitude "in keeping with its position as co-Chairman". (The United States and Britain have said the conference should be held only after a cease-fire and a withdrawal of the pro-Communist Pathet Lao forces in Laos).

British Move:

The British Foreign Secretary, Mr. R. A. Butler, said on August 1 that Britain had asked India, Poland and Canada to try to arrange a meeting of the rival Laotian factions in a suitable neutral territory.

He told a Moscow news conference that he had asked India to take the initiative.

He said it was his earnest hope that Britain and the Soviet Union would "find a way to continue our co-operation" over Laos. "We have no British interests in Laos. We simply have an interest in not allowing this problem to spread into world war."

"I would like to stress the importance of the Soviet Union and Britain working together, as we have done in the last ten years."

He said Anglo-Soviet co-operation in Laos had twice averted a real threat of war and "I want this co-operation to continue."

MALAYSIA

A. Tengku Abdul Rehman's Visit To USA: The Prime Minister, Tengku Abdul Rehman, paid a visit to Washington from July 21 to 23.

A communique issued at the end of the visit said that President L. B. Johnson, with whom the Tengku had held talks, re-affirmed US support to Malaysia.

Before leaving for USA, the Tengku told a news conference in London on July 21: "I am not going specifically to ask for aid. If Americans could be a little more firm with Indonesia and, perhaps, give Indonesia sufficient warning of the consequences if they go over in a big way to open warfare with a country that has given them no reason for aggression, it would be a good thing for us.

"In a country like America, which is sympathetic to us, they should make it known in no uncertain way their feeling in this matter. Canada has always shown a great deal of interest in what is happening in Malaysia."

He said that in Canada, which had given Malaysia technical aid, he would buy "small jet planes for reconnaissance," but, if Canada offered a few by way of aid "I would be most happy." "I think Mr. Pearson will be interested to do a little bit more in this question of our resistance to Indonesian aggression."

He said he had no plan at the moment to ask Australia for additional aid. "Australia has been very, very good to us. Whatever I have wanted they have never failed to give." At the moment, Malaysia had asked for and Australia had provided technicians and military engineers, who were building roads and bridges in the Borneo jungles.

Asked if Malaysia envisaged "something more formidable" than engineers if President Sukarno stepped up his aggression, he replied: "We are in constant consultation with Australia. Everything that we have so far discussed with Australia has been very fruitful. I don't think aid from Australia is becoming a problem with us. I think the Australians realize more than anybody else what would happen to that part of the world if Malaysia falls."

In Washington on July 22, the Tengku told another news conference that President Johnson had offered to train Malaysian troops in USA.

He said he had accepted the offer during a conference in which he and the President discussed Indonesia's "confrontation" policy.

He also disclosed that he had asked the President to allow Malaysia to buy jet aircraft for reconnaissance and training purposes, large helicopters to transport troops in the jungle warfare area, and landing craft.

The Tengku said that details were being discussed between USA and Malaysian Defence Secretaries. No decision had yet been taken on the number of Malaysians to be trained in USA.

He feared that the Indonesian threat against Malaysia would take another turn now that President Sukarno had secured the help of the Soviet Union. "They (the Indonesians) are going to use regular troops and modern weapons and spread infiltration in new areas. That should be a matter of concern not only for us but for all the free world."

Joint Communique:

The following is the text of the joint communique issued on July 23 at the conclusion of the talks between Tengku Abdul Rehman and President Johnson:

"The President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Malaysia met on July 22 and 23 to discuss matters of mutual interest and recent developments in South-East Asia.

"President Johnson and Prime Minister Tengku Abdul Rehman welcomed this, their first meeting, and the opportunity it presented to become personally acquainted and to review major problems in South-East Asia.

"The President and the Prime Minister discussed the Communist threat to and activities in Laos and Viet-Nam and reaffirmed their support of the cause of freedom in those countries.

"The President noted with appreciation the contribution Malaysia has made to the common cause in Viet-Nam by providing equipment, training and advice based on her own experience in combating Communist terrorism.

"In turn the President made clear that all South-East Asian countries, including Malaysia could rely on the firm intent of the United States to resist Communist aggression against free Asian nations.

"The Primé Minister reviewed developments in Malaysia with the President and progress made thus far in furthering the economic and social progress of its people.

"The Prime Minister also expressed appreciation for the contribution of American Peace Corps volunteers in this task.

"The President informed the Prime Minister of his special interest in Malaysia's impressive achievements in the fields of education, economic growth and rural development.

"The President noted with admiration the Prime Minister's objective of a happy and prosperous nation upholding the principles of justice, freedom and democracy.

"The Prime Minister outlined for the President the origins of the Malaysia concept and the history of its formation, and in this context reviewed the current activities by a neighbouring State in violation of the territorial integrity of Malaysia.

"The Prime Minister recounted his determined and various efforts to seek an amicable and honourable solution to the problem, including the report of the tripartite meeting in Tokyo.

"He also informed the President of the discussions at the recent Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference in London.

"The President re-affirmed the support of the United States for a free and independent Malaysia, and for Malaysia's efforts to maintain her security, preserve her sovereignty and continue her development in peace and harmony.

"The President agreed to provide military training in the United States for Malaysian personnel, and to consider promptly and sympathetically credit sales, under existing arrangements, of appropriate military equipment for the defence of Malaysia.

"The President expressed his strong hope that a peaceful and honourable way out of the current and dangerous situation could be found, and his appreciation for the earnest endeavours of the Prime Minister to this end.

"The President and the Prime Minister agreed that while firmness in self-defence is indispensable, it is better to talk than fight.

"The President and the Prime Minister found in the common devotion of the United States and Malaysia to the principles of democratic government and individual freedom a bond of understanding which is cementing their two countries into a constantly closer relationship, and agreed to maintain close contact on problems of mutual interest."

Indonesian Reaction:

The Indonesian Foreign Minister, Dr. R. Subandrio, said in Djakarta on July 25 that Indonesia wished to maintain good relations with USA, but this would depend upon the US attitude to Malaysia.

He was speaking to newsmen following a meeting with the American Charge d'Affaires at which he discussed the visit to USA of Tengku Abdul Rehman.

ANZUS Support:

Earlier, on July 20, Malaysia welcomed the assistance promised by the ANZUS countries—the United States, Australia, and New Zealand —in the event of her territorial integrity being violated.

A communique issued after an ANZUS Council of Ministers' two-day conference in Washington did not refer to Indonesia, but there was no doubt in official circles that it was a warning to President Sukarno that Malaysia had not only Commonwealth support and sympathy but also that of the United States.

Tun Abdul Razak, the Deputy Prime Minister, said in Kuala Lumpur that the ANZUS pledge was a great encouragement and he welcomed President Johnson's reported offer to train Malaysian troops in the United States. He added that it was unfair for Russia to offer Indonesia arms to commit aggression.

Indonesian Operations:

Meanwhile, a despatch in The Times (London) said on July 21 that Indonesian military operations against the Borneo territories of Malaysia had moved into a new and potentially dangerous phase.

Major-General W. C. Walker, Director of the Borneo Operations, told The Times correspondent that since the break-down of the Tokyo talks troops of the Indonesian regular Army were being committed to action on a much larger scale.

Instead of sending large and badly organized parties of volunteers, they were now carrying out attacks on villages a few miles inside Sabah (North Borneo) and Sarawak, using groups of 40 or more well-trained troops, often almost entirely regular. When they came into contact with the security forces they operate with great skill and dash, displaying a sound knowledge of British tactical method.

Meanwhile, President Sukarno was reported in Kuala Lumpur to have issued orders to his Navy to sink Malaysian fishing craft and trading vessels in the Straits of Malacca.

Antara, the Indonesian official news agency, was quoted as stating that great concern had been expressed in Djakarta over reports that large amounts of Indonesian rubber were still reaching Malaysian ports. Plans were being made to impose heavy penalties for smuggling, which was described as being an offence against the Indonesian revolution.

B. Race Riots In Singapore: Singapore was shaken by racial riots between its Malay and Chinese communities for three days from July 21. By the time peace was restored, 21 persons had been killed and about 1,700 arrested.

The cause of the riot was disputed. The Singapore Premier, Mr. Lee Kuan Yew said it was due to stragglers being asked by a policeman following the Prophet Mohammed's birthday procession, to keep to the procession.

The acting Malaysian Premier, Tun Abdul Razak, said it was due to someone throwing a bottle at the procession of Muslims.

The riot was the first to involve two communities of Singapore. Earlier riots were religious, industrial and communist. In 1950, there was a riot over a Muslim girl joining a convent. It was a riot between Muslims (Indian and Malay) and Christians (the British and the Eurasians). In 1955, there was a riot triggered by an industrial dispute between a bus company and an extremist trade union. In 1956, students rioted. In 1957, there was Island-wide pro-Communist riots. The latest one claimed the largest number of killed and has involved Malays and Chinese.

In Singapore's population of 17,50,000, about 14,00,000 are Chinese, 1,40,000 Malays, 1,10,000 Indians and about 1,00,000 others. Chinese command top positions in business and they are also strong in trade and professions, trade unions and public services. Indians are mostly workers in the harbour board, public works and other technical and clerical services.

Malays are mostly poor; not many are highly educated; only a few are in good positions in the Government or business. But Malays are the indigenous people and they have special rights in Singapore.

In the Singapore Constitution, it is enjoined that the Government should "carry out its responsibilities by recognizing the special rights of the Malays who are indigenous people of this country and (that) it is the responsibility of the Government to defend, protect, assist in promoting and improving the political, educational, religious, economic, social and cultural interests of the Malays as well as their language."

In Malaya, the Malays enjoy some special privileges. Certain trades, if necessary, can be reserved for them. Land can also be reserved for Malays. In Singapore, while they have special rights, they do not have special privileges.

In Malaya, the Government is a coalition of the United Malay National Organization (UMNO, as the senior partner), the Malayan Chinese Association (MCA) and the Malayan Indian Congress (MIC). Communal harmony and the special privileges of Malays are recognized both in practice and in theory by the majority of the Chinese community in Malaya and by the Indian community.

In Singapore, the ruling party, the People's Action Party (PAP) is predominantly Chinese in membership (reflecting the population), but has also members from Malay and Indian communities. Mr. Lee has described his party as non-communal and socialist. In Singapore too, as in Malaya, for practical purposes, communal distinctions have been taken into account as in choosing candidates in elections and membership in the Cabinet.

While racial harmony in Malaya has been built on the recognition of Malays as the sons of the land (Anak Negara), in Singapore, racial harmony has been kept up by avoiding any open propaganda on racialist lines, even during elections. Racial feelings have, however, been felt more strongly in Singapore than in Malaya, but have not been so far expressed in violent eruptions because of the acceptance of the fact that Singapore is predominantly Chinese.

But for some time, especially since the formation of Malaysia and more recently after the entry of the PAP into the Malayan Parliament and its associations with Malayan parties which plead for the Chinese and are against the special position of the Malays, the Malays in Singapore have been thinking seriously about their special rights. Malayan parties like the UMNO, MCA and MIC have their branches in Singapore. While MCA and MIC are not very active in their work in Singapore, the UMNO branches in Singapore have been becoming stronger.

A few weeks ago, at a special meeting of the UMNO branches and Malay leaders in Singapore, the UMNO national Secretary-General, Mr. Syed Albar, charged the PAP with splitting the Malays. (In the 1959 Singapore elections, Malays elected to the Legislative Assembly were UMNO candidates. In the 1964 elections, the Malays elected were PAP candidates). Mr. Albar also said that Mr. Lee's Government was more in favour of the Chinese than the Malays and that Malay special rights were ineffectual. The meeting formed a 'Malay Action Committee'.

Mr. Lee, a week later met representatives of Malay cultural organizations. (He wanted to meet representatives of Malay political organizations later). At the meeting, Mr. Lee said that since the beginning of the Indonesian confrontation, there had been intensive propaganda to cause friction between Malays and Chinese and that for 'diverse reasons' the UMNO joined the propaganda.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mr. Lee said: "We have done nothing which is dishonourable or wrong to the Malays. The Government's decision will have to be based on a balance of all interests, that of the special position of Malays and also the legitimate interests of the 90 per cent non-Malays in Singapore which is also the duty of the Government to advance." After explaining what the Government has done to the Malays, in the fields of education, housing and labour, Mr. Lee also pointed out that "the imbalance in the speed of development in the different communities will take a whole generation to redress."

"There must be a limit," he said, "to UMNO's political propaganda because they are in charge of the whole country, as they are the Central Government. Therefore, if they go beyond the limit, the country will break up and collapse. However, I am bewildered when I see that UMNO has formed a 'Malay Action Committee,' which includes Pan Malayan Islamic Party extremists and racists....It is the intention of this Government to do what is right and fair, and we will not be intimidated from doing our best in looking after the interests of the people of Singapore, including the Malays who have under our Constitution a special position."

Tun Abdul Razak, who flew into Singapore the day following the riots to study the situation first hand, held talks with Mr. Lee and Malay leaders. Later, he said the riots were not racial. He was not sure of Indonesian influences in the riots.

Tengku Abdul Rehman's Allegation:

The Malaysian Prime Minister, Tengku Abdul Rehman, who was on a visit to USA at the time of the riots, blamed Indonesia for the racial violence.

Appearing on a televised interview on July 23, he declared that the Singapore riots had brought about "one of the unhappiest moments of my life." "It appears to me that it is more than a coincidence that this has happened at a time when we are meeting Indonesian aggression. Perhaps we can put two and two together and think that there is a third party behind the clashes in Singapore."

Asked if he was suggesting that Indonesia was provoking the riots, he replied: "I have some evidence to prove my statement."

He said that before Malaysia broke off diplomatic relations with Indonesia, the Indonesian Ambassador and the entire Embassy in Kuala Lumpur "had gone around trying to provoke a clash between the Chinese and Malays in Kuala Lumpur." "Nothing came out of it, but now it happens while I am away from home."

MONGOLIA (Outer)

A. Charge Against China: The Communist Party leadership has sent a letter to Peking accusing the Chinese of betraying the proletariat revolution.

The letter from the Central Committee of the Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party sent on July 2 said that the splitting activities of the Chinese leaders were not mere errors of delusions. They were due to the "narrow nationalistic aims" of the Chinese leaders, who wished to see themselves in a position of supremacy in the world Communist and the revolutionary movement.

The Chinese activities could not be described except "as an open betrayal of the cause of the proletarian revolution and of the struggle against imperialism" and "as the greatest crime against the world proletariat and the international Communist movement."

It advocated the holding of meetings between the Chinese and the Soviet Communist Parties and the holding of a preparatory conference of all the 26 fraternal parties as soon as possible.

PAKISTAN

A. US Loan For Import Of Iron And Steel: The largest single-purpose $100,000,000 loan ever made by USA to Pakistan was signed in Karachi on July 13. The loan will enable Pakistan to import iron, steel and other commodities.

The loan will particularly benefit the private sector. Approximately $80 million of the $100 million proceeds will go to the private industrial and commercial concerns. The remaining $20 million will be utilized by Pakistan Governmental and semi-Governmental agencies. Major allocations have already been authorized by the Government of Pakistan to industrial producers, commercial concerns and public sector agencies which would provide great impetus to Pakistan's economic development.

The loan was signed for the Government of Pakistan by Mr. M. Ismail, Acting Secretary of the Economic Affairs Division of the President's Secretariat, and for the United States by Mr. Maurice J. Williams, Acting Director of the US Agency for International Development (AID) Mission to Pakistan.

Specific iron and steel items, which will be purchased by $90 million of the total $100 million loan include steel billets, pig-iron, tin plate and steel strips under the current Government of Pakistan Liberalized import policy (also known as "Free List Items") and galvanized steel sheets, nail wire, steel plate and other OGL iron and steel items.

The remaining $10 million of the loan will be utilized for the purchases of such items as tyres and tubes, utility vehicles, auto spare parts, machinery spare parts, dyestuffs, lubricants and medicine and pharmaceuticals.

The total amount in loans, grants and technical assistance which the United States has made available or pledged since 1951 to Pakistan is now approximately $2.93 billion.

The loan is repayable in US dollars in 40 years, including a 10-year grace period during which no repayment is required. Interest on the loan is at a rate of three-quarters of one per cent per year during the first ten years and two per cent per annum thereafter.

B. Political Parties To Form Joint Opposition: Opposition political parties announced on July 24 a nine-point joint manifesto to contest the General Elections jointly for both the National and Provincial Assemblies as well as for the Presidential office in a bid "to oust the ruling Conventionist Muslim League from power".

The manifesto was released in Dacca at the end of a four-day round-table conference of Opposition parties convened by the Council Muslim League President, Khwaja Nazimuddin.

Other parties which participated in the conference were: Awami League, National Awami Party, Nizam-e-Islami and the former Jamaat-e-Islami. Among the leaders present were Maulana Bhashani (NAP), Mr. Nasrullah Khan (AL) and Mr. Yusuf Khattak, leader of the Opposition in the National Assembly.

Among the major points made in the manifesto were: (1) curtailment of Presidential powers; (2) complete legislative and budgetary powers for the National and Provincial Assemblies; (3) establishment of a federal parliamentary structure of government guaranteeing full Provincial autonomy; (4) repeal of all repressive laws and release of all political prisoners; and (5) an independent foreign policy.

The first stage of the election of basic democrats to electoral colleges will begin in November and will be followed by Presidential and legislative elections early in 1965.

C. Ban On Jamaat-i-Islami Party Declared Void By Dacca High Court: A Special Bench of the Dacca High Court declared on July 13 that the Provincial Government orders banning the Jamaat-i-Islami Party and sealing its offices at different places of the Province were "void, inoperative and liable to be withdrawn."

The Special Bench, consisting of Mr. Justice A. Sattar, Mr. Justice Ali and Mr. Justice Sayem, delivered judgment on a petition filed by Mr. Tamizuddin Ahmed, challenging the validity of the two Government orders of January 6, 1964 banning Jamaat-i-Islami and sealing its offices, on the ground that the orders were bad as they were passed under the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1908.

The Special Bench, however, granted a certificate to the effect that this was a fit case for appeal in the Supreme Court because it involved an important question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution. The Bench further granted two weeks' stay of the operation of the order from the time of the receipt of the certified copy of the judgment by the respondent.

While delivering the judgment, the Special Bench observed that Section 16 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1908, under which the Jamaat was banned, was an unreasonable restriction upon freedom of the petitioner as granted to him by the Fundamental Rights. Therefore, the said Section as well as the Order were void.

The Special Bench also held that though the impugned Order was passed before coming into force of the Fundamental Rights, the Order would be bad, because the effect of these Orders continued even after coming into force of the Fundamental Rights.

D. More PIA Flights To China: The Pakistan International Airlines (PIA) announced on July 20 the commencement of their package tourist service to six cities of China —Wusih, Peking, Canton, Shanghai, Hangchow and Soochow.

Mr. J. S. Mirza, Commercial Director of PIA, told a news conference that the service would be the first of its kind. The tourists would be able to undertake the tour for eight, 11 and 15 days. A four-day tour would cost only Rs. 352 which would include meals, hotel expenses, cost of interpreter, internal transport and visits to various places of tourist interest.

The Chinese Government, he said, had assured to give visas freely for the tourists. The cost of such tours was very competitive and amounted to less than $20 a day.

The Chinese Government had only imposed restrictions on tourists from Spain, United States, Israel and Taiwan.

He said that to start with, PIA was carrying two parties of Germans to China on this service by the middle of August. One party consisted of 30 tourists and the other of about 40 passengers.

The package service is being operated under an agreement by which PIA has become the agents of the China International Travel Service known as "Luinshe Peking".

Explaining the plan, he said originally only five cities were included, but at the request of PIA the Chinese Government agreed to the inclusion of Peking in the list. One of the features of the new service was that a person travelling to Shanghai could also travel to Peking on the same ticket without paying extra money. The Chinese Government had also opened a visa office on the border at Lo Wu for the passengers coming from Hong Kong and interested to go to Shanghai or Peking to see "something of China". He said the visa "would be given by the Chinese authorities on separate pieces of papers and no endorsement or seal would be put on the passports.

He said that the China service of the PIA "has come up much better than we had expected at the beginning." The PIA proposed to introduce one more service to China by September this year. PIA will have good traffic for the additional service when the Chinese Government invites large delegations for the 15th anniversary of October Day. Previously the additional service was scheduled to start on October 19.

Replying to questions about the service arrangements of the PIA at Canton, Shanghai, Peking and Hong Kong, he said PIA had its representatives at Shanghai, and Canton and at Hong Kong also PIA had taken land for the construction of its office. "We are opening an office in Peking soon and there one representative will be stationed."

In reply to another question, he said that under the Air Agreement between Pakistan and China, "we can operate chartered flights."

TURKEY

A. Consortium Aid: At its meeting in Paris on June 24 and 25 the "Aid-to-Turkey" Consortium authorized the payment of $149,000,000 during the coming year, whereas Turkey had requested $215,000,000 in programme aid and $35,000,000 in project aid.

Mr. Ferit Melen, the Finance Minister, said on June 26 that he hoped the balance would be forthcoming before the end of the year; however, there is a marked reluctance on the part of some members of the Consortium (mostly EEC countries) to grant loans while Turkey's internal taxation system remains unreformed. The US Agency for International Development told the meeting of a further grant of $35 million project aid to Turkey. Five new credits are involved, the principal of these being $20.4 million for equipment for the Ciceroz Dam 300 megawatt hydro-electric power station and 150 km of 154 power transmission lines. Turkey will spend the equivalent of $41.7 million in local currency in order to complete this project.

VIET-NAM (DR)

A. Dr. Ho Chi-Minh Re-elected President: The first session of the third National Assembly of the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam unanimously re-elected on July 3 Mr. Ho Chi-Minh as President for the third time.

Also re-elected was Mr. Ton Duc Thang, the Vice-President.

Mr. Pham Van Dong was re-elected Prime Minister on the recommendation of Mr. Ho Chi-Minh and unanimously approved by the National Assembly.

Mr. Truong Chinh was re-elected Chairman of the Standing Committee of the National Assembly.

The following were elected Vice-Chairmen of the Standing Committee: Mr. Hoang Van Hoan, Mr. Nguyen Xien, Mr. Tran Dang Khoa, Mrs. Nguyen Thi Thap, Mr. Chu Van Tan and Mr. Nguyen Van Huong.

Mr. Ton Quang Phiet was re-elected Secretary-General of the Standing Committee.

B. Dr. Ho Re-iterates Need For "Correct Implementation" Of Geneva Agreement: In an interview given to a team of French radio-television on May 7, the President, Dr. Ho Chi-Minh, said there could be no military solution to the Viet-Namese question as, according to him, "US imperialists believe."

He said the only correct solution was the implementation of the 1954 Geneva Agreements.

He said the participants of the 1954 Geneva Conference, including USA must honour their commitments, that is, respect Viet-Nam's sovereignty, independence, unity and territorial integrity and refrain from any interference in its internal affairs. First and foremost, USA must stop at once its aggressive war in South Viet-Nam; completely withdraw its troops and war material from there; and let the South Viet-Namese people settle their affairs themselves on the basis of national independence, democracy, peace, neutrality and afterwards to attain the peaceful re-unification of Viet-Nam in accordance with the programme of the National Liberation Front.

Question: "Can France play a role in the settlement of the conflict?"

Answer: "As a signatory to the 1954 Geneva Agreements on Indo-China, France has obligations concerning the respect and implementation of the said Agreements. Each participant of the 1954 Geneva Conference must not only scrupulously respect and strictly implement the clauses of the Agreements, but also contribute to ensuring the implementation by all the parties concerned of all the commitments they had made.

"The French people, who have a fine revolutionary tradition, supported the struggle for liberation of the entire people of Viet-Nam in the past. Today, they express approval and support for the just struggle of the South Viet-Namese people and the struggle to realize the peaceful re-unification of Viet-Nam on the basis of the Geneva Agreements. The Viet-Namese are very grateful to the French people for their sympathy."

Question: "In case the war drags on what will be the prospects for the economy of the DRV?"

Answer: "During the last 10 years, the northern part of our country has made big strides forward. Ours is a socialist economy. After several short-term plans and in the present Five-Year Plan, we have obtained basic achievements in industry, agriculture and commerce. Of course, we still meet with difficulties, but they are difficulties in the course of development.

"US imperialists and their lackeys have unleashed an aggressive war in South Viet-Nam. They plot to perpetuate the partition of our country and threaten the security of the DRV. For ten years now, they have been endeavouring to prevent the establishment of economic and cultural relations between the people of North and South Viet-Nam. By so doing, they think that they can strangle the economy of the DRV, but the people of North Viet-Nam who ardently love their country, possess the tradition of relying on their own forces and are industrious in their labour, with the generous assistance of the brother socialist countries, have built and are building their new life with success."

CEYLON

A. Mrs. S. Bandaranaike On Foreign Policy: The Prime Minister, Mrs. Sirimavo Bandaranaike, in a statement in the Senate on August 4, said she had zealously safeguarded the policy of non-alignment in accepting foreign aid.

She declared that any foreign aid offered to the Government, with strings attached, had not been, and would not be, accepted. "This being so, it is of equal importance to ensure that any form of 'aid' received by private individuals from foreign Governments, foreign agencies, foreign individuals, which could affect their loyalty, which the State has the right to expect of its citizens, is not permitted."

The device of the "prepaid ticket" was a powerful weapon that could be used by foreign elements in their campaign to win over the loyalties of Ceylonese people. "It is no secret to state that there are in Ceylon appreciable sections of people who owe extra-territorial loyalties."

"This device of the prepaid ticket", she said, "has been resorted to by certain foreign elements in both hemispheres to muster the support of our citizens in disputes they may have with third parties—and the views expressed by these persons are presented to the world as views of the "delegates of Ceylon" when the views of the Government of Ceylon are in strict consonance with the policy of non-alignment and with the desire to assist parties to settle their disputes by peaceful methods. The actions of such persons in advocating policies mapped out for them by foreign elements in the interests of such foreign elements have placed this country in embarrassing situations."

In the national interest, she said, it was her responsibility to contain these elements and to ensure that they did not engage in activities prejudicial to the country's interests.

"All foreign missions in Ceylon have been informed by Ceylon's Ministry of External Affairs that any invitations which foreign Governments or foreign agencies wish to extend should be addressed direct to the Government of Ceylon by the mission of the country concerned and that any invitation which stipulates that the selection of persons should be made from any specific organization in Ceylon will not be entertained."

She said several instances had come to her notice "where members of the public, even Government officials and, I regret to state, parliamentarians, have solicited invitations from foreign missions and agencies in this country not only for themselves, but even for their wives and families. Apart from the fact that the individuals concerned have acted quite improperly and displayed a pathetic lack of self-respect in soliciting such invitations, they have thereby placed themselves, and sometimes departments of Government under obligation to these foreign missions and agencies. I will not permit a handful of individuals in this manner, to compromise the good name of Ceylon. The procedure that I have authorised is intended, in some measure to meet this situation."

She said that "instances have come to my notice where Ceylonese have gone abroad with endorsements to go to certain specific countries and who have, once they were abroad, gone to various Embassies and solicited free air tickets to visit certain other countries, without any regard for the self-respect of our country, if not of their own self-respect." Instances were also not lacking of persons who had obtained clearance to go abroad on recommendations of local agencies and who had behaved "in a most unbecoming manner with consequential damage to the good name of Ceylon. The public may not be aware that some members of a recent delegation, which went abroad degraded the good name of Ceylon and their own self-respect. One member of this delegation had solicited the gift of a motor car from his host in the foreign country."

B. No Facilities For Aircraft On Military Mission: It was officially stated in Colombo on August 8 that Ceylon had refused flight clearance for six aircraft of the Indonesian Air Force proceeding from Moscow to Medan (Indonesia).

The request for clearance had been received from Indonesia and the Soviet Union.

The refusal was in accordance with the policies of the Ceylon Government of friendship towards both Indonesia and Malaysia.

A communique issued by Ceylon's Ministry of Defence and External Affairs, however, said that no requests for facilities at Ceylon's airports and seaports for British or American aircraft or ships proceeding to Malaysia on military missions against Indonesia had been received by the Government.

The communique made it clear that if similar requests were to be received from or on behalf of the Government of Malaysia, the same considerations as in the case of Indonesian Air Force aircraft would apply to them also.

C. Steps Against Illicit Immigration: The Cabinet approved on July 28 several amendments to the Immigrants and Emigrants Act designed to remove certain defects in it and make it more effective.

A communique issued after the Cabinet meeting said that these amendments would make it easier to bring to book those who help and encourage illicit immigrants and also those who employ them.

The communique did not give any details of the amendments, but a memorandum submitted by the Prime Minister to the Cabinet or these amendments earlier had suggested confiscation of assets of illicit immigrants, making overstay of a visa an offence and more effective measures for punishing those who employ illicit immigrants.

The Government is expected to table an amending Bill in Parliament shortly.

CHINA

A. Replacement Of Senior Party Functionaries—Reported Move: The main newspaper of the Communist Party, People's Daily of Peking, on August 3 called for re-education of functionaries and re-adjustment of revolutionary ranks.

The document, entitled "Cultivate and train millions of successors who will carry on the cause of the proletarian revolution," stressed it was referring to nucleus party leadership at all levels.

It said in part that "the most pressing task confronting us is to cultivate successors who will carry on the revolution from generation to generation, and to strengthen constantly the nucleus of party leadership at all levels so that the correct line and the correct policies of the party are adhered to at all times."

The importance attached to the editorial was illustrated by the fact that it was splashed over the front pages of all other Chinese newspapers and was regularly broadcast by Peking Radio.

There had been a good deal of speculation among diplomatic analysts that the forthcoming session of the new National Peoples' Congress (Parliament) and the possibility of a new and long overdue Communist Party congress could be the occasion for announcing broad changes in top Government and party posts involving the introduction of younger men. Both could be held around the 15th anniversary celebrations in October.

The editorial was the first during the class struggle campaign which dealt with the future of senior party functionaries.

Observers saw in the editorial a new rectification campaign that might lead to large-scale replacement of senior party functionaries.

B. Indian MPs' Visit To Formosa —Chinese Protest: China denounced on June 29 as open interference in China's internal affairs the visit to Formosa of a 10-member delegation of non-Congress Indian MPs.

The New China News Agency accused the Indian Government of "further poisoning Sino-Indian relations by sending the group to Taiwan" and said that the act of the Indian Government had aroused "serious attention."

Citing unacknowledged Press reports, NCNA said that the delegation's week-long stay in Formosa aimed at "resuming normal diplomatic relations between India and the Chiang Kai-shek gang and of studying the Chiang Kai-shek gang's anti-communist experience."

It was reported, the Agency said, that the delegation's activities included long and extensive talks with the "Chiang Kai-shek gang's ringleaders," and that Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek had received the group on June 23.

The Agency added that the leader of the delegation, Mr. Dahyabhai Patel, had declared in Taipeh that India shared the anti-Communist convictions of the Chiang Kai-shek regime.

The Chinese Government followed it up with a formal protest Note to India.

Indian Rejection:

The Government of India "categorically" rejected the Chinese protest on the visit of an Indian parliamentary delegation to Formosa in June.

A Note handed to the Chinese Embassy in New Delhi on August 5 said that the delegation had gone in its private capacity and the Government of India had absolutely no responsibility for its visit or any statements that might have been made by its members during or after the visit. "The protest lodged by the Chinese Government is, therefore, completely uncalled for and amounts to little other than an attempt to interfere in the internal affairs of India."

The Chinese, in their Note of June 26, had described the visit as a case of "anti-Chinese activity".

The Indian Note said: "The Chinese Government has struck a heavy blow at the traditional friendship between the two countries by its massive invasion and aggression across the northern Himalayan border of India in October-November, 1962. This invasion was a blow aimed at the stability, prosperity and dignity of the people of India and was a woeful negation of the Five Principles of peaceful co-existence.

"With what face can the Chinese Government give advice about friendship between the peoples when the invading Chinese armies continue to occupy 14.500 square miles of Indian territory in the vital Ladakh region of India?

"Friendship between peoples must be based on other things than violence, aggression and false and malicious propaganda, and the Government of India is waiting to see evidence of this in the China of today."

SUMMARY: Measures To Improve Food Situation; Nagaland Peace Mission; US Loans; Border Roads Programme.

A. Measures To Improve Food Situation—Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri's Letter To State Governments: It was made known in New Delhi on August 8 that the Prime Minister, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, had asked the State Governments not to resort to penal action against foodgrain traders willing to declare their hoarded stocks within the next two weeks.

In a letter to the Chief Ministers on the critical food situation, he laid down a series of short-term and long-term measures which the Central and State Governments should take to increase food production.

Releasing the letter for publication, he said in an informal chat with newsmen that August and September were going to be "very difficult months." This would be the "leanest period" before the next crop is harvested in early October.

While the Government's ultimate aim was to make the country self-sufficient in foodgrains, there was no alternative but to import large quantities of cereals to meet the present critical situation. The impact of larger imports would begin to be felt by the end of August.

He did not try to minimise the seriousness of the food situation. In some States the problem was quite acute. But he was quite confident that in spite of the tremendous difficulties the Government would be able to tackle this "baffling problem" in the long run. It was important that there should be a sense of self-confidence.

He had advised the State Governments to have the necessary administrative machinery ready for the introduction of rationing in large cities like Calcutta, Bombay, Madras and Delhi. In the rural areas, the village panchayats should ensure that there was no starvation.

He also deplored the "natural tendency" on the part of surplus States to hold on to their stocks. He wanted the food problem to be tackled on an all-India basis with both the surplus and the deficit States playing their part in stepping up food production and conserving the available supplies for the common good of the whole population.

He also appealed to the people to ease the food situation in various ways. Hotels and restaurants could easily cut down their consumption of rice and wheat. Non-vegetarians could curtail consumption of cereals. People in Punjab, Delhi, Uttar Pradesh, Madhya Pradesh and Rajasthan could give up rice during the present crisis, while those in the Southern States could do without rice for at least one day in a week.

At the political level, the present situation called for a "national all-party approach" and "common constructive thinking at all levels. He hoped that political parties would not thoughtlessly resort to direct action to highlight the people's plight and thereby worsen the situation.

He said he was equally concerned about the rise in the prices of other essential commodities. "The problem of high prices has been receiving the Government's attention at the highest level and it was determined to do all that was possible to check the present inflationary trends in the economy."

"I can assure you," he said with considerable emphasis, "that we will take the most radical steps, if necessary, to handle the present economic situation."

The two important long-term steps the Government proposed to take were the fixation of prices for rice, wheat and other cereals and the setting up of an all-India Foodgrains Corporation. He wanted the agricultural prices commission, which was to be appointed shortly, to fix the prices in such a way as to provide the necessary incentives to the producers to grow more foodgrains. He also wanted the Foodgrains Corporation to function in competition with the trade to keep the prices down at reasonable levels without resorting to all-out State trading in foodgrains.

He advised the State Ministers and others to frequently visit villages to see for themselves how the steps taken by them to encourage food production were being implemented. He proposed to tour the rural areas as and when possible.

He indicated that he would write to the Chief Ministers whenever there was any important national issue or problem with a view of taking them into confidence and sharing with them his view. He would not wish to send fortnightly letters to the Chief Ministers. (The late Mr. Nehru used to write to the Chief Ministers every fortnight on current matters).

Financial and economic questions had been receiving a good deal of attention from the Government. "One of your colleagues is rather doubtful about our capacity to take radical measures. The difficulty is that some people want to function quietly and sometimes they create a wrong impression also.

"I do not want to claim much but the bigger financial and economic problems have been receiving a good deal of attention, I have been giving thought to them and, of course, the Finance Minister himself is keen to deal with some aspects of the questions which have led to inflationary tendencies resulting in high rise in prices."

He said he had discussed these matters with his Secretary, Mr. L. K. Jha, "who is an expert on economic matters," and others. "I can assure you all, especially the friends who have some doubts about me, that the Government will take the most radical steps, if called for, to handle the economic situation. Those friends might criticise me or my Government but we will take only those steps which we consider absolutely essential, maybe in a slightly different direction.

"I would not like to concretise but I am putting it rather vaguely. I do not know whether that approach will be generally liked. Still if I feel that a particular approach is the only correct approach I shall have to accept it. If the Government fully agrees with it, it will have to be fully implemented."

He welcomed the recent proposal of the Central Finance Minister, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari, for effecting a cut of about Rs. 70 crores to Rs. 80 crores in Central Government expenditure, and said he would be writing to his colleagues to consider possibilities of reduction in the programmes in their Ministries.

B. Nagaland Peace Mission—Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri's View: The Prime Minister, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri on August 8 expressed high praise for the efforts of the Nagaland Peace Mission and offered it his "whole-hearted support."

Mr. Shastri, who was talking informally to the Press, said the members of the mission—Mr. J. P. Narayan, Mr. B. P. Chaliha and the Rev. Michael Scott—had worked very hard and he hoped their endeavour would bring "peace and solace" to Nagaland.

The Mission, it seemed, might succeed in persuading the hostile Nagas to hold talks. The Central Government was expecting a reply from the Nagas soon.

First, he made it clear that in seeking a rapprochement with the hostile elements the Central Government was in no way by-passing the Government of Nagaland. "Whatever is being done in Nagaland, has been undertaken in full consultation with the Nagaland administration and Dr. Shilu Ao, its Chief Minister. We do not wish to move even an inch without consulting the State Government."

Secondly, he emphasized that whatever solution might be found of the Naga problem would be strictly within the frame-work of "our Constitution." If within that area the Nagas came forward with some suggestions and demands, "we should consider them with an open mind."

C. Four US Loans: Four new loans totalling $62.3 million were announced in New Delhi on August 6 by the US Ambassador, Mr. Chester Bowles.

The largest of these, amounting to $59 million, is a non-project loan and will be used for financing the purchase of a wide range of industrial raw materials. These include steel, lubricants, machinery and machinery parts, chemicals, components, sulphur, rubber carbon black, caustic soda and insecticides.

Twenty-five broad-gauge diesel engines are to be bought under a second loan of $7.2 million.

The third loan of $3.1 million will meet the foreign exchange cost of an 18,100-kw generator in the Sharavathy project in Mysore State.

The last loan, of $2 million, will cover the costs of consulting services of American firms and individuals for a variety of public and private sector projects.

D. Border Roads Programme: The Central Government has spent over Rs. 100 crores in the past four years in carrying out a crash programme to build an extensive network of border roads along the 2,400-mile-long northern frontier.

These roads, built after surmounting unparalleled engineering and organizational problems, have made it possible to move men and material to the far-flung border posts and also develop areas that had been inaccessible for centuries.

The entire programme, drawn up in March, 1960 at the initiative of the late Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru, has been carried out by the Defence Ministry's Border Roads Organization (BRO).

BRO has built up the largest civil construction force of its kind in the country. Known as the General Reserve Engineering Force (GREF) it is a completely non-military and highly mobile organization including engineers, technicians, doctors and signalling experts.

The GREF worker has to work under all conditions—driving rain, high velocity winds of up to 60 miles an hour and in temperatures ranging from 20 degress C to —30 degrees C. His life is always in danger, working as he is on the treacherous mountainside. The number of GREF personnel who have been killed in the past four years in various accidents or have died due to illness runs well into three figures. Judged against the magnitude of the tasks achieved and the dangers involved the number of lives lost is not considered excessive. Care has been taken to ensure that compensation is promptly paid to the bereaved families.

One of the great mountain highways nearing completion is the Hindustan-Tibet Road which runs from Simla right up to the Tibetan border. Work on this road began in 1951 and was taken over by BRO in September, 1961.

Another major highway, which is being built on a priority basis, is the road linking Manali with Leh. This road, which will connect Punjab directly with Ladakh, will pass through the 13,500-foot-high Rohtang Pass. It is estimated to cost Rs. 20 crores.

There is already another road to Leh, running from Pathankot to Srinagar and from Srinagar to Leh.

A number of feeder roads have been built from Leh to various points on the border. One such road is called the "highway on the roof of the world"—because it passes over the summit of an 18,000-foot-high mountain.

In the eastern sector, several major roads have been built linking the hinterland with Sikkim, Bhutan, N-EFA and the forward area.

One major road has been built from Tezpur to Towang and beyond via Bomdila, and the existing road from Tezpur to North Lakhimpur is being improved to carry heavy traffic.

To speed up the economic development of the areas along the Himalayan foothills, the Government is building a trunk road connecting Bareilly in UP with Amingaon in Assam. The road will cost about Rs. 100 crores.

The Border Roads Organization has achieved 50 per cent of its initial target of building 2,500 miles of new roads and improving 1,500 miles of existing ones.

A new programme has now been drawn up to construct another 3,100 miles of new roads and to improve 850 miles of existing roads.

GREF not only builds roads but also maintains them. The force lays telephone lines too, wherever considered essential.

E. Changes In Social Security Department: The controversy over the transfer of certain subjects from the Labour Ministry to the newly created Social Security Department has been settled with the issue of a Presidential order on August 7.

It has been decided that the administration of the Minimum Wages Act, which had been included in the charge of the Social Security Department earlier, should be transferred back to the Labour Ministry.

The Labour Ministry's plea for getting back the administration of the Employees' State Insurance Scheme, the Employees' Provident Fund and the Coal Miners' Provident Fund has not been accepted. These stand transferred to the Social Security Department.

Development of electronics has been included as a new subject in the Department of Industry under the Presidential order. This underlines the growing importance of electronics in the sphere of industrial development.

F. All-India Muslim Consultative Convention: Addressing the All-India Muslim Consultative Convention in Lucknow on August 8, Dr. Syed Mahmud, former Central Minister, appealed to the Convention to concentrate its attention on thinking out a remedy for "the manifold injustices and prejudices" to which the community was subjected on the cultural, political and economic planes.

The strategy of shedding tears or complaining against the Government or a particular group of citizens, he said, had not succeeded. The need of the hour was detachment and large-heartedness.

The two-day Convention, held at Darul Uloom Nadwatul Ulema, a centre of Muslim theology, was a representative gathering of Muslim leaders of all shades of political and religious opinion, since Independence.

It was attended, among others, by Maulana Taiyab, a divine of Deoband, Mr. Mohammed Ismail, President of the All-India Muslim League, Mr. M. R. Sherwani, MP, Mr. Mazhar Imani, Mr. Mustafa Fakhri, former Minister of Bombay, Mr. Ghulam Rasool Qureshi of Sabarmati, Dr. A. J. Faridi, MLC, Maulana Fakhruddin and Maulana Atique-ur-Rehman, President and working president of the Jamait-ul-Ulema-Hind.

Referring to the recent communal riots in India, Dr. Mahmud said: "To what unhumanity and barbarism you were not exposed. If the tales of woe are related, you will seldom find a brazen-hearted man who will not be moved to tears. It is well known that the death of our beloved Prime Minister was precipitated by these communal disturbances. When he died he left the country in the grip of this canker, which, if not crushed, will eat into the vitals of our social and cultural life."

He suggested that a deputation on behalf of the convention should meet the President, the Prime Minister, the Central Home Minister and the Congress President and have plain talks with them about the recent riots. The problem of communal disturbances was a national and an administrative one.

It was true, he said, that those who had been elected to State Assemblies and Parliament through Muslim votes—to whatever community they might belong—did not seem to be the least moved by the unhappy and inhuman events that rocked the whole of northern India.

Hatred and contempt, he said, could be cured with love. Only those had ultimately triumphed who had given out love for hatred and justice for cruelty. These moral weapons had to be used in India today.

If on the one hand, he said, Muslims were made victims of aggression on all sides, on the other it was also a reality that such barriers of estrangement and hostility had stood between Muslims and the people of the country as did not allow the majority community to sense the gravity of these aggressive activities.

He suggested that a deputation consisting of Muslim leaders should tour the country. It should establish contacts with non-Muslims. It should also take note of the educational, economic, moral and religious backwardness of Muslims in each State. After surveying the whole situation it would be possible to chalk out a programme for the uplift of Muslims.

Dr. Mahmud drew the attention of the convention to six aspects of the situation in the country vis-a-vis Muslims:

(1) Muslims should dismiss the idea that they were unwanted and persuade others to come closer to them.

(2) The need of the hour was unity among Muslims. This was a basic need without which neither individuals nor society could prosper. The Convention should explore all possibilities of unity and integration.

(3) The communal disturbances had put Muslims in a peculiar state of confusion, helplessness and despair and they were intent upon leaving their homeland. The Convention should find ways and means of eliminating the possibility of such disturbances and restore the confidence of Muslims.

(4) Muslims had been isolating themselves from the social and political curr[illegible] the country. This state of affairs was neither happy for the country nor for the Muslims.

(5) It could not be denied that on religious and cultural levels Muslims were exposed to a number of threats.

(6) Muslims had been lagging behind in the field of education and commerce.

The Convention, he said, was meeting at a time when the Muslim minority was passing through a very critical period of history. The country had fixed its gaze on the Convention and Muslims had nursed hopes in their hearts. The leaders should talk frankly on all issues. They should not misunderstand any one. Before they dispersed they should take unanimous decisions so that the confidence of the Millat might be restored.

Resolutions:

The Convention decided on August 9 to set up a 21-man committee for the implementation of the resolutions passed by the Convention and devise ways and means of solving the problems facing the community.

Dr. Syed Mahmud is the chairman of the committee.

The Convention authorised him to announce the personnel of the proposed Muslim Majlis-e-Mushawarat (Muslim Consultative Committee) in consultation with Maulana Mufti Aliq-ur-Rahman, working President of the Jamiat-ul-Ulema-i-Hind, Maulana Asad Miyan Mandi, General Secretary of the Jamait-ul-Ulema-i-Hind, Mr. Mohammed Ismail, President of the Muslim League; Maulana Abdullais Nadwi, President of the Jamaat-e-Islami; Maulana Manzoor Ahmed, editor of Afurgauan; Maulana Syed Abdul Hasan Nadwi (Ind); Mr. Mohammad Muslim, editor of Dawat and Mr. Suleiman Seth, Muslim League MP from Kerala.

The committee has been empowered to make representations to the Government in the light of the resolutions passed at the Convention and to send a deputation to various parts of the country to acquaint non-Muslims with the grievances of the Muslim community.

The Convention passed a resolution condemning attacks on Muslims in West Bengal, Orissa, Bihar and Madhya Pradesh. It described the riots as a great danger to the unity and solidarity of India, a secular State.

It accused the Government of having failed in discharging its duty of protecting the lives and property of Muslims and demanded that action be taken against those officials whose carelessness had resulted in loss of life. It suspected the hand of some political and some semi-political organizations and even of some officials behind the disturbances.

The resolution demanded a judicial inquiry into the disturbances, imposition of punitive taxes in disturbed areas and rehabilitation of riot victims. It said that the riot victims should be treated on a par with East Pakistan refugees in respect of resettlement.

It appealed to Muslims not to migrate to Pakistan or be frightened by the disturbances. It exhorted them to have the courage to face the situation, frustrate the designs of reactionary elements and take legal and other steps to protect their lives, property and honour.

It condemned what it described as the misuse of the Defence of India Rules under which about 100 Muslim victims of riots were arrested in Bengal and Bihar. The resolution demanded their release.

It appreciated the Central Government's policies, but condemned the Governments of four States which, according to it, had not respected the laws framed by the Central Government.

It further demanded recruitment of Muslims to the Central Reserve Police and Criminal Investigation Departments at the Centre and in the States.

The Convention also passed a resolution condemning those who advocated an exchange of population.

It passed two condolence resolutions—one on the death of the Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru, and the other on those killed during the disturbances.

The resolution on Mr. Nehru referred to him as a great revolutionary who believed in secularism and democracy and who always rose above parochialism and narrow-mindedness.

By another resolution, the Convention appealed to the Pakistan Government to create conditions of security for the minority community. It was a matter of anxiety that numbers of Hindus had been driven out of their hearths and homes. The Pakistan Government should create such conditions that they could return to their homes.

G. Research Programmes In National Laboratories—CSIR Review: The reviewing committee of the Council of Scientific and Industrial Research (CSIR), headed by Dr. Ramaswamy Mudaliar, has suggested that research programmes in the national laboratories should be oriented in such a way that 80 per cent of the efforts were related to applied research.

The applied research projects, it said, should be time-targeted, not exceeding a limit of three to five years.

It has called for the bridging of the gaps both between industrial programming and research planning on the one hand and between research and its application to industry on the other.

One of the major recommendations of the committee is greater support by CSIR to universities in the training of scientific and technical personnel and building up institutes of advanced research. This would create a strong supporting base for expansion of science and technology.

The committee has recommended that CSIR should also, in co-ordination with the Indian Council of Medical Research, give vigorous support to research on population control and to communication and application of results in the widest and most efficient manner. Unless the birth rate was controlled, economic development would suffer.

The committee has welcomed the "reorientation" in the work of CSIR headquarters in recent years by the creation of a number of technical services sections, such as central designing and engineering, research co-ordination, industrial liaison and extension, and survey and planning.

It has also noted the efforts of CSIR in giving greater autonomy to national laboratories and other research institutions and adds that the steps already taken towards decentralization should be pushed further "with courage and expedition."

The committee has also given its approval to most of the Fourth Five-Year Plan proposals of CSIR and supported the plea for a four-fold increase in research expenditure over the Third Plan provision. The committee is reported to have urged that the CSIR part of the Fourth Plan should be implemented to the full and also expanded where fresh needs arose.

Developing countries, in its view, should initially spend a greater proportion of their national income on research compared to advanced countries. They should also develop methodology to utilize their research much more effectively by way of returns in terms of national economic development.

The reviewing committee, the third of its kind, was appointed by the late Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru in November, 1962 in his capacity as President of the governing body to review the work and progress of CSIR and to recommend the lines on which its activities should be directed in the national perspective.

The committee included British scientists, Sir Charles Goodeve and Sir Patrick Linstead, Dr. D. S. Kothari, Chairman of UGC, and Mr. Baldev Singh (Secretary). The committee's draft report was finalized in London and it has been sent to the Central Education Minister, Mr. M. C. Chagla.

The committee has observed that to enable CSIR to play an effective role in helping to create a modern industrial State, it was necessary to strengthen its autonomy. CSIR and its laboratories should be left unencumbered by Government rules and red-tape. It has called for a "bolder policy of central headquarters of CSIR divesting itself of responsibilities of routine administration, retaining only co-ordination, policy-making and enforcement.

It has urged that CSIR should maintain its central position as an overall agency for planning, co-ordination of scientific research and development in the national perspective and evolution of a national science policy. It says that the technical sections of CSIR should be enlarged and that CSIR's co-ordination with other technical and research departments and councils in other Ministries and the Atomic Energy Commission strengthened in order to maximize research efforts.

Referring to industry, it says the "biggest weakness" was the failure of industry to take a share in research. It has suggested that industry should be given incentive to start its own research or to undertake research with financial support from CSIR.

On the National Research Development Corporation, it takes note of "general opinion" that it had "failed to match" the country's need, and says it should be substantially strengthened and brought under the overall charge of CSIR for operational purposes.

It has also suggested a review of work of CSIR every five years, preferably during the year preceding the beginning of each Five-Year Plan.

H. Record Production By Rourkela Steel Plant: The Rourkela Steel Plant registered a record rate of production in July.

The plate mill, which has a monthly rated capacity of 14,200 tonnes, produced 20,529 tonnes of plates, 144.5 per cent of the rated capacity. This was the highest production achieved so far, 838 tonnes more than the previous best achieved in August, 1963.

Tin plate production was 1,859 tonnes, also the highest achieved so far.

The total finished steel production during the month was 57,092 tonnes—2,055 tonnes more than the previous best, achieved in August, 1963.

The two blast furnaces produced 68,834 tonnes of pig-iron which was about 110 per cent of the rated capacity.

The production of ingot steel was 70,920 tonnes, 8,989 tonnes more than the previous month's production. The slabbing mill produced 63,037 tonnes of slabs, 6,315 tonnes more than the previous month's production.

The hot strip mill produced 37,894 tonnes of hot rolled coils, 1,515 tonnes more than the previous month.

Along with this increased rate of production the despatches were also maintained at a fairly high level. Despatches of finished steel from the plant during July were 60,337 tonnes—15,493 tonnes more than the previous month's despatches.

I. Weather Probes Over Indian Ocean: What is being done to probe the weather over the Indian Ocean was described in UNESCO Features published on July 31.

The article says:

"From artificial satellites 450 miles up in outer space, from research vessels and merchant ships plying a lonely sea, from anchored buoys automatically registering data and from aircraft flying straight into cyclones, information on the weather of the Indian Ocean has been pouring into a low building on the southern tip of Bombay.

"This building in the Colaba Observatory compound houses the International Meteorological Centre, the main contribution of the Government of India to the meteorology programme of the International Indian Ocean Expedition. Opposite a radio room which receives every day up to 400 observations by ships and nearly 2,000 observations by land stations is the office of the Expedition's director of meteorology. From this small room which he shares with two secretaries, Dr. Colin S. Ramage co-ordinates, for the UNESCO-sponsored Inter-Governmental Oceanographic Commission a $5,000,000 programme financed largely by the United States.

"Dr. Ramage, an American meteorologist born in New Zealand and on leave from the University of Hawaii, has been in Bombay since August, 1962 and the International Meteorological Centre was established at the observatory in January of the following year. It has become the headquarters for a vast international probe into the mysteries of Indian Ocean weather.

"Recently, Dr. Ramage was able to report on the first results of the Expedition's meteorological programme. Observations already made have enabled meteorologists to understand the general circulation in the atmosphere over the Indian Ocean.

"The Expedition has also brought in new evidence to show that the equatorial region of the Ocean running from 110 degrees North to 10 degrees South is governed by an entirely different set of processes from those prevailing in temperate or tropical regions.

"'In the higher latitudes, weather systems generally move eastward and, in the tropics, they generally move westward,' Dr. Ramage stated. 'But, in the equatorial region of the Indian Ocean, they do not seem to move in any regular fashion. They simply develop and decay in the same region.'

"This peculiar behaviour of Indian Ocean weather complicated the task of the meteorologist. Wind prediction for aircraft, for example, must be based on normal wind values, but no wind chart exists for the Indian Ocean as it does for the Atlantic and the Pacific. Similarly, fishermen need readings of sea temperatures and this information is only becoming available now.

"One of the most spectacular achievements of the Expedition's meteorological programme was a series of flights in 1963 by five aircraft from the United States Weather Bureau Research Flight Facility and the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution.

"Dr. Ramage was aboard one of the planes on a flight out of Bombay in which observations were taken simultaneously from the air and sea in co-ordination with the Anton Bruun, an American research vessel.

"The weather plane, a four-engined converted transport bristling with probes recording temperature, wind, atmospheric pressure and turbulence, met the Anton Bruun west of Ceylon. The ship turned into the wind and the plane flew over her on the same course at an altitude of 3,500 feet with all equipment aboard recording observations on magnetic tape at the rate of 40 times a second. Then, in 500-foot stages, the plane dropped to an altitude of 500 feet and finally to 300 feet while the Anton Brunn recorded surface air temperature, the sea temperature and wind strength.

"Mr. C. R. V. Ramage, chief research forecaster for the International Meteorological Centre, was aboard another flight when the weather plane penetrated the eye of an Arabian Sea cyclone.

"'I thought the aircraft was falling to pieces,' he recalled. 'We dropped 300 feet in a single second. As we crossed the eye of the storm, the wind changed from 100 knots south-south-west to 101 knots north-north-east.'

"Three hours before the research plane flew into the storm, the same cyclone had been photographed by a weather satellite, Tiros VI. Comparison of photos taken from the aircraft and the satellite have provided, for the first time, a two-dimensional picture of a tropical cyclone in the Arabian Sea with its eye as a clear area twelve miles in diameter and its wall clouds rising as high as 53,000 feet.

"While it may have less appeal to the imagination, the daily work of the International Meteorological Centre is just as important as these flights by scientific daredevils. On an average day, 100 ships report observations to the centre in Bombay and in particular, big oil tankers are providing standard meteorological data every six hours around the clock. Dr. Ramage has succeeded in obtaining stereoscopic photographs from British transport planes flying across the Equator, while other transport planes have been equipped with time-lapse motion picture cameras that make an exposure every two seconds, compressing a 6-hour flight into a 100-feet roll of film. These pictures, made at a cruising altitude of 23,000 feet, are then compared to photos supplied by satellites and research aircraft.

"Other observations come in from research vessels and island meteorological stations using sounding balloons that are tracked by radar to determine wind speeds. NOMAD, an automatic weather station powered by wind-driven generators and developed for the United States Navy, is to be anchored in the Bay of Bengal where it will transmit observations every six hours.

"While balloon-borne instruments only go up to an altitude of 100,000 feet, a higher layer of the atmosphere is to be explored in the Indian Ocean region by rockets. During 1964, meteorological rockets are to be fired from five stations to sample winds and temperatures up to 250,000 feet. The launchings will be made as part of the International Quiet Sun Year.

"One of the most fascinating meteorological experiments of the Expedition is being undertaken by the University of Washington at Seattle in the United States. Attempts in the past to learn exactly what happens in the exchange of energy between the sea and the atmosphere have always been hampered by the presence of the experimenters' ship, which affects temperature, humidity and wind speed in the environment.

"The University of Washington has designed a 30-foot mast that is to be towed into the Ocean 150 miles north-west of Bombay in a horizontal position. Then it will flip upright and measure temperature, humidity and wind stress from the surface of the sea to the top of the mast, transmitting this information to scientists aboard a tug tethered to the end of 1,500 feet of cable.

"A satellite readout station has been set up on the roof of the Bombay centre so that photos from a weather satellite can be immediately received by facsimile, an important tool for immediate forecasting. Up to now, it has taken six months to obtain these photos. Now, as a satellite passes over Bombay, it can transmit pictures directly to the centre.

"Finally, an electronic computer capable of processing 20,000 observations an hour, is being installed at the centre under a United Nations Special Fund project in which the World Meteorological Organization is the executing agency.

"Dr. Ramage is looking forward to this with understandable eagerness. 'We will certainly have enough work to keep it busy,' he said. 'Without it, we would need ten men working for six months to process those 20,000 observations.'"

A. Dr. K. I. Singh Sentenced: The former Prime Minister, Dr. K. I. Singh, was sentenced on August 5 to two years' imprisonment and fined Rs. 2,000 by a three-man special tribunal headed by a Khatmandu magistrate, Mr. Balaram Pyakural.

He was found guilty of defaming, showing contempt and insulting the Government by his action in March, when he issued a statement announcing his intention to organize countrywide satyagraha "for restoration of democracy".

Mr. Jujubhai Rajbhandari and Mr. Keshab Chandra Gautam, two of Dr. Singh's associates, were sentenced to one year's imprisonment and Rs. 1,000 fine and one year's imprisonment and Rs. 500 fine, respectively, on the same charges.

These two persons had allegedly tried to help Dr. Singh's projected agitation by distributing leaflets and shouting slogans.

A. National Awami Party's Manifesto: A 36-point manifesto of the National Awami Party calling for the establishment of a socialist society was announced in Karachi on July 26.

Mr. Mahmoodul Haq Usmani, Secretary-General of the Party, said the programme was adopted by the Central Organizing Committee, whose meeting was held at Peshawar on July 15 and 16 under the presidentship of the Party Chief, Maulana A. H. Bhasani.

The following is the text of the Press summary of the manifesto:

B. Trade With China And Indonesia: The Central Commerce Minister, Mr. Wahiduzzaman, said in Karachi on July 24 on his return from a 14-day official visit to China and Indonesia that immense possibilities existed for economic co-operation with China and Indonesia.

While "important proposals" had been put forward by the Chinese Government for expanding the volume of trade between the two countries, Indonesia also offered a potential market for Pakistan's cotton textiles.

He said he would present the Chinese proposals to President Ayub Khan for consideration. He declined to elaborate on the nature of the proposals. When pressed by the correspondents, he said they related to "trade expansion".

Replying to a question, he confirmed that Pakistan was interested in the import of capital goods and machinery from China. He said it was for the businessmen to import any item from China, and added that a businessmen's team had "just returned" from a tour of that country.

He said that the Chinese leaders "were deeply interested in economic co-operation with Pakistan" and he was convinced that Pakistan could increase her trade with that country "to a great magnitude".

China could, on her part, import a large quantity of commodities from Pakistan, including jute goods, cotton yarn and leather, boots and shoes, while Pakistan could import cement, coal, machinery and other capital equipment.

Replying to a question, he said China had made rapid progress and she was in a position to meet all the requirements of Pakistan for machinery and other equipment needed for industrialization.

He spoke very highly of the Chinese people and the devotion of their leaders to accelerate the pace of economic development for the benefit of the masses. "China was developing very fast on the basis of self-reliance and self-denial". He thought that was the best way for all the countries of the world to progress and achieve prosperity.

About Indonesia, he said that that country was willing to purchase cotton textiles worth over $10 million from Pakistan. Export of Pakistan's cotton yarn to Indonesia on "temporary credits" was also under consideration.

Referring to the joint communique issued from Djakarta on the conclusion of his tour, he said: "We agree in principle to co-operate with Indonesia in the sphere of shipping". This question was under consideration by both the countries. A delegation from Indonesia was necessary to come to Pakistan to discuss and finalise matters with the Government.

He said Pakistan could greatly increase the number of items and the size of her exports to Indonesia. Pakistan could also import from Indonesia a "good number" of commodities, including rubber, timber and spices etc. to the mutual benefit of both.

He said that under an earlier Agreement, Pakistan processed cotton yarn for Indonesia and shipped the same to that country. "This sort of co-operation could be increased to a great extent in future."

He added that Indonesia with "a high standard of living" offered a potential market for Pakistani goods. He dispelled doubts that Indonesia had a poor standard of living. On the other hand, he pointed out, Indonesia had vast resources.

Mr. Wahiduzzaman said in Lahore on July 26 that Indonesia proposed to buy goods worth $10,000,000 from Pakistan under a recently concluded Agreement.

The terms of payment, he said, were being considered and as soon as they were settled Indonesia would be sending a delegation to make the purchases. Among other things, Indonesia would buy cotton textiles, yarn, raw cotton and jute goods.

C. Chinese Consulate In Dacca: The Chinese Government has established a consulate in Dacca in addition to its Embassy in Karachi.

D. Chinese Loan Offer: The Central Commerce Minister, Mr. Wahiduzzaman, disclosed in Rawalpindi on July 31 that China had offered a $60,000,000 interest-free loan to Pakistan for the current year.

Repayment of the loan will be on long-term basis, extending up to 30 to 40 years.

Mr. Wahiduzzaman expressed the hope that Pakistan would accept the Chinese offer. He said that the loan could be utilized for importing heavy machinery and complete plants for sugar and cement production. Some of the machinery produced by China was of good quality and compared well with Western equipment.

China, he said, was willing to accept the repayment of the loan in primary commodities and manufactured goods.

This was the first-ever loan offered by China to Pakistan. The loan is in addition to normal trade between the two countries.

China is willing to offer rail coaches and is also prepared to build railways in the country. The cost of railways built by the Chinese would not be higher than built by Pakistani engineers.

He said that China was ready to extend services of its technical experts to Pakistan. Services of Chinese experts would not be costlier than Pakistani or Western experts. Machinery, to be imported from China under the loan, would be at international prices and may cost even less.

He said that China was in a position to supply machine tool factories, sugar mills, cement plant, textile mills and other machinery required by Pakistan. The Chinese were prepared to accept repayment in the shape of Pakistani cotton, jute, jute goods and manufactured items.

He said the Chinese Government had also offered to supply railway coaches, wagons and rail lines on credit basis.

He added that Pakistani experts would work out the details of how the loan could be utilised, what projects could be set up and what commodities could be imported.

Asked whether there was a possibility of Pakistan and China starting joint ventures, he said for this he would have to wait and this could be examined by the Pakistan experts after the loan was formally accepted.

Asked whether the Chinese loan could be repeated, he said further offers were expected "depending on our utilization and Chinese resources."

The Chinese Government would not take even any service charges on this loan. A formal acceptance of the generous offer would be communicated to China shortly.

He stated that the period of repayment would extend even beyond 40 years. China may also increase further the quantum of loan, if desired by Pakistan.

E. AID Loan For West Pakistan: A $12,500,000 AID loan to expand and improve electric power distribution net-work in West Pakistan was announced in Karachi on August 1 by Mr. Maurice J. Williams, Acting Director of the US AID mission.

The works to be undertaken with the new loan will range widely throughout the WAPDA system in West Pakistan. A substantial portion of this loan will be used to rehabilitate the existing sub-stations and distribution facilities, and also to supplement service equipment which is overloaded or otherwise inadequate. For this reason the construction to be performed by the use of this loan will be started as soon as the equipment is purchased.

In general terms the project will provide electric service to 200,000 new consumers.

During the next two years the Agency will facilitate a number of existing facilities, including the construction of nearly 2,500 miles of new distribution lines and distribution transformers. Besides the lines and transformers, the project will entail the construction of new distribution sub-stations, rehabilitation of many existing ones, the purchase and installation of 200,000 new meters and the replacement of 5,000 obsolete meters and additions and improvements to and replacement of existing street-lighting systems, as well as the construction of new systems.

The low-interest loan brings the total amount of American assistance for the electric power projects in West Pakistan since 1959 to $74.3 million. Previous loans were utilized for the construction of main grid and secondary transmission lines and two thermal power stations at Quetta and Lyallpur. Additionally, USA has furnished large amounts in rupees, obtained through the sale of agricultural products for local currency, for projects of the power wing of the Water and Power Development Authority.

Part of an overall $27.9 million project, the loan will provide dollar financing for imported equipments and foreign engineering services. The loan is repayable in 40 years, including a 10-year grace period, during which the Government of Pakistan will pay interest of ¾ of one per cent per annum and 2 per cent per annum on the remaining unpaid balance.

F. New President Of "Azad Kashmir": Mr. Abdul Hamid Khan, who was sworn-in at Muzaffarabad on August 7 as the new "President" of Pakistan-occupied Kashmir, said that the independent Kashmir demand "is foreign-inspired and absolutely averse to the interests of Kashmiris".

He succeeded Mr. K. H. Khurshid whose resignation for "personal reasons" was announced two days earlier.

Talking to newsmen, Mr. Khan said that those who talked of Kashmir's independence were "either misled or did so for their own ends".

He said he would continue to function as the "chief justice" of Pakistan-occupied Kashmir.

According to observers, the practice of the same person holding the two offices was against the Constitution of "Azad Kashmir". They said the Constitution provided that whenever a vacancy occurred for the office of "President", elections should be held within eight weeks. But in view of the Pakistan Foreign Minister, Mr. Bhutto's philosophy of a "single united leadership for both sides of Kashmir" observers feel that either the elections would not be held or the Constitution would be amended.

Comment:

Mr. K. H. Khurshid's "ouster" from office of the President of "Azad Kashmir" followed differences between him and Pakistan's Kashmir Affairs Ministry, according to Karachi's independent political weekly The Outlook.

A contribution in the journal's Independence Day issue said the induction of a new President in the territory meant a "goodbye to whatever little political trappings there were."

It said: "The relationship between the Pakistan Government had long been ambiguous and subject to a pull in opposite directions. The contradiction has now been augmented.

"At a time when Pakistan is increasingly relying on obviously political roles of Sheikh Abdullah and Maulvi Farooq in the Kashmir Valley, it is assiduously building up a non-political structure in 'Azad Kashmir' itself.

"The uncomfortable truth is that the Ministry of Kashmir Affairs has acquired a vested interest of its own. It treats 'Azad Kashmir' territory and Gilgit-Baltistan areas as its own domain which a Joint Secretary controls as 'chief adviser' and 'resident' respectively. His overlordship runs supreme and without such checks and balances as are applicable to other areas of Pakistan.

"The possibility of friction between the 'Azad Kashmir' Government and the Ministry has always been there. The Ministry likes to deal with puppets, not with Presidents who take their position too literally.

"Mr. Khurshid had his defects. He liked power and used all means to safeguard his position. He had his supporters and his enemies.

"He knew how to pull the ropes—to a point. But he also had a few points in his favour. He was a young man whose thinking was political, not bureaucratic. He was not a corrupt man. He had a mind of his own capable of independent, intelligent judgment.

"It had to happen, therefore, that he was looking for more room for the 'Azad Kashmir' Government vis-a-vis the Ministry of Kashmir Affairs. He was striving for more financial and administrative control. At one time he campaigned for recognition of the Azad Kashmir Government as an entirely independent Government.

"His disagreement with the Ministry had been maturing for a long time. The final break came last week.

"The Azad Kashmir Government is partly staffed with officers loaned by Pakistan. The Secretary-General and the Inspector-General of Police are the two key officers who have been lent by Pakistan.

"This gives rise to duality of control. They tend to act independently and under the direct orders of the Ministry. This tends to breed conflict.

"It is possible that Mr. Khurshid was seeking to abolish this duality which extends even to food supplies and sanction of development schemes."

There were other manifestations of this duality. "Azad Kashmir battallions are directly supervised by the Pakistan army. In the recent strike of Government servants Mr. Khurshid negotiated a settlement with the union, but the Ministry announced a flat increase of 10 per cent over the head of the President. The employees remained dissatisfied and in the bargain the President's anomalous position was exposed."

"It is quite on the cards that Mr. Khurshid was trying to mend this state of affairs. He paid for it with his own downfall. The main contradiction arises because of Pakistan's anxiety to keep certain forms without actualities.

"Office of the 'Azad Kashmir' President sounds high. A better thing would be to abolish it and evolve a structure more in conformity with actuality.

"There may be another dimension to this conflict. When the new President (Mr. Abdul Hamid Khan) took office he denounced those supporting an independent Kashmir.

"Some of the ire seemed to be directed towards the outgoing President who was reported to have established a rapport with Sheikh Abdullah during the latter's visit here. It is difficult to dig into this matter.

"What is obvious is that the Ministry of Kashmir Affairs is characteristically muddle-headed on this point too. It is a political problem; it needs political action and political thinking.

"And in any solution, if it comes, only Sheikh Abdullah can play a crucial part. There is no getting away from these facts. They might as well learn to live with these facts."

The journal said "that it was unlikely" that Mr. Khurshid would be associated any more with the policies of the so-called "Azad Kashmir." The edifice of his "Kashmir Liberation League" had already melted away without the props of power.

of Rs. 1,150,000, including a foreign exchange component of Rs. 230,000.

The scheme has been approved by the Executive Committee of the National Economic Council.

The proposed factory will manufacture bulky equipment required for telephone installations in East Pakistan.

Another project approved by the Executive Committee of the National Economic Council provides for expansion and modernization of telegraph services in East and West Pakistan at a total estimated cost of Rs. 4,656,000 with a foreign exchange component of Rs. 1,419,000.

Meanwhile, work on the project for strengthening and streamlining telecommunication system in the southern district of East Pakistan, frequented by cyclones and tidal bores, is under way. The 27 thanas in these districts will be linked with six base stations by means of very high frequency radio completed during 1964-65.

Another project in progress is the expansion and extension of radio relay system in East Pakistan. This multi-purpose project provides for replacement of the existing narrow band V.H.F. 60-channel system on Chittagong-Dacca-Khulna and Dacca-Kushtia routes by a wide-band V.H.F.

It also provides expansion of channel capacity of the existing system on Dacca-Sylhet and Dacca-Rangpur sections and extension of existing V.H.F. radio relay system to seven new routes.

TURKEY

A. Electricity Expansion Programme—IDA Credit: The International Development Association (IDA), an affiliate of the World Bank, agreed in the middle of July to grant a credit of $24,000,000 to help finance the expansion programme being carried out by the Cukurova Electric Company, 56 per cent of whose stock is privately held. The remainder is owned by Etibank.

A credit of $1.7 million was granted to the company by IDA early in 1963 to enable it to begin the big expansion programme which will quadruple its generating capacity and increase the supply of power to the Cukurova plain in southern Turkey where nearly a third of the country's cotton crop is grown and processed. The total cost of the project is estimated at the equivalent of $43.5 million, of which the IDA credit will cover all foreign exchange requirements. To meet the remaining costs the Company will increase its share capital threefold and apply all available earnings to the project, the Turkish Government having agreed to defer certain interest and customs duty payments.

The IDA credit is for a term of 50 years, repayment to begin on August 1, 1974 at the rate of 1 per cent of the principal annually for 10 years and 3 per cent annually for the final 30 years. A service charge of ¾ of 1 per cent per annum will be made to meet IDA's administrative costs. The Turkish Government will re-lend the proceeds of the credit to the Company for a term of 25 years, including a 5-year period of grace, with interest at 5½ per cent.

The projects in the programme include the construction of two new generating plants—a 50,000 kw steam plant near Mersin on the Mediterranean adjacent to the oil refinery completed in 1962 which will supply its fuel and a 100,000 kw hydro-electric plant on the Kadincik River, south-west of Adanac. Some 160 miles of transmission lines will be constructed linking the new stations to the existing system and extending it as far east as Iskenderun. The Mersin plant should be completed by July, 1966 and the Kadincik plant by 1969.

B. Oil Discovery: The American oil company, Mobil Exploration, announced on July 24 that it had struck oil in the Siirt region of south-east Turkey.

It said that a preliminary rate of flow of more than 5,000 barrels a day of 34.8 gravity oil had been determined over a short duration. The well's capacity to sustain this high rate of flow would not be known until there was testing over a longer period. It said that the rate of flow was more than double that of any well drilled by Mobil in Turkey, and was believed to be the highest yet discovered in Turkey by any oil company.

Further drilling would be required to determine the extent of the oilfield. The oil is of good quality, with a sulphur content of 1.12 per cent.

Oil prospecting started in Turkey in 1955 with 12 companies in the field. Most of these pulled out within a few years after a number of dry holes, leaving Mobil and Shell as the only major companies in Turkey.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference: The Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference opened at Marlborough House, London, on July 8.

The Prime Ministers began discussions on the world political situation following a wide-ranging review by their Chairman, Sir Alec Douglas-Home, the British Prime Minister.

The following communique was issued after the first session:

"The meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers opened at Marlborough House this morning.

"Britain, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Pakistan, Ceylon, Ghana, Malaysia, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, the United Republic of Tanganyika and Zanzibar, Trinidad, Uganda, and Kenya were represented by their heads of Government. The heads of Government of India, Cyprus and Jamaica were represented by senior Ministers.

"The British Prime Minister welcomed his colleagues and extended a special greeting to the Prime Ministers of Uganda and Kenya, whose countries had attained independence since the last Commonwealth meeting in 1962. He also welcomed Mr. Lester Pearson for the first time as Prime Minister of Canada, and Mr. Albert Margai as Prime Minister of Sierra Leone. Sir Alec Douglas-Home expressed the Commonwealth's sense of grievous loss at the deaths of Mr. Nehru and Sir Milton Margai.

"The Prime Ministers of Canada and Kenya, replying on behalf of the meeting, associated themselves and their colleagues with this tribute and thanked the Chairman for his welcome. As their first act, the meeting sent a message of greetings to Her Majesty the Queen as the Head of the Commonwealth.

"The Prime Ministers then approved the administrative arrangements for the meeting and agreed that their agenda should include a review of the world political situation; the progress of British territories towards independence and membership of the Commonwealth; means of promoting closer co-operation between peoples of the Commonwealth; and world economic affairs.

"The Prime Ministers welcomed Malawi as a member of the Commonwealth following her attainment of independence on July 6, and extended an invitation to Dr. H. Banda to join the meeting on his arrival tomorrow.

"They also noted that Northern Rhodesia would attain independence as the Republic of Zambia on October 24, and looked forward to welcoming Zambia in due course as a member of the Commonwealth."

The Conference opened on a note of mourning. In his inaugural speech Sir Alec Douglas-Home made a moving reference to the late Indian Premier, Mr. Nehru. He spoke of Mr. Nehru as the "maker of the Commonwealth" and of how they all and the world missed him.

The Canadian Prime Minister, Mr. Lester Pearson, spoke of Mr. Nehru's great contribution to the Commonwealth and world peace.

Mr. Jomo Kenyatta, Prime Minister of Kenya, paid tribute to Mr. Nehru, the "man who had inspired Africans and all subject peoples".

Apart from Britain, 17 Commonwealth countries took part in the Conference.

The countries and those who represented them were:

Australia—Sir Robert Menzies;

Tanganyika—President J. Nyerere;

Canada—Mr. Lester Pearson;

Malawi—Mr. Hastings Banda;

New Zealand—Mr. K. J. Holyoake;

Cyprus—Mr. S. Kyprianou;

Uganda—Dr. Milton Obote;

Trinidad and Tobago—Dr. Eric Williams;

Ghana—Dr. K. Nkrumah;

Kenya—Mr. Jomo Kenyatta;

Ceylon—Mrs. S. Bandaranaike;

Jamaica—Mr. D. B. Sangster;

Nigeria—Sir Abubakar Tafawa Balewa;

Pakistan—President Ayub Khan;

India—Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari and Mrs. Indira Gandhi;

Sierra Leone—Mr. Albert Margai;

Malaysia—Tengku Abdul Rehman; and

UK—Sir Alec Douglas-Home.

A London despatch said that the Chinese attack on India and the resulting situation was passed over in silence by most of the speakers, with the exception of President Ayub Khan of Pakistan, who if anything, tried to explain away Chinese aggression.

Dr. Nkrumah of Ghana made what was regarded as on the whole a moderate speech. He maintained that the threat of communism, of which so much was being heard at the Conference, was not as important as the problem of the haves and the have-nots. China herself was a great have-not nation, and some effort must be made to understand her problems and views. As for the underdeveloped countries, the big threat to them was the cold war, and not the expansionist ideology of this or that country.

President Ayub Khan, in his speech, covered the whole range of world affairs as seen through Pakistani eyes and spoke of recent important developments affecting peace and normal relations in Asia.

He warned the Conference that the smaller nations of Asia may turn to China for protection if the West went on building up India's military power. He said

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

India was being over-armed by the Americans, British and other allied countries on the assumption that China might attempt to invade the sub-continent. "That assumption is wrong. No major invasion of India can possibly take place. This is a bogey that has to be removed because it creates fear and insecurity."

He said that "the smaller nations of Asia"—he did not indicate which or whether Pakistan was among them—might turn to Peking.

Playing down the Chinese threat of aggression on Asia, he said the Indo-Pakistan sub-continent faced a greater danger from Central Asia—that was Russia—than China, because of the high barriers of Himalayas.

Asking for an urgent solution to the Kashmir problem, he emphasized that Pakistan wanted Kashmir because the source of all her western rivers was in that State and unless his country controlled the source it would feel insecure.

Views On Chinese Expansionism:

The Commonwealth Prime Ministers and Presidents, reviewing the world situation on the second day of the Conference, were divided over their assessment of the danger from Chinese expansionism to South-East Asia.

None of the 11 Prime Ministers and Presidents who spoke on the world situation on July 8 and 9 mentioned Chinese aggression against India.

Sir Alec Douglas-Home, Sir Robert Menzies and Mr. Keith Holyoake, who stressed the danger China posed to South-East Asia did not refer to the Chinese invasion of India, although they held the view that Chinese expansionism worked behind Indonesian "confrontation" of Malaysia.

A London despatch said that this omission would seem curious since the Commonwealth Conference was meeting for the first time since the Sino-Indian border conflict and by any standards the outbreak of hostilities between China and India was a development of immense importance for Asia if not for the world.

Mr. J. Nyerere's Memorandum On Southern Rhodesia:

President Julius Nyerere of the Tanganyika-Zanzibar Republic, in a memorandum presented to the Conference on July 10, urged joint Commonwealth military intervention in the white-dominated Colony of Southern Rhodesia with nearly 4,000,000 Africans and about 200,000 Europeans, if the present minority Government carried out its threat to declare independence in defiance of Britain.

The three East African heads of Government—President Nyerere, Mr. Jomo Kenyatta and Dr. Milton Obote joined in pressing for such intervention.

Southern Rhodesia's Minister without Portfolio, Mr. Clifford Dupont, declared: "The Southern Rhodesian Government will not feel bound in any way to take notice of any Conference decisions on the future of the country".

President Nyerere warned "there is a grave danger that the Commonwealth could break up on this (the Southern Rhodesian) issue."

In his memorandum he told his Commonwealth colleagues that if they failed to take joint positive action, the Tanganyika-Zanzibar Republic might be compelled to recognize and give military support to a Southern Rhodesian Government-in-exile.

His three-point plan for action, if the present Southern Rhodesian Government declared its independence unilaterally was:

(1) A refusal by all Commonwealth countries to grant recognition and a British use of the veto in the Security Council to prevent admission to United Nations.

(2) Full economic and financial pressures must be operated by every member against Southern Rhodesia.

(3) Joint military intervention with troops from member-countries under British command.

Mr. Jomo Kenyatta, of Kenya, in a strongly-worded speech warned the delegates: "The Southern Rhodesian situation is urgent and explosive...and might well determine the course of the Commonwealth."

He said Britain was in dilemma over Southern Rhodesia, but it was her moral obligation to find a solution.

Mr. Milton Obote urged Britain to call forthwith a constitutional conference for Southern Rhodesia with the participation of all the political groups in the Colony.

He said the Southern Rhodesian present Constitution should be suspended immediately if the "settlers' government" refused to attend the Conference.

An assertion by the Commonwealth Relations Secretary, Mr. Duncan Sandys, that Southern Rhodesia had enjoyed maximum autonomy for 30 years and, therefore, besides refusing to recognize unilateral independence of the country there was nothing that Britain could do, was challenged by several African Premiers.

Leaders from Africa declared that well-intentioned words were not enough. "Positive action" by Britain was called for because it could not escape responsibility to enforce in Southern Rhodesia the elementary principle of racial equality and majority rule.

African spokesmen, notably Mr. Kenyatta and Dr. Nkrumah, chided Britain for treating South Africa as a Commonwealth member and for being "soft" on Portuguese colonialism.

A Commonwealth Secretariat:

Placed before the Conference on July 13 for their consideration was a paper drawn up by officials of all Commonwealth territories on the proposal for the establishment of a Commonwealth Secretariat which was projected the previous week and found general support.

The paper indicated ways in which the idea might be processed if the Prime Ministers accepted the principle.

The question of aid was brought up by Sir Alec, who put before the meeting proposals for what he had already described as "Commonwealth projects"—that is, ways in which several Commonwealth countries can co-operate in providing finance and experts for joint technical assistance schemes in individual developing countries.

He put forward seven British proposals covering a wide field in technical assistance, and declared that Britain was ready to increase its aid in the educational field to £25,000,000 over the next five years.

He spoke about the dramatic changes in the structure of the Commonwealth since the last Prime Ministers' meeting in 1962, and emphasized that its strongest asset was the different outlooks that existed within it. He talked about the need to take action to strengthen the Commonwealth, and referred to the following initiatives which had already been circulated to the Prime Ministers before the meeting:

(1) The launching of Commonwealth projects in which Commonwealth countries would pool funds and experts for individual development schemes. The idea was that the sponsor of a project should co-ordinate the contributions in money and men of other Commonwealth donors. An initial survey would be needed to see where the projects could best be sited. The British Government would be prepared to make a substantial contribution towards the scheme, and Sir Alec expressed the hope that other Commonwealth Governments would join in it.

(2) Capital aid for higher education. Sir Alec said that the British Government was prepared to increase to £5,000,000 a year for the next five years its present aid in the educational field.

(3) Training in public administration. The British Government was prepared to finance the establishment of an institution for this purpose, if it was agreed to. The institution would, perhaps, be associated with one of Britain's new universities. It would be independent, have a governing body with members drawn from Commonwealth countries, and be staffed by Commonwealth experts. This distinctive new centre would provide training, study and research facilities in the very important field of public administration.

(4) The establishment of a "Commonwealth foundation". Sir Alec stressed the value of the extensive talks and exchanges that take place between professional and other non-governmental bodies in the Commonwealth. He felt that a Commonwealth foundation, an autonomous body with "a Commonwealth figure" as its chairman, would help to foster these contacts further. It would need an income of at least £250,000 a year, and the British Government was prepared to contribute half of this sum if the idea found favour.

(5) A Commonwealth Medical Conference to be held in the Autumn of 1965. The object of this would be to pinpoint the most important areas in the Commonwealth where medical help was needed, and then to stimulate interest among the Governments to provide it.

(6) More money to be made available to the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association in order to encourage more visits between Commonwealth parliamentarians.

(7) Finally, Sir Alec spoke of the possibility of increasing contacts between the youth of the Commonwealth.

All these broad ideas were unanimously welcomed by the Prime Ministers, who decided to have them studied in detail in the near future by Commonwealth officials.

Also to be examined by these officials would be two other proposals that emanated from the meeting. The first is the establishment of a Commonwealth Secretariat, and the second, put forward by Mr. Lester Pearson of Canada, is a suggestion about assisting other Commonwealth countries to make use of satellite communications.

The Communique:

The following is the text of the final communique issued on July 15 at the end of the Conference:

"The meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers ended today. Pakistan, Ghana, and Tanganyika and Zanzibar were represented by their Presidents. Britain, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Ceylon, Malaysia, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, Kenya, and Malawi were represented by their Prime Ministers. India was represented by the Minister of Finance; Cyprus by the Minister of Foreign Affairs; and Jamaica by the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance.

"This was the first meeting at which Uganda and Kenya were represented as independent members; and the other Commonwealth heads of Government were glad to greet their Prime Ministers. They expressed their satisfaction at the establishment of Malaysia which they had welcomed at their last meeting in 1962, and they greeted Tengku Abdul Rehman as Prime Minister of Malaysia. They also welcomed the attainment of independence by Malawi on July 6, 1964, and agreed that Malawi should be admitted to membership of the Commonwealth. They invited the Prime Minister of Malawi, Dr. Banda, to join their meeting; and Dr.

Banda took his seat on July 9. They noted that Northern Rhodesia would become independent on October 24, 1964, as the Republic of Zambia; and they looked forward to welcoming Zambia as a member of the Commonwealth on the completion of the necessary constitutional processes.

"In the course of their discussion, the Presidents and Prime Ministers reviewed the major issues of the day.

"They agreed that one of the most important of these is race relations. It was agreed that the Commonwealth has a particular role to play in the search for solutions to the inter-racial problems which are threatening the orderly development of mankind in general, and of many particular areas in the world today. As a community of many different races, the Commonwealth is itself an almost unique experiment in international co-operation among peoples of several races and continents. Within their own borders, many of its members have faced and are facing issues raised by the co-existence of differing cultures within a democratic society. The Prime Ministers affirmed their belief that, for all Commonwealth Governments, it should be the objective of policy to build in each country a structure of society which offers equal opportunity and non-discrimination for all its people, irrespective of race, colour or creed. The Commonwealth should be able to exercise constructive leadership in the application of democratic principles in a manner which will enable the people of each country of different racial and cultural groups to exist and develop as free and equal citizens.

"The Prime Ministers recalled the critical international situation which had developed shortly after their last meeting in the Autumn of 1962 and the grave threat to peace which it had implied. They believed that the fact that it was successfully resolved may have been in some sense a turning point in the relations between the major Powers and may have marked the beginning of a new period in international affairs in which the world may hope for a gradual relaxation of tension. This will not be a short or simple process; but the Prime Ministers noted with satisfaction the further steps which had already been taken to reduce the causes of friction, particularly the conclusion of the test ban Treaty and the subsequent agreements between the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States and the Soviet Union not to place nuclear weapons in outer space. They also welcomed the reductions in the output of fissile material for military purposes which these Governments have made.

"Against this background, the Prime Ministers expressed their hope that these steps would lead progressively to general and complete disarmament. They reaffirmed their support for the work of the Geneva Disarmament Conference and their determination to seek to extend the scope of disarmament in accordance with the principles expressed in their statement of March 17, 1961, particularly by endeavouring to promote an agreement to prohibit the further dissemination of nuclear weapons and of knowledge relating to their manufacture and use. They will maintain their efforts to reduce the areas of international disagreement by all the means within their power, while maintaining both the strength and the resolution to resist aggression from without or subversion from within. In this connexion, they assured the Prime Minister of Malaysia of their sympathy and support in his efforts to preserve the sovereign independence and integrity of his country and to promote a peaceful and honourable settlement of current differences between Malaysia and neighbouring countries. They discussed the great significance of China for South and South-East Asia. They also discussed the question of relations with China and of her membership of United Nations. They expressed anxiety about the continuing tension in South-East Asia and affirmed their support for all measures which might promote a just and peaceful settlement and help to re-establish stability in the area.

"The Prime Ministers noted with satisfaction the friendly public statements by the President of Pakistan and the Prime Minister of India and expressed their hopes that the problems between their countries will be solved in the same friendly spirit.

"While recognizing that it was not a function of the Commonwealth to act as an arbiter in disputes between member-nations, the Prime Ministers agreed that Commonwealth countries could play a role of liaison and, where possible, consider using their good offices to help towards the settlement of disputes between member-nations provided the parties concerned accepted such mediation.

"The Prime Ministers renewed their support for United Nations and its efforts to resolve disputes in various parts of the world. They re-affirmed their adherence to the principles of the Charter and emphasized the importance of re-inforcing the strength and capacity of United Nations to respond to the demands which it must meet if the Charter is to be fulfilled.

"The Prime Ministers expressed concern about the situation with regard to Cyprus. They re-affirmed their full support for the United Nations Security Council's resolutions of March 4, March 13 and June 20, 1964. The Prime Ministers asserted that the Cyprus problem should be solved within the frame-work of United Nations and in accordance with the principles of democracy and justice.

"They appealed to all countries concerned to refrain from any action which might undermine the task of the United Nations peace-keeping force, to which a number of Commonwealth countries are contributing, or might prejudice the endeavours of United Nations to find a lasting solution in conformity with the Charter of United Nations.

"The Prime Ministers undertook to consider practical measures to strengthen the peace-keeping machinery of United Nations and to reduce the degree of improvisation required in an emergency. They agreed that consultation and co-operation among interested Governments in this matter could be of great value in contributing to the improvement of the peace-keeping effectiveness of United Nations.

"The Prime Ministers expressed their concern at the possible effect on United Nations operations in all fields of a prolongation of the United Nations financial crisis. They expressed a common desire to work towards a long-term equitable solution of the problem of financing large-scale United Nations peace-keeping operations, and agreed that any such solution should be based on the principles of collective financial responsibility and relative capacity to pay.

"Britain made the following statement to the meeting about the progress of British colonial dependencies towards independence:

Already more than 20 countries (with a total population of some 700,000,000) had achieved sovereign independence under British guidance. This process was continuing all the time. Northern Rhodesia would be independent in October, and the Gambia very soon after. Basutoland had been promised that she could have independence in about 18 months' time; Bechuanaland would be free to follow when she wished; and Swaziland's new Constitution had now set her on the same course. In addition, it had been agreed that the Federation of South Arabia should become independent within the next 3½ years. British Guiana would become independent as soon as she was able to assure internal peace. Southern Rhodesia would attain full sovereignty as soon as her governmental institutions were sufficiently representative.

There were a number of other colonies which already enjoyed a wide measure of self-government. These included the Bahamas, Barbados, British Honduras, and Mauritius. In addition, there were some 20 other colonies and protectorates with a combined population of about 5,000,000. Of these, over 3,00,000 were in Hong Kong, where the circumstances were exceptional. Of the remainder, only two territories had a population of more than 100,000. Several had less than 10,000. The smallest (Pitcairn) in the Pacific had only 96 inhabitants. It was clear that no uniform pattern would fit all these very different territories. Some might feel strong enough to proceed to independence on their own. Some might join with others to form larger and more viable units. Some might wish to couple independence with a treaty of friendship such as Western Samoa concluded with New Zealand. Some would for the present prefer to remain as they were.

"The Prime Ministers of the other Commonwealth countries welcomed the progress of British territories to independent membership of the Commonwealth. They recognized that the authority and responsibility for leading her remaining colonies to independence must continue to rest with Britain.

"At the same time, Prime Ministers of other Commonwealth countries expressed their views to the Prime Minister of Britain on the question of the progress of Southern Rhodesia towards independence within the Commonwealth. They welcomed the decision already announced by the British Government that, as in the case of other territories, the existence of sufficiently representative institutions would be a condition of the grant of independence to Southern Rhodesia. They also noted with approval the statement already made by the British Government that they would not recognize any unilateral declaration of independence; and the other Prime Ministers made it clear that they would be unable to recognize any such declaration. The view was also expressed that an independence conference should be convened which the leaders of all parties in Southern Rhodesia should be free to attend. The object would be to seek agreement on the steps by which Southern Rhodesia might proceed to independence within the Commonwealth at the earliest practicable time on the basis of majority rule. With a view to diminishing tensions and preparing the way for such a conference, an appeal was made for the release of all the detained African leaders. The Prime Ministers called upon all leaders and their supporters to exercise moderation and to abstain from violence; and they affirmed their belief that the best interest of all sections of the population lay in developing confidence and co-operation, on the basis of tolerance, mutual understanding and justice. In this connexion, they recognized the necessity for giving confidence to the minority community in Southern Rhodesia that their interests would be protected.

"The Prime Minister of Britain said that he would give careful consideration to all the views expressed by other Commonwealth Prime Ministers. At the same time, he emphasized that the Government of Southern Rhodesia was constitutionally responsible for the internal affairs of that territory, and that the question of the granting of independence was a matter for decision by the British Parliament.

"The meeting expressed concern at the political rivalries in British Guiana which had led to disorder and inter-racial strife and had prejudiced the attainment of independence. While several different views were expressed on the methods to be employed, a number of Prime Ministers expressed the hope that the political leaders of British Guiana would seek urgently a basis for collaboration in the interests of their fellow-countrymen of all races in order to restore mutual confidence among the races and to strengthen a spirit of national purpose and unity. Only in these circumstances could British Guiana hope to sustain true independence.

"The question of the progress of the smaller dependent territories in the Caribbean to independence was raised. It was emphasized that the problem for the territories was mainly one of viability; and the hope was expressed that every practicable effort would be made to help them to strengthen their economies and so enable them to sustain the obligations of independence, whether in a federation or in some other form of association.

"The Prime Ministers re-affirmed their condemnation of the policy of apartheid practised by the Government of the Republic of South Africa. Some Commonwealth Prime Ministers felt very strongly that the only effective means of dealing with the problem of apartheid was the application of economic sanctions and an arms embargo. It was recognized however, that there was a difference of opinion among Commonwealth countries as to the effectiveness of economic sanctions and as to the extent to which they regarded it as right or practicable to seek to secure the abandonment of apartheid by coercive action, of whatever kind. But the Prime Ministers were unanimous in calling upon South Africa to bring to an end the practice of apartheid, which had been repeatedly condemned by United Nations and was deplored by public opinion throughout the world.

"The Prime Ministers expressed their regret that Portugal had not so far given recognition to the principle of self-determination for her territories in Africa.

"The Prime Ministers agreed that the issues of Commonwealth and international relations which confront them in the political field, however complex and contentious, must be seen in perspective in relation to the many factors which bring together the peoples of the Commonwealth and enable them to make a unique contribution to the promotion of peaceful development. The Commonwealth now consists of 18 independent member-countries, widely distributed over the globe and accounting for nearly a quarter of the population of the world. It is, indeed, a cross-section of the world itself; and its citizens have an unparalleled opportunity to prove that, by mutual co-operation, men and women of many different races and national cultures can live in peace and work together for the common good.

"The Prime Ministers reviewed the world economic situation as it affects their countries, and re-affirmed the resolve of their Governments to promote the economic development of their countries. To this end they emphasized the need of developing countries for improved and more remunerative outlets for their trade and for increased financial aid on easier terms and on a continuing basis. They took note of the problems presented to developing countries by the conditions and terms often attached by donor Governments to their aid, of the desirability of the encouragement of private investment in developing countries, and also of the upward trend in the level of financial aid extended by the more developed countries in the Commonwealth and of the easier terms on which it is offered.

"There was agreement on the importance for all Commonwealth countries of following up the work of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development; in particular with regard to expanding international trade in primary products through freer access to markets and, in appropriate cases, through commodity agreements and stabilized prices at equitable levels; working out arrangements for increasing access by preferences or otherwise to markets in developed countries for manufactured goods from developing countries; and elaborating proposals for supplementary finance to assist countries whose development might be threatened by adverse movements in their export earnings. The Prime Ministers affirmed their intention of working for a solution of these and other problems of the developing countries through the new institutions resulting from the Conference as well as through existing international bodies such as the GATT.

"The Prime Ministers re-affirmed the resolve of the member-countries of the Commonwealth to promote the economic and social progress of developing countries. They wished to maintain their support of the work of United Nations, its specialized agencies, the Colombo Plan, and other similar arrangements in this field. At the same time, they wished to establish how best the members of the Commonwealth could make a further distinctive contribution of their own to the development of its member-countries. They conceived that the purpose of any new initiative in this respect should be not merely to increase the economic strength and material well-being of the recipients, vital though these considerations are, but also to strengthen the links between the countries of the Commonwealth by encouraging their peoples to work more closely together in a variety of practical ways. For this purpose they selected for further examination several fields of action in which they believed the practice of Commonwealth co-operation might be extended; and they agreed that these schemes should not be in substitution for existing arrangements but supplementary to them.

"In particular, they considered a proposal that development projects might be launched in individual Commonwealth countries, which would be implemented by various members acting in close collaboration and contributing whatever resources—in men, money, materials and technical expertise—they could most appropriately provide. Such projects, which would be additional to the support which Commonwealth countries already provide to the United Nations Special Fund and Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance, could be directed to a number of different purposes—the improvement of agricultural production and the development of natural resources through extension services, training and research; the enlargement of professional and technical training; the development of new industries; and so forth. But they would all be inspired by the common purpose of promoting the development of the Commonwealth by a co-ordinated programme of joint or bilateral projects. The British Government said that they would be prepared to make a substantial contribution to projects of this kind within their expanding programme of development aid. The other member-Governments expressed support for the objective of the proposal and agreed that further consideration should be given to the basis on which such a programme might be established.

"Development projects of this kind would need to be planned, carefully and thoroughly, at all stages in their execution; and the Prime Ministers therefore considered that it might be valuable to supplement the existing arrangements for promoting the study of the techniques of administration and development planning throughout the Commonwealth. They considered that there might be advantage in making arrangements, which could include the formation of a new institute, to provide facilities for specialized training and research for senior administrators concerned with administrative and development problems in relation to the needs of new countries. They agreed that further consideration should be given to the most appropriate form for arrangements for additional training, including the strengthening of existing institutions.

"The Prime Ministers took note of the scope which exists or co-operation between the Governments and peoples of the Commonwealth in social as well as economic development. They noted with satisfaction that the third Commonwealth Education Conference will be held in Ottawa in August; and they expressed warm wishes for its success, together with appreciation for the British Government's offer to increase to an average of £5,000,000 a year, over the five years starting in 1965-66, the capital assistance which they already provide for higher education in developing Commonwealth countries, both independent and dependent.

"They decided in principle that an initiative similar to that which was launched in the field of education by the first of the Commonwealth Education Conferences several years ago should now be taken in the field of medicine, and that for this purpose consideration should be given to the convening of a Commonwealth Medical Conference during the course of 1965. Such a conference would enable the members of the Commonwealth to discuss mutual assistance in medical education, including links between institutions, the provision of ancillary staffs, the development and planning of health services, and the supply of medical equipment and facilities for research.

"The links between the countries of the Commonwealth are strengthened not only by co-operation between their Governments in initiatives of this kind, but even more by frequent personal contacts between individuals who share common professional interests.

"The Prime Ministers recorded their support for the valuable work which the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association performs in bringing together members of the Parliaments of all Commonwealth countries. The British Government stated that they would be prepared, if other Commonwealth Governments would do the same, to increase their contribution to the Association.

"The Prime Ministers considered that further steps should be taken to promote contacts in other fields, and that it might be desirable to establish a Commonwealth Foundation to administer a fund for increasing interchanges between Commonwealth organizations in professional fields. This Foundation could be administered by an independent board; and while it could be financed by contributions from Commonwealth Governments, it would also welcome support from all quarters, whether public or private.

"The Prime Ministers also took note of the current international discussions on the establishment of a global system of satellite communications. They endorsed the desirability of establishing such a system, and considered how Commonwealth countries could best co-operate with each other and with other countries in its development. They discussed the provision of technical assistance to the developing countries in this field, particularly as regards the establishment of ground stations and inter-connexions in Commonwealth countries. They agreed that further consideration should be given to the feasibility of such a plan and the basis on which it might best be implemented.

"The Prime Ministers directed that the Commonwealth liaison committee, with the assistance of special representatives, should now give more detailed consideration to all aspects of these new initiatives in the hope that they could be launched and carried forward at an early date. They noted that thereafter further opportunities to review many of these projects would be afforded by the third Commonwealth Education Conference in Ottawa in August and by the Commonwealth Economic Consultative Council meeting in Kuala Lumpur in September.

"Finally, they were anxious that some permanent expression should be given to the desire, which had been evident through their deliberations, for closer and more informed understanding between their Governments on the many issues which engage their attention and for some continuing machinery for this purpose. They, therefore, instructed officials to consider the best basis for establishing a Commonwealth Secretariat, which would be available inter alia to disseminate factual information to all member-countries on matters of common concern; to assist existing agencies, both official and unofficial, in the promotion of Commonwealth links in all fields; and to help to co-ordinate, in co-operation with the host country, the preparations for future meetings of Commonwealth heads of Government and, where appropriate, for meetings of other Commonwealth Ministers. This Secretariat, being recruited from member-countries and financed by their contributions, would be at the service of all Commonwealth Governments and would be a visible symbol of the spirit of co-operation which animates the Commonwealth."

Inclusion Of Kashmir In Communique—Pakistan's Bid:

A London despatch said that a piece of "smart tactics" by Pakistan at the Conference on July 15 had caused unexpected confusion, acrimony and misunderstanding in Conference circles as well as among the public at large.

The incident was precipitated by a last-minute Pakistani effort to bring Indo-Pakistan differences, and, in particular the Kashmir issue, within the context of the Conference, its discussions and its final communique.

As a result, the Conference communique contained a passage reading as follows: "The Prime Ministers note with satisfaction the public statements by the Prime Minister of India and the President of Pakistan and expressed their hope that the problems between the two countries will be solved in the same friendly spirit".

While this news was received with surprise and indignation among Indians in London, the Pakistan spokesman and the spokesman of the Commonwealth Relations Office were believed to have circulated an account of the proceedings which was even more astonishing.

The Pakistan spokesman told journalists that there was a "discussion on Kashmir in the course of which most of the Prime Minister supported the Pakistani stand."

The Commonwealth Relations Office spokesman, for his part, was reported to have announced that "Kashmir and Malaysia" were the two items discussed and disposed of in the morning when the Prime Ministers were considering the text of the communique.

But according to Indian sources, Kashmir was never discussed at the Conference, either on July 15 or at any previous session. All that happened in this respect was that three or four Prime Ministers made a passing reference to it in the course of their general speeches in the opening debate and added their good wishes for the restoration of friendly relations between India and Pakistan.

The Pakistan Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A Bhutto, tried to raise the matter when the officials were discussing the draft communique on July 14, but he met no encouragement, and it was assumed that he would not proceed further with it.

However, when the Conference was considering the passages in the draft communique relating to the easing of international tensions President Ayub Khan suddenly, and without notice, produced a draft of his own and handed it round to the delegates.

This draft would have committed the Prime Ministers to the statement that they had "noted with concern" the problems such as Kashmir, which divided India and Pakistan and hoped that they would be resolved. Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari, India's Finance Minister, immediately protested that this draft violated the convention, which forbade any reference to inter-Commonwealth disputes at such gatherings and asked the Chairman, Sir Alec Douglas-Home, to say frankly whether this convention was going to be thrown overboard. Sir Alec insisted that the convention was valid and must continue to be respected, and he was supported in this by the other Prime Ministers, none of whom was prepared to back the Pakistani draft.

President Ayub Khan thereupon argued that some of the Prime Ministers had voiced their feelings in the matter and their good wishes to India and Pakistan, and demanded that since such statements had been made there should be some mention of it in the communique which recorded the outcome of the proceedings.

There was a lengthy and rather confused debate on this point, with some countries—notably Australia, New Zealand and Sierra Leone—maintaining that there was "no harm" in saying "we have expressed our good wishes".

The final formulation was a variant of an alternative put forward by Mr. Ayub Khan himself. It left out reference to Kashmir, and said the Conference "welcomed the friendly exchanges between India and Pakistan and hoped they would lead to a friendly settlement of their differences."

Mr. Krishnamachari throughout took the line not only that there could be no mention of Kashmir, but that it would be improper to refer to Indo-Pakistan differences or disputes in the communique, and that if the Conference were to insist on it, it would do serious damage to the Commonwealth.

The utmost that he could let pass, he said, was the draft containing the reference of the public statements by the Prime Minister and the President respectively, together with an expression of hope that the problems between the two countries would be solved in the same friendly spirit.

Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari's News Conference:

At a news conference in London on July 16, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari pointed out that the reference to "Indo-Pakistan problems" in the final communique of the Conference had no significance whatever. Nor did it mean a departure from India's past policy and practices.

He emphasized that the Conference had neither discussed Kashmir or other Indo-Pakistan problems nor pronounced any opinion on them; the communique had merely taken note of public statements by President Ayub Khan—made outside the Conference—and Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri "who is not even here". If the Commonwealth countries wished to welcome something which had not happened in the Conference, India could not object.

India, he added, had by no means been "tricked into" accepting anything she did not like, nor had she "given away" anything.

He said that the paragraph relating to India and Pakistan was followed immediately by another declaring that it was not the function of the Commonwealth to act as an "arbiter" in disputes between member-nations, and that the Commonwealth would offer its good offices for mediation only when the parties to the dispute accepted such mediation.

On the absence of any reference to the Chinese menace in the communique—a subject which came to the fore during the discussions and was acknowledged the previous night by Sir Alec Douglas-Home at his news conference—Mr. Krishnamachari said he had delbierately not made such a reference. "More than a whole paragraph of sympathy and support to India (in the communique), I would rather have the support in kind. A few thousand guns would be more welcome."

Mrs. Indira Gandhi's View:

Mrs. Indira Gandhi told a news conference in London on July 20 that Western pressure on India for the settlement of the Kashmir dispute with Pakistan had been "increasing steadily" in the past, and it was possible that the attempt to include Kashmir in the communique was encouraged by that pressure.

But she emphatically added that what had actually been incorporated in the communique was nothing objectionable because it merely took note of the friendly statements made by Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri and President Ayub Khan in public.

She told a questioner that the Western pressure on Kashmir began to increase after the Chinese aggression. She thought it strange that Pakistan should have come to an agreement with China and given away a large chunk of Kashmir territory. She hoped that the people concerned realized that India could not defend Ladakh if she was to lose control of the Kashmir Valley.

In reply to further questions, she outlined Indian policy on Indo-Pakistan relations. "My father," she said, "was very anxious that there should be a rapprochement between India and Pakistan without there being a change in India's basic policies". That continued to be the Government's stand.
